TO RENT THE CHURCH.

PLYMOUTH BRETHREN COME TO THE RESCUE.

First Church of Christ Arrange to Secure an Income for Their Creditors, and Will Meet in Reform Hall.

After considering pro and con the question of liquidating the debt on their church, the members of the First Church of Christ have at last been able to decide upon a feasible plan which no doubt will meet with the approval of all friends of the church. They have made arrangements with the Brethren, who meet over the Dime Savings Bank, to rent the church for one year at a rental of $25 a month, with the understanding that the building will be returned in as good condition as when taken. This is done for the purpose of justifying the congregation in the eyes of their creditors.

Elder Hand, in speaking of the affair, told a reporter that they as Christian people could not be in debt and prosper, and this method is adopted as a means to pay off the debt. In this way they expect to save the building.

Through the kindness of the Brethren they will meet in the church tomorrow, for the last time till the church is returned to them. An arrangement will probably be made to meet in Reform Hall.

"The Messiah."

The Choral Society have been studying with a great deal of earnestness this greatest of oratorios since early in October, and Mr Fitzhugh, the indefatigable conductor of the society, expresses gratification at the supeplor work which the chorus is now doing, giving promise that the performance will surpass any previous one. The Music Committee (Rev. Dr. Richards, Daniel E. Davis and David E. Titsworth), have engaged as the soloists for the concert the following: Madame Zipporah Monteith, soprano. Miss Gertrude Stein, contralto. D. G. Henderson, tenor, and Conrad Behrens, bass. Three of these are well-known as among the best of oratorio soloists; the only new one in the field, perhaps, is the tenor Mr. Henderson; but it is enough to say of him that he, with Conrad Behrens, has been engaged by Mr. Damrosch to sing in "The Messiah" to be given by the New York Oratorio Society at Carnegie Music Hall, Friday and Saturday evenings, immediately following the concert by the Plainfield Society. The committee announces that the books for subscriptions are anout to be closed, and that reserved seats for the entire course can be selected at the box office of Music Hall on Saturday evening, December 15, at 7:30. Friends of the society whose names are not already on the list for this season should send them at once to George T. Rogers, Treasurer, 99 Rockview avenue, or to R. J. Shaw, 105 East Front street.

LET THE EAGLE SCREAM.

The Standard Got in Its Fine Work.

[From the Unpublished Copy Hook of the Westfield Standard.]

The Republicans may have carried the earth. But Westfield Prohibitionists are in it with both feet!!

Twelve year ago Westfield cast 732 Prohibition votes!

In 1892 she cast twelve (12)!!

Yesterday she cast (3)!

Heaven bless the good cause. The Standard will never call a halt!!!

A Novel Attraction at the Commercial Palace.

On Tuesday next occurs the annual Christmas and holiday opening at Edsall's.

Besides the usual attractions pertinent to the occasion a very unique and novel attraction will be added. Mr. Edsall has made arrangements with the renowned Armour & Company of Chicago, "Highland Evaporated Cream" and Bass & Sons Crackers, for a free exhibition of their world-famed goods, affording a dainty lunch free to all who visit this popular house during the week commencing Tuesday next at 10. For further particulars see advertisement in Monday's Press.

A Household Treasure.

D. W. Fuller, of Canajoharie, N. Y., says that he always keeps Dr. King's New Discovery in the house and his family has always found the very best results follow its use; that he would not be without it, if procurable. G. A. Dykeman Druggist, Catskill, N. Y., says that Dr. King's New Discovery is undoubtedly the best Cough remedy; that he has used it in his family for eight years, and it has never failed to do all that is claimed for it. Why not try a remedy so long tried and tested. At L. W. Randolp's Drug Store. Regular size 50c. and $1.00. Our price 45c. and 90c.

Don't!

Don't ever sign a paper that you have not read, nor drink water you have not examined; neither should you forget that all goods purchased of or repaired at Collier's, have a guarantee of twenty-five years of continuous experience.

M'DONALD WITHDRAWS.

Will Not Stand Against Assessor Hubbard.

THANKS FOR THE NOMINATION.

He Construes the New Law to Mean That Mr. Hubbard Stays in Office Two Years Longer, and Election Is Therefore Needless.

To the Voters of the City of Plainfield:

As we have a new law before us on which there are several opinions, I decided to have an official opinion regarding it before election, and to save any contest, so I applied to the Corporation Counsel, Wednesday, for a decision on the act No CCLXX, passed May 17, 1894, which reads as follows:

CHAPTER CCLXX.

An Act concerning the tenure of office of city assessor in cities of the third class.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That the term or office of the city assessor or other officer charged with the assessment of taxes in any city of the third class shall be three years.

2. And be it enacted, That all acts and parts of acts, either general or special, inconsistent with the provisions of this act be and the same are hereby repealed.

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved May 17, 1894.

After carefully looking up the law bearing on this subject, he gave me tonight his opinion, which I now have the pleasure of giving you "That the act applies to those now holding office". And I most cheerfully withdraw from the contest, and congratulate you that J. A. Hubbard will be our assessor for the next two years at least. Thanking the friends who gave me the nomination in good faith

I am yours respectfully,

J. F. MACDONALD

MONTE THE GREAT.

He Will Visit Plainfield Next Week with Manager Teel, and Exhibit His Prizes.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—His Plainfield admirers will be glad to hear from "Monte the Great", the Class A lamb, in his first appearance among the Class B wolves, as they have termed him at the Garden, where he is accredited with having made a remarkably fine showing from the fact of his having won at least one prize at every session of the meet, and last night two, so that up to this writing we have won five prizes valued at over $200, all of which will be exhibited in Plainfield next week.

Tell the girls to be on the lookout for them, also for the winner, as he will return to Plainfield with me for a short visit, and to decide in regard to attending the three-days meet at Philadelphia week after next, as they are very anxious to have him appear there at that time. We are both well, and hope to hold out to finish the balance of the races, although Scott has contracted a severe cold, together with the extremely hard work, which is telling on him quite severely.

We are very much encouraged by the attendance and encouragement from so many of our Plainfield friends, who almost invariably make their presence known.

C. E. TEEL

Picked Up at the Fair.

The Fair did a good business last evening. All the booths were very busy attending to the wants of their patrons.

Mrs. William L. Saunders, Miss Underwood and William Runyon were again given most hearty reception at the drills, and Mr. Runyon was obliged to give an encore.

A clergyman who witnessed the performance in the Assembly Hall last evening, remarked that "as drills they were a failure, but as dances they were beautiful and a great success".

Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Biglow, Jr., formerly residents of Washington Park, gave their friends a pleasant surprise last evening by coming from New York to attend the Fair. They were cordially received.

Frank Hedden is very kindly devoting his evenings to efficient management of the coaches at the Fair.

This evening will bring to a close the most successful Fair ever held in Plainfield. Next week work will be resumed on the building, and it is intended to have it completed January 1.

The special attraction at the fair yesterday afternoon and evening, judging by the crowd always around it, seemed to be "The Goose". It is a very intelligent biped. It will be on exhibition again today—first floor. No extra charge to see it.

The total receipts of the drills amount to $1,100.

A free concert of popular music will be given this evening in Assembly Hall by the Symphony.

The basket-ball game between the second teams of the High School and North Plainfield Public School in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium last night was won by the High School boys by the score of 10 to 0

A match game of basket ball is to be played between the High School and the North Plainfield school teams at the Fair tonight.

COMEDIAN RUNYON.

HAS AN EYE ON THE OLD MAN.

Brings Down the House with His Latest Topic Song at the Fair.

That everybody in Plainfield reads The Daily Press was evidenced last night at the Y. M. C. A. Fair when William Runyon sang a new epilogue to the Swedish dance and brought down the house by his good-humored reply to the letter in The Daily Press of Wednesday night. The people were most enthusiastic over his song, and gave him a vigorous recall. His song was as follows:

Were it not for the ladies who managed this Fair,
And sold us our 50-cent suppers,
The Y. M. C. A. would be out in the cold,
And walking around on its uppers.
All hail to the dames of this beautiful town,
Who got the Fair up so's to get the debt down.

I 'm looking around for the sporty old gent
Who wrote that remarkable letter;
I 'll shake hands with him, for a spade is a spade,
Though another name sometimes takes better.
I hope he is here—in the front row perchance.
Hurrah for Old-Man-Not-Afraid-of-the-Dance!

And now, dearest friends, we must bid you farewell;
The dances are pretty near over.
We thank one and all, for your patronage here
Puts the Y. M. C. A. right in clover.
If our dance has pleased you, you have one to thank yet—
I refer to our good trainer, Mrs. Burnett.

Robbery in New Market.

Charles S. Day of New Market, who was robbed Oct. 29, was again robbed last night of cigars, pipes, tobacco, refreshments, etc., to the amount of about $15; also about $5 in postage stamps. Afterwards the robbers attempted to open the safe, but were not successful, which was fortunate for Mr. Day, as it contained a large amount of money and postage stamps.

The burglars left the safe in such a condition that Mr. Day cannot open it, which is unfortunate, as his stamps, cash and books are contained within. An expert from New York will be summoned.

The tools which were used were stolen from Willard Apgar's shop in Dunellen.

Bound to Elect a Socialist.

The Socialist-Labor managers are planning to elect at least a commissioner of appeals in cases of taxation. Under the law two commissioners may be elected from one political party, and a third is required to complete the board. The Republicans nominated two, but no third man has been named. The Socialists will by pasters have votes cast for a member of their party, and of course if their candidate gets more votes than any other third man he will be elected.

She Could n't Marry Three.

A story of a little fisher maiden, of how she loved an honest man and fougat a wicked one—such is the plot of "She Could n't Marry Three", in which that charming soubrette Miss Lillian Kennedy will appear in Music Hall, Dec. 3.

The scenery includes beautiful views of the sea coast, of the ruined abbey, and the lighthouse by the sea. The engine and cars used in the sensational railroad scene are realistic. Popular prices of 10 20, 30 and 50 cents will prevail.

The Delicacy

of a lace pattern excites delighted comments from ladies everywhere, but they have equal appreciation of delicate texture and flavor of choice food articles. Why they ever tolerate soggy cakes, biscuits and muffins is a mystery when it is remembered that such delicate cakes and muffins can be made from Hecker's Old Homestead Flap-Jack flour, ready for instant use.

Shooting for Swine.

Under the management of Charles Smith a live bird shoot for two 300-lb. swine will be shot on the Climax Gun Club grounds, Fanwood, Wednesday, Dec. 12, at 1 p. m.

L. A. Kline a Juror.

The Somerset County Courts will open Dec. 26. Lewis A. Kline represents North Plainfield on the panel of petit jurors.

One Year for Shay.

George Shay, for assault on Mrs. Furey, was this morning sentenced to one year in State Prison.

—Levy was made on the stock of H. F. Windham yesterday to satisfy the judgment of Griffen.

—The switchman at the Church street crossing was knocked down by drill engine 200 this afternoon, but luckily escaped with bruises.

Mr. Ira P. Wetmore, a prominent real estate agent of San Angelo, Texas, has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in his family for several years as occasion required, and always with perfect success. He says: "I find it a perfect cure for our baby when troubled with colic or dysentery. I now feel that my outfit is not complete without a bottle of this Remedy at home or on a trip away from home. GREATER PLAINFIELD.

Trolley Extensions Commercially Considered.

Trolley cars that have ten minutes headway, stopping at every signal, would bring the Greater Plainfield in plain view. So far as business is concerned, they would annex to the central and larger town Scotch Plains, Fanwood and Netherwood on the one side; South Plainfield, New Market, Dunellen and Evona on the other. Mt. Ararat is beyond the "divide", and is not in it.

When one wants something very nice for dinner; when a pupil needs special instruction; when a carpet cries out for a professional cleaner: when amusements above the neighborhood sort are desired; when teeth are to be extracted without pain; when children need cloaks or coats; when a woman's hat is to be originally gotten together—in all such cases, and a thousand more of like nature, the need of a Greater Plainfield becomes apparent.

The trolley is the bond with which to commercially unite all the communities mentioned. At present a good share of their best trade is done in Newark or New York, only a small percentage of their purchases accruing to Plainfield. If trolley cars were going and coming between the heart of Plainfield and these communities, what a change would take place! Politically speaking they would remain as they are, but in a commercial sense each would become part of a population numbering nearly thirty thousand.

All this is possible. In fact, it would come marching right along if the merchants and mechanics, the manufacturers and workingmen, the property owners and professional men, of central Plainfield would take hold of the subject of trolley extensions with a fixed determination to secure what all know full well we need.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

J. A. Briant is recovering from his severe illness.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wadsworth, son and daughter, are guests of A. C. Baldwin.

Harry, son of H. B. Newhall, is home from the School of Technology, Boston.

Miss Dowd of Duer street left town yesterday for a visit with friends in Troy.

Miss Jessie Utter was the very acceptable organist at the Trinity Church preparatory service last night.

Justice Sperry of Grandview avenue has for several days been trying the difficult case of Lumbago vs. Sperry.

Miss Powers and Miss Byrne of West Second street spent Thanksgiving with Miss Byrne's parents at Bridgeport.

Miss Emma Kitchen spent a very pleasant Thanksgiving attending the bicycle races in Madison Square Garden.

Miss Mamie Doud and her brother Will of Emily and Duer streets, left yesterday for an extended visit among friends in Troy.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Elliott and baby Ruth, of Franklin avenue, Brooklyn, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. F. O. Smith, West Front street.

Miss Estelle Davis, who has been visiting her cousin Miss Lucie P. Davis of East Fifth street, has returned to her home in East Orange.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Cadmus and baby are Thanksgiving guests at the home of Mrs. Cadmus's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. Coles, 68 Duer street.

F. L. C. Martin will be the grand marshal this afternoon and one of the judges this evening at the races being held in Madison Square Garden.

Mr. and Mrs. Tieman Horne, who were married in Pulaski, Tenn., this week, are expected to arrive in Plainfield tomorrow on their honeymoon trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Selby of Troy are enjoying a two-weeks wedding trip at the home of Mrs. Selby's sister, Mrs. Robert Loughlin, Watchung avenue.

Dr. Edward Foote of New York is visiting his uncle, F. Bigelow of Central avenue. He took the train to Summit and walked thence to Plainfield to enjoy the country.

Miss Stewart of West Seventh street gave her class of boys a Thanksgiving treat in Hope Chapel yesterday, arranging games and feasting for them which were greatly relished.

A surprise party arranged by Miss Jennie Addis was given to Masters Francis and Vincent Meany, corner of Elm place and Orange street, Thanksgiving evening. About twenty of the little folks passed the evening in playing games and singing. Ice cream and cake brought the happy event to a close.

Rev. Samuel A. Eliot, who preaches in All Souls Church tomorrow evening, is the son of President Eliot of Harvard College, and is himself a young man of exceptional promise and ability, who was called to an important charge in Denver immediately after his graduation from Harvard College and Divinity School. After a successful pastorate there of several years he was settled a year ago last May over the influential First Unitarian Society of Brooklyn, N. Y., the Church of the Saviour, where he has already won the esteem and affection of the people both as a minister and as a man.

GOOD GOVERNMENT.

Dr. Lewis Preaches a Powerful Sermon.

THE HOUR CALLS FOR WORKERS.

Croakers Not Wanted in This Crusade—The Right to Vote Should Depend on Character and Education—Protest Against the Spoils System.

In the Seventh-Day Baptist Church this morning Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis took for his text the 21st verse of the 18th chapter of Exodus, from which he drew the theme as announced in these columns yesterday. We give below the full exordium and an outline of his sermon:

I am the more willing to speak upon good government today because the times demand a re-examination and a readjustment of theories and practices in our political affairs. The people of the United States have undertaken the most stupendous task as to government which has ever been undertaken. Our Republic is based upon the loftiest ideas, and modeled after the highest ideas that any people ever undertook to embody in an actual political system. The experiment began under favorable auspices. Two nationalities furnished most of the earlier colonists: England and Holland. Their religious and political tendencies were essentially one. All the surroundings found an increasing inspiration to higher and better things. Separation from the old world was natural and inevitable. This was accomplished quickly and successfully, and the young republic lifted on the wave of victory, was carried forward with unexpected rapidity and success. The fundamental principles of manhood, liberty and equality, expanded until the late Civil War, and the death of slavery came as the natural result of their unfolding. The nation sloughed slavery as a strong man sloughs smallpox, because of his vigorous vitality.

But new conditions have arisen with almost incredible rapidity. Greatly strengthened in many things, we were yet weakened in several directions by the war. Such conflicts develop and foster certain elements of moral and political corruption. War increases irreligion, profanity, and dishonesty. It lessens regard for human life, national virtue, and high ideals of manhood. It cultivates political intrigue, party power, and individual jobbery. These and similar results left the nation weakened when the war closed, and less fit to cope with a new and adverse element.

Those elements were swift in their approach. The men of the nation were terribly decimated by the war. It drew them from every department of life, from every calling. Unskilled labor, and the learned professions contributed full quotas. Battlefield, hospital, and prison pen claimed thousands, and sent nothing but sadness and want to fill their places. The "unknown" private who died on picket duty in some southern swamp was comrade in sacrifice with that prince of men, the assassinated Lincoln. Thus we paid the price by which the Republic cast out the wicked and barbarous inheritance of slavery which the old world monarchies fastened on to our youth.

This filled the land—permit me the figure — with vacant places, which clamored for men and new hands must grasp the plow and spade, the pen and the ballot. Opportunity offered place and preferment. Meanwhile the Atlantic, which "rolled between us and any formidable foe" when the Republic was young,—and the Pacific as well—had become but the ferry of a Summer's day. Europe and Asia, teeming with ignorant and poverty-stricken millions, were eager to unload. The lower classes, men untaught as to any form of Government, rushed to fill the vacant places—as the cyclone rushes to fill the vacuum of an August day. It was not the crime of these men, but our deep misfortune, that the naturalization laws made in other days, are now as a bulwark of straw against those who are unprepared and unfit to take part in the Government of a Republic—or to shape its destiny. Our present naturalization and immigration laws are as far behind existing demands and circumstances, as the wooden navy of sixty years ago is unfit to cope with modern steel-clad crusiers, and dynamite guns. You who listen have seen an entire change within the last thirty years. Italy and Asia now handle the pick and spade. And those whom they have crowded out having a peculiar genius for "politics"—not for Government—have taken to "running things". Witness the shames and crimes of Tammany, and its counterparts.

We have come again to the parting of the ways as we did at Bunker Hill and Bull Run. The last two years, and notably the late elections emphasize this fact. New issues are ripe. New positions are demanded. To disregard these issues is blindness and folly. To shrink from them is cowardice. To think them temporary or unimportant is to proclaim one's ignorance. To believe that they can be cured by old methods alone, is criminal conservatism. To dream that any one method, or reformatory "fad" will accomplish the work, is childish. Fundamental reconstruction along certain lines, is imperatively demanded. Some of those lines are these:

I. The election franchises must be placed on a new basis of citizenship. Birth, color and sex are accidents, so far as the right to take part in government is concerned. Education and character are not accidents but fundamentals. Men hold this true everywhere except in Government. You do not call a blacksmith when you want a dentist; nor a lawyer when you desire treatment for typhoid fever; nor an ignorant man in either case. The man who shoes your horses must know how to do his work well. He must serve an apprenticeship and show himself fit before you trust him. It is important for a blacksmith to know how to fit a shoe, and drive a nail into the foot of a horse. It is ten-fold more important that those who drive nails into the structure of a great government like ours should be fitted for such a work. A high standard of education, not mere ability to read the ballot, should be required; a fair knowledge of the fundamental principles which underlie a Republic, before any one is permitted to take part in making or upholding it. Every drunkard, thief, defaulter, tramp, Anarchist, and the like is justly disfranchised by virtue of character, and the law should act upon this fact. Women should be given the ballot in matters touching education and moral reforms, temperance, social conditions, etc., at once, and ultimately the full franchise. But the same general restrictions should be placed on them. Ignorance and vice should debar them, as it ought to debar men. This reform in the franchise will demand marked reform in our immigration and naturalization laws. Such reform must come.

II. Spoils and political patronage must be eliminated from our system of Government. It is false to say that political victory entitities the victor to the spoils of offices. It is that which puts murderers in high positions, and barroom brawlers on the judicial bench; that sends Paddy Divvier to judge the criminals made in the saloon, while his blackened eye is patched because of contact with the fist of his comrade in drunken brawls. This puts inefficiency in office to serve the people, because inefficiency is able to do the dirty work of designing men, who seek office for its honors, and easy places with greatest pay.

The saloon, with its untold commercial power which drips corruption everywhere, will be eliminated, in a great degree, when the "Spoils System" is killed. The Spoils System is ruin's best weapon.

"Civil Service Reform" follows as an imperative necessity. This must be demanded in government as it is demanded in business, in the learned professions, and in the kitchen. This fact needs only to be stated to find acceptance everywhere, among thoughtful men.

Systematic education as to fundamental principles in government must mark the actual beginning of successful reform. From the home circle, through all schools and at last in a national university, boys and girls must be taught good government as to its foundation principles; and the keynote of all this is sounded in our text. We educate men in army and navy to defend the nation. In a far broader sense we must educate men and women to create and preserve the nation. Armies and navies do not constitute the State, and there will be no State to defend unless the plea we are making, be heeded.

What constitutes the State?
Not high-raised battlements,
Thick wall or mooted gate,
But men, high-minded men,
Men who their duty know,
Who know their rights
And, knowing, dare maintain,
Prevent the long-armed blow,
And crush the tyrant while
They rend the chain.

These constitute the true power and permanency of every nation. And this Republic will be wiser and stronger than it is today when the counsels of the ancient priest of Midian are heeded.

Can all this be done? Yes. God has helped honest men to solve many problems as difficult as those which confront this nation today. Courage, perseverance, faith and personal righteousness, with the added blessing of God will do it all. If you are afraid keep your fears unsaid. Go creep into some corner for fancied security while braver men and women fight your battles for you. The hours call for workers, not croakers!

He's After Them.

Constable William Day of Scotch Plains, who secured a search warrant from Justice Mosher yesterday for the purpose of searching the house occupied by Wallace and Shay, thinking they knew something of the robbery at the Force Hotel, went to the house and was unable to gain admittance.

He is still looking for the two men, whom he hopes to find today.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. V. The prompt relief it affords is alone worth many times the cost, 50 cents. Its continued use will effect a permanent cure. For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

FRANKLIN'S WILL.

A BEQUEST OF A CENTURY AGO THE CAUSE OF A LAWSUIT.

The Philosopher Gave 1,000 Pounds to Accumulate for 100 Years, After Which 100,000 Pounds was to be Divided and the Balance Accumulated to 4,000,000.

Benjamin Franklin, when he died a century ago, left one thousand pounds to be lent, under the direction of the selectmen of Boston, to young married artificers under the age of of 25 years, the borrower to pay interest. After making this provision he said:

If this plan is executed, and succeeds as projected without interruption for one hundred years, the sum will then be 131,000 pounds, of which I would have the managers of the donation to the town of Boston then lay out, at their discretion, one hundred thousand pounds in public works, which may be judged of most general utility to the inhabitants, such as fortifications, bridges, aqueducts, public buildings, baths, pavements or whatever may make living in the town more convenient to its people, and render it more agreeable to strangers resorting thither for health or a temporary residence. The remaining £31,000 I would have continued to be let out on interest in the manner above directed, for another hundred years, as I hope it will have been found that the institution has a good effect on the conduct of youth, and been of service to many worthy characters and useful citizens. At the end of this second term, if no unfortunate accident has prevented the operation, the sum will be £4,061,000 sterling, of which I leave £1,061,000 to the disposition of the inhabitants of the town of Boston, and 3,000,000 to the disposition of the Government of the State, not presuming to carry my views farther.

Several months ago steps were taken to carry out the provisions of the will. The investment had accumulated until it had reached nearly $450,000. The trustees of this fund are at present the following clergymen who represent the oldest churches in their respective denominations: Rev. Stopford Brooke, of the First Unitarian Church; Rev. Charles W. Duane, of Christ Church, (the one identified with Paul Revere's famous ride), and the pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Warren ave. and Berkeley street. The Selectmen of the town of Boston were to co-operate with the clergymen of the denominations named. Boston has since become a city and instead of Selectmen she has a Board of Aldermen. It was at first supposed that the Aldermen were the legal successors of the Selectmen, and that they with the clergymen named would constitute the trustees. Consequently a committee from the Aldermen was appointed to act with the clergymen. After mature consideration it was considered best to erect a trade school somewhat after the manner of those in New York, Philadelphia and other cities, and the committee made a trip to investigate the working of these schools.

It was, after their return, decided to purchase a lot of land in a central position in the city, and bids were advertised for. In the meantime General Walker, of the Institute of Technology, proposed that the fund should be used in connection with his school, and presented some strong arguments in support of his proposition. Public sentiment, however, seeem to be in favor of the trade school idea, as more nearly meeting the intent of the will of Franklin.

Now doubts have arisen as to how this school can be maintained if it is established. The conclusion first reached was that, inasmuch as the Selectmen are no longer in existence, the Aldermen were their successors. But the Selectmen were the executive of the town, while the Alderman are the legislators. Now as the Mayor is the executive, he is by some considered the proper representative of the city on the Board of Trustees. The Board of Aldermen is a shifting body, and its members could not always be depended upon for intelligent, discreet action in matters of this sort.

And now the Corporation Counsel gives it as his opinion that the trustees could not legally establish an endowment fund to carry on the school with what is left after erecting the building and equipping it with machinery, etc. His advice, however, is not regarded as much consequence, and it is altogether probable that a friendly suit will be brought to determine the exact status of the trustees, and determine their duties and prerogatives.

Maine's Aborigines.

Maine's two Indian tribes, the Penobscots and the Passamaquoddys, wear the dress of the whites and, for the most part, have adopted their ways of living. But the nomadic spirit is still strong within them; the summer finds parties camped at the various Maine watering places making and selling beaded purses and woven grass and basket-work trinkets, while the squaws turn many a silver piece by telling fortunes. In some wood lot, where the ash tree that supplies them with working material is plentiful, they sometimes build their camps of logs and saplings, roofed with bark or shingles and well climbed with moss. There is a feeling among owners of forest lands in Maine that the Indians, as first proprietors, have a claim to reside in the wilderness wherever they choose, and, as they are peaceable and do little damage to valuable forest growth, permission to occupy a piece of woodland is seldom refused them.

A Glorious Compromise.

"Your offer is a great honor, Mr. Fritters," said the fair young girl at whose feet he had laid his wealth of love in well-chosen but demonstrative words, "but it is so utterly unexpected, that it takes me completely by surprise. I can't answer you now. You must give me time."

"Oh, I'll give you time," replied young Mr. Fritters, briskly, like the Chicago drummer that he was; "you can have sixty days, or the usual two per cent. discount for——"

"Sir!" interrupted the astonished girl.

"Oh, I beg your pardon, Nell! Indeed I do. My mind wandered a trifle when you asked for time. I was dreaming of the bliss that awaited me when the dearest and loveliest and sweetest girl in the whole wide world had become my wife. I'll give you time, darling! How much do you want? Won't two minutes be enough?"

They compromised on that basis.—Pittsburg Chonicle.

Agreed With His Cross-Examiner.

Mr. James Hyde, once a lawyer in a small town on Long Island, tells a good story about himself. He says:

"It was when I used to practice law in a little town near the centre of the State. A farmer had one of his neighbors arrested for stealing his ducks, and I was employed by the accused to endeavor to convince the court that such was not the case. The plaintiff was positive that his neighbor was guilty because he had seen the ducks in the defendant's yard.

"'How do you know they are your ducks?' I asked.

"'Oh, I should know my own ducks anywhere!' replied the farmer; and he gave a description of their various peculiarities whereby he could readily distinguish them from others.

"'Why,' said I, 'those ducks can't be of such rare breed! I have seen some just like them in my own yard.'

"'That's not at all unlikely,' replied the farmer, 'for they are not the only ducks I have had stolen lately.'"—Indianapolis Sentinel.

A WORLD'S FAIR IN CANADA.

It Will be Held at Montreal Nearly Two Years Hence.

Canada is to have an International Exhibition. Montreal has been chosen as the exhibition city, and the Fair will be held there in 1896. It will last for six months, from May to October. The idea originated with Joseph H. Stiles, who was Commissioner-General for Great Britain at the San Francisco Midwinter Fair. He is in Montreal, and has concluded arrangements with the Montreal Exposition Company. The agreement was signed a few days ago. An incorporated company will be formed, with a capital stock of $500,000. The cost of construction is estimated at $489,000 and the operating expenses at $303,000. The gate receipts are figured at $1,000,000.

PRINCE HOHENLOHE'S ODDITIES.

The New Chancellor of the German Empire Cooks His Own Coffee.

Prince Hohenlohe, the new Chancellor of the German Empire, is cast in a different physical mould from his two stalwart predecessors. He is far from being so impressive in appearance as Bismarck or Caprivi. He looks more like the headmaster of a school in a middle-sized town than like a statesman. Although of a more noble lineage than either of the ex-Chancellors, he looks much less like the traditional aristocrat. His early life was, however, passed amid comparatively humble surroundings, and his birth helped him little. He practised law until 1846, and, pitted against young men of the middle classes, never distinguished himself. In the year mentioned, he succeeded to the diguity of Schillingsfurst, and took his place as a hereditary legislator in the Bavarian Reichsrath.

The Prince is remarkably active for a man of his age. His excellent health he attributes to the facts that he spends as much time as possible in the open air—especially in the hunting-field—and cooks his own coffee. Coffee he considers the principal course of a meal, although he likes good things to eat, and employs one of the best cooks in Germany. When in his palace at Strasburg, he always prepared his own coffee. Even when he travels, he carries the coffee machine with him, and uses it to make his favorite beverage at least three times a day.

In the course of years he has become an expert, and few cooks can equal his brew. His guests flatter him on his art, as a matter of course, and there is no better way to reach his heart than by eulogy of his coffee.

Like many other men who have accomplished considerable in this life and love praise of their hobbies, he would rather hear praise for his "drink which comforteth the brain and heart"—to use the language of Bacon—than for his political wisdom.

The Prince is immensely wealthy. He inherited through his wife vast estates in Russia, but being subject to the law forbidding foreigners to hold landed possessions in the dominions of the Czar, he was ordered to sell the property within a certain time. When that period had expired he had succeeded in selling only about one-third of the land. For this he received about 10,000,000 rubles, nearly $5,000,000. The Czar then extended the time. If the estates are not disposed of, however, at the time specified, he will forfeit them. The land might have been retained in the family, had the Prince's heir consented to swear allegiance to the Russian ruler. But this he declined to do, preferring to lose money and remain true to the land of his birth.

WHEN SHE CAME HOME.

The skies are bluer overhead,
Despite the summer that is dead,
The trees are now a brighter red—
Since she came home.
Though sighing winds went over land
Of faded gold; though master hand
Gave sweeping touch to harping strings
And wooed the tearfulness of things—
Yet all the wistfulness and pain
That, passing, joined the sad refrain,
Stole sweetly, graciously away
To leave me happy on that day,
When she came home.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 2. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—True wisdom. Getting it, using it. —Jas. iii, 13-18.

In these verses James speaks of two kinds of wisdom and tells something of the origin, nature and results of each. The first we may call a false wisdom. It was manifested by those who aspired too hastily to teach. They were unwise in their estimate of their own powers and also in their judgment of the discussions that should take place in the church. This wisdom did not have the proper origin and result. It was earthly instead of from above and busied itself with things of the earth. It was sensual or natural rather than spiritual. It was "devilish." It was false in its source as well as in its character. The results of such wisdom in the church could be easily imagined.

But James also speaks of true wisdom, its characteristics, its origin and its fruits.

The characteristics of true wisdom are: 1. It is "pure," chaste, holy, unsullied. 2. It is peaceable. There is no disposition in true wisdom to dispute and wrangle, which was the leading feature of false wisdom. 3. It is "gentle," forbearing, charitable, considerate. 4. It is "easily entreated," accessible, open to conviction and willing to listen to remonstrance. 5. It is "without variance," steadfast and persistent. 6. It is without hypocrisy. It is perfectly sincere and open in all its dealings. We can from this description see the beauty, the desirability and the usefulness of true wisdom. But how may we get this wisdom? it is asked. James says it is "from above," and therefore the only way to get it is to get it from God by prayer and communion with God and by studying the works of God—in nature and in revelation. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men literally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering" (Jas. i, 5, 6). True wisdom comes from God, and if we want it we must ask God for it, and if we ask in faith we shall receive it. Solomon asked God for wisdom and received it, and so may we receive it if we ask in faith.

But how are we to use the wisdom received? It is not to be used in disputations and wranglings. This wisdom, says James, is "full of mercy and good works." It is to be used in such a way as to produce good works. It is to make the world happier and better. It is to do men good and not to harm them, and to point them to God.

Bible Readings.—Deut. iv, 6; I Kings iii, 9; viii, 10; I Chron. xxii, 12; Prov. ii, 3, 6-9; iii, 13; xxviii, 7; Ez., vii, 25; Eccl. ii, 26; Dan. ii, 20; iii, 12; Job xviii, 12, 28; Jer. ix, 24; Math. vii, 24; Dan. ii, 23; Jas. i, 5.

Trust the Children.

None are so proud and happy as young children when they first understand that their parents have confidence in their honor and in their faithful performance of such duties as are committed to their care. The feeling of responsibility awakened by this knowledge in little children brings to them their first sensation of self respect. They soon learn that faithfulness is absolutely necessary to the satisfactory execution of any work they may be called to perform. Thus good seed is daily sown, which in after years will yield abundant harvest and repay all the trouble it may have cost to prepare the soil to receive it.—Christian Herald.

Three Christian Endeavorers.

A Christian Endeavor society was formed four years ago in the Wisconsin state prison at Waupan. A record has been kept of its members, from which it appears that after their release three have done conspicuously good service. One is doing evangelistic work among the prisons of New York, a second is laboring for the salvation of men among the copper mines of northern Michigan, and a third is leading the gold miners of Montana to embrace the truths taught by our Saviour.—Christian Herald.

Hearty Singing.

Sacred song has brought thousands into the kingdom of Jesus Christ. The unconsecrated tunes and new hymns that wander around the church all unfriended and alone never arouse to action. The mothers and fathers in Israel cannot raise their cracked voices to where the new tune tries to go. Let us rouse up some of the old hymns and tunes that have not been more than half awake since the time of our grandfathers.—Live Church.

Canadian Methodist Church.

In the Methodist church of Canada there are now 259 Christian Endeavor societies, 220 Epworth leagues, 812 Epworth Leagues of Christian Endeavor. We shall rejoice when the 259 Methodist Christian Endeavor societies and the 220 Epworth leagues become Epworth Leagues of Christian Endeavor.—Exchange.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR JOTTINGS.

The colors for Delaware are scarlet and white, these having been adopted last October with the motto, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow."

The Christian Endeavor movement is nowhere making such rapid strides as in the churches of Madagascar connected with the London Missionary society. There are now 91 societies, with a membership of 3,377, in the island.

The Calvinistic association of South Wales, Great Britain, has passed a resolution rejoicing in the work done by the Christian Endeavor society and recommending the establishment of a society in connection with every church.

The Congregational guilds of England are moving for a union of all the young people's societies of the church—Congregational guilds, Christian Endeavor societies and others—an organization similar to the Baptist Young People's union of America.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. is on every wrapper.

THE SUN'S FASHIONS.

STYLES THAT PREVAILED AT THE GREAT HORSE SHOW.

The Plain Tailor Made Gowns and the Genteel Costumes of the Afternoon. Some of Them Sketched and Described. The Latest Sleeves.

Dress was a very significant element of the late Horse Show. All conjectures and doubts as to styles in everything except full evening dress are settled beyond dispute in this one grand opening of gorgeous attire, which was fashion made tangible and convincing by a host of elegantly dressed women, who displayed its charms and vagaries to the best advantage. In the question as to whether fashions or the horses have the right of attention, dress is undoubtedly on the winning side.

The first thing you noticed were morning gowns mostly tailor made, of smooth cloths, mixed tweeds, and rough wool fabrics of every description, and built in the coat and skirt style. The skirts were full and very flaring, fitted closely around the hips, with three box plaits at the back, and beautifully hung in most cases but here and there is an occasional one with all its godet fulness falling away from the moorings in the back in the most ugly fashion. It is evident that an expert modiste is required to make a success of all this superfluous amount of cloth, but when the fulness is properly adjusted the effect is very chic.

The latest skirt is full in front and at the sides as well as at the back, and is generally untrimmed. Coats vary in length anywhere between a quarter of a yard from the bottom of the dress and the other extreme, nine or ten inches below the waist, and are perfect as to fit.

They are mostly tight fitting, buttoned with four or five buttons, and in some instances cut away in front like a man's coat. The most fashionable coats are either very short or medium length. Revers and wide collars are on every one, faced with silk, fur, velvet, or cloth; and are turned back over a fancy vest, with an immaculate linen shirt front and collar, or a pretty delicate silk or lace blouse.

One very smart costume more mannish than the rest, such as men use for their trousers, and a black coat, very much cut away, long in the back, made like a man's coat and worn over a white vest, with a linen shirt, collars and cuffs. A feather boa and a large, very feminine hat complete this outfit without seeming to belong to it in any particular.—N. Y. Sun.

Not In Any Case.

He (angrily)—Do you take me for a fool?

She—No; I wouldn't take you under any circumstances.—Hudson (N. Y.) Register.

TRAINING OF THE PRINCESS ALIX.

She was Carefully Brought Up and is a Good Cook.

M. Conti, the ex-French professor of the children of the late Princess Alice of Great Britain, writes from Darmstadt to a Metz paper to say how the new Empress of Russia was educated.

She was, he says, brought up as if she belonged to the middle class, but with perhaps less coddling. Indeed her training was severe. The method and discipline to which she was subjected from the cradle by her mother's orders were unswerving unless when the late Grand-Duke interfered. The late Grand-Duchess Alice always showed anxiety to prevent pride or hardness of heart from marring the dispositions of her children.

There was no need for her to put down these defects in the Princess Ella, now Princess Henry of Prussia, or in the Princess Alix, who lost her mother when she was six years old. These young princesses contrasted strikingly, by their simplicity and kindliness of manner, with the haughty daughters of the German nobility.

Until they grew up they had to rise in the morning, to study, to eat and to walk, all at fixed hours. Their recreations were, until the age of confirmation, croquet, lawn tennis, riding, rowing, and in winter skating. Before confirmation all their dresses were home-made.

After confirmation they were allowed long dinner dresses and evening dresses, and had leave when in England to dine with grown-up persons at Queen Victoria's table. They might also go to the theatre, to concerts, to an occasional ball, and pay some visits.

Before confirmation the elder girls were allowed one shilling a week for pocket money, and after confirmation two shillings. The younger were given half as much. Sometimes their allowance was increased or reduced, according to proficiency in studies. They spoke English and French with ease, and, indeed, as fluently as German.

They were all good musicians, and handled their pencils well. It was impossible to be more skillful with their needles and in cooking. The future Empress not only excelled in pastry, but is really an accomplished musician and painter. When a growing girl she was allowed to ask certain friends of her own age to come and take tea with her, on condition that she made the cakes that were to be set before them. She was also allowed to make confectionery for an orphan asylum, and to take it there to treat the children.

It would be impossible to find any one whose affability came more completely from the heart unless it be her sisters, Ella and Irene. The Princess Ella, now the Grand-duchess Elizabeth Feodorovna, leads a very useful life at Moscow. She is the active patroness of the institute for trained nurses, which furnished two sisters to attend the Czar at Livadia. The mother of the future Empress seemed to feel that she would not be long with her daughters and tried to imbue those who helped her to educate them with the spirit in which she wished them to be brought up. She used to say, "I want them to be unassuming and to be perfectly frank and natural. They must understand that to be so they should have no reason for concealment." She never allowed them to be laughed at for mistakes and awkwardness, because she said to do so would tempt them to dissimulate.

Bloodhounds for Thieves.

Woodburn, our neighboring village on the north, has had an exasperating experience with petty thieves of late, and the other day Dr. Robb's drug store and several other houses were broken into and robbed. Altogether the value of what has been lost foots up a considerable sum. It seemed for a time that the thieves would escape the clutches of the law entirely. Two bloodhounds, however, which had been procured from Elizabethtown for the purpose, were put upon the trail and in a short time they stopped at a barn belonging to Ed Hill, a negro living three miles from Woodburn, and refused to go further, thus giving mute but expressive testimony that the thief was found.

Further developments showed that Hill, whom the dogs accused, wore a pair of gum boots, which made tracks corresponding to those found around the house that had been robbed, and on this circumstantial evidence the negro was arrested and convicted.

Tracking criminals with bloodhounds is somewhat of an innovation in this section, and however successful a method it may be, it recalls ante-bellum days in the South, when runaway slaves were chased with these savage canines, and the further we get away from those times and those methods the better it were for our happiness and peace of mind.

A Suggestion.

A Problem.

"I say, Jen," called little Tommy.

"What?" returned his sister.

"Why, I was just thinkin'—you've always had to wear ma's old dresses made over, an' I've always been stuck with pa's old clo'es—which of us do you suppose'll have things made out of ma's bicycle bloomers when they get old."—Chicago Record.

Vanity

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. Cleaning or dyeing makes it possible to use soiled or faded garments. And there's where our ax comes in. We are in the Cleaning and Dyeing business. Our cleaner is ready, and our dyer has his fall shades mixed.

Ask for our little booklet "Re-Freshing Thoughts." It tells about cleaning men's clothing.

FOR A PRETTY COMPLEXION.

Water a Fine Cosmetic and Milk is Excellent Also.

A pretty complexion is a boon to every woman fortunate enough to have it, for it not only adds to the beauty, but it testifies to the good health of its possessor.

Consequently it may be, when not as good as it should be, improved by care of the diet, by the proper use of the bath, and by avoiding whatever makes one ill, or even dull and apathetic.

One of the most vexing of the enemies of a good complexion are blackheads, or fleshworms, which are very liable to degenerate into ugly looking white pimples, by no means endowed with a life of their own, although this is the general belief concerning them. They are simply the result of uncleanliness, for the oily matter exuded by the pores forms these black specks, which dishonor the prettiest face and are in reality nothing but accumulated dirt. When blackheads have once been permitted to form it is quite a difficult thing to get rid of them. Many applications are recommended for the purpose; for instance: Bicarbonate of soda dissolved in hot water, borax water, white of an egg applied to the skin before retiring to bed, pure alcohol, etc., but besides being irritating to the tissues, all these substances are only successful for a brief period, and when too often repeated are worse than the evil they are supposed to cure.

The only way of getting permanently rid of blackheads is to thoroughly wash night and morning with water as warm as can be borne, and then bathe the face for ten minutes at least in tepid milk by the aid of a soft and very fine sponge. Continue this for a month and you will find that your skin has become pure and sweet as a baby's.

MISS WHITLOCK'S WHEEL EXPLOITS.

A Fifteen-year-old Girl Who Can Ride 100 Miles With Ease.

It has been only a short time since wheelmen regarded a century run as a very difficult ride. Now, however, there are wheelwomen in various sections of the country who can accomplish long-distance runs with as much ease as men. Miss Effie Whitlock of Brooklyn has won distinction as one of the youngest long distance riders in creation; and while only fifteen years old can ride 100 miles a day very handily. Miss Whitlock was one of the fifteen women who started in the century run from Sag Harbor to Brooklyn last summer, and she was one of the first survivors of the run. Miss Whitlock has been riding a wheel for several years and speaks in the highest terms of this mode of exercise. She appears in a bloomer costume when riding, and asserts that she never feels fatigue.

MRS. ABELL INTERVIEWED

A STORY FROM A SYRACUSE LADY.

Suffered from Heart Trouble, Liver Complaint and Rheumatism and was Cured.

From Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald.

The efficacy of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was never more substantially proven—and its testimonials reach into the thousands—than in the case of Mrs. C. S. Abell.

Mrs. Abell lives at No 114 Roberts avenue, where she was seen by a reporter who had heard of her case. She talked freely of what she termed a most "marvelous" cure. She said. "For a number of years I have been troubled with a liver complaint that made me almost helpless at times. Complications set in, among them rheumatism, and I became so ill I could scarcely walk across the floor without aid. I consulted one of our home physicians, who informed me that I had heart trouble, snd began treating me for that. The treatment did no good, and I became convinced that he did not understand my case. One day I picked up a newspaper and read of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which I purchased, and began taking, and improved greatly. I have now taken six bottles, and was never so well in my life. I can say nothing but kind words for Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, to which I owe so much. I know of another case in which Favorite Remedy restored to health a friend of mine who was thought to be incurable."

Mrs. Abell said she would be glad to describe her case to any sufferer who may call upon her. The family are quite as profuse in their praise of Favorite Remedy, as Mrs. Abell herself.

Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is a never failing specific in diseases of the skin, liver, kidneys and blood. It restores the disordered liver to a healthy condition and corrects constipation. It is a certain cure for the diseases peculiar to women. It cures scrofula, salt rheum, erysipelas, nervousness, loss of sleep, or that worn out feeling. In cases of rheumatism, dyspepsia, gravel, Bright's disease, diabetes and bladder troubles, it has cured where all else failed. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is sold by all dealers in medicine at $1 a bottle, or six bottles for $5.

REMARKABLE CURES

Of Recent Date.

A Statement from Ex-Mayor John Corson, Esq., of Clinton, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

I acknowledge with the utmost pleasure the wonderful cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in my case.

I had been a sufferer from piles, which gave me constant pain and distress, during twenty long years, attended with frequent loss of blood and with great and painful protrusion of the pile tumors and rectum whenever my bowels moved.

I tried constantly to get relief from my sufferings, but to no purpose until Mr. Bryan, a friend of mine, who had been cured by Dr. Lighthill of the same trouble, recommended him to me, and he effected a complete and radical cure in my case also, and earned my lifelong gratitude.

JOHN CORSON.

THE CASE OF MR PETER G. EYCK, OF BISSELL, HUNTERDON CO., N. J.

Dr. Lighthill Effects a Complete Cure Where Ten Physicians Had Failed.

TO THE SICK, SUFFERING AND AFFLICTED:

For many years past I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. Every movement of the bowels was attended with loss of blood and with intense pain which lasted for hours and sometimes all day. My condition was aggravated by a prolapse of the rectum, which greatly increased my suffering and sometimes gave me most agonizing pains.

So great was my distress and so bad my condition that I sold my farm, not being able to work it any longer. At one time the protruding pile tumors became so highly inflamed and swollen that they could not be replaced, and I had to go to bed, applying hot poultices for three months before I could get relief.

I had been under the treatment of ten different physicians, some of New York City, Easton, Washington and elsewhere, without any benefit whatever, and had given up my case as hopeless when, luckily for me, I heard of Dr. Lighthill's skill and success in such cases, and went to him for treatment, with the happy result that he effected a radical and permanent cure in less than four weeks's time; and I am glad to say that the entire treatment gave me neither pain nor distress.

I consider my cure perfectly wonderful, and so do all my friends and neighbors. I am confident that there is no case of piles which Dr. Lighthill cannot cure.

PETER G. EYCK,
Bissell, Hunterdon Co., N. J.

MAGIC AND SPIRITS.

PROF. HERMANN EXPLAINS SOME SPIRITUALISTIC SEANCES.

Answering Questions in Sealed Envelopes. A Watch Trick. How to Describe Articles Though Blindfolded. A Genuine Case of Mind Reading.

Without saying that spiritual manifestations are all caused by methods described in the following paragraphs, I desire to show how many of the most mysterious manifestations secured by bogus mediums may be done with a combination of trickery and mechanical appliances.

One of the favorite experiments of the travelling show spiritual medium is the reading of sealed letters and the writing down of answers to them before breaking the seal or apparently disturbing it in any way. The performer's assistant goes through the audience with a pad of blank paper, a very hard pointed pencil and a package of strong, thick envelopes. The pad will be handed to some one in the audience to write a question. The auditor is instructed to write plainly in order that the writing may be easily read, and when the question is finished to tear off the paper on which it is written, fold it up and place it in the envelope securely. This performance is repeated a number of times until the professor has at least a half dozen envelopes, each one of which contains a question written on a piece of paper. These letters are pressed to the forehead, and after the usual trance business, or without it, as the performer may choose, the question is slowly read out to the audience and answered according to the whim of the operator. The man who wrote the question is then called for, he rises, receives his envelope, inspects it carefully to see that it has not been tampered with, opens it and displays the question, which, of course, is the one just read and answered by the performer. Now, this seems truly wonderful, but when it is known that the pads are carefully prepared with a sheet of carbon paper concealed inside, some three or four sheets below the one on which the question is written, and that the writing plainly with the hard pencil leaves its impression so that all the operator has to do when the pads are returned to him is to tear off the first three or four leaves and read each one of the questions plainly written by the carbor underneath, the mystery disappears. The same pad is never used twice, and, the attention of the audience being riveted on the envelopes, which are placed in a hat or basket, the inspection of the pads is not detected or even thought of.

Another favorite trick is to collect a number of watches on a tray, the performer declaring that the clairvoyant whom he is assisting will read the numbers of these watches correctly without looking or handling the timepiece. All that is necessary for the successful performance of the trick is the knowledge of one watch on the tray. This watch is supplied by a confederate in the audience and when the first watch is picked up the number on the inside of the case of the confederate's watch is read off, the audience is requested to pencil the number down, and when the watches are returned to the owners they are found to be correct in every case, as the possession of the first number enables the performer to apparently read it out of another watch, and when this watch is opened he gets another number, and so proceeds until the collection is exhausted. This unexplained is one of the most wonderful tricks in second sight.

Another form of second sight business is by two performers, usually a male and a female, who will appear upon the stage. The female will be carefully mesmerized, seated in a chair, blindfolded and a hood or bag placed over head; then the assistant will pass rapidly through the audience and touch articles here and there, while the blindfolded performer calls off the names of them as rapidly as they can be touched. All this is done without asking a single question, as it has been previously arranged that when passing through the audience he is to touch a number of articles, a list of which is carefully committed to memory. it always being so managed that articles to be found in every audience are selected. He will touch first a lady's bonnet, man's watch chain, walking cane, a hat, an umbrella, the top of an opera chair, and so on until a dozen or more articles have been enumerated, when he will begin to ask questions. He will stop, take a watch, open it and say: "What have I here?" The answer from the blindfolded performer will be, "A watch." Again question, "Color?" answer, "Gold." If the watch had been a silver one the question would have been, "Metal?" instead of "Color?" which would have conveyed the information to the blindfolded person that it was a silver watch. Occasionally the question is, "What metal?" and the answer "Brass," invariably is the means of raising a hearty laugh at the expense of the owner of the timepiece.

It is impossible to understand, without making a careful study of the matter, to what extent a series of questions may be carried. The most wonderful descriptions of coins, dates on bank notes, numbers in watches, the time of day, full description of articles of wearing apparel may be given without any one who is not in the secret being in the slightest degree aware of the fact that the performer's answers are in every case directed by the man passing through the audience.

In giving entertainments called mind reading there is no doubt that there are people possessed of certain affinities that enable them to accomplish, without trickery or any aid other than the gift they have of being so thoroughly in sympathy as to enable them to see or feel exactly the same sights or impulses at the same time. I once met two cousins, male and female; the man was a tall, wiry New Englander, in splendid health, the possessor of a remarkable amount of animal magnetism—more than in any other person I ever came in contact with—while his cousin was a girl of nineteen, whose very existence seemed to hang on her cousin's permission. She thought as he thought, saw as he saw, and they were able to perform some of the most marvellous things possible to imagine. In one of their exhibitions they thoroughly convinced a number of people, including myself, that it was possible to blindfold the girl without depriving her of the power of seeing whatever her cousin saw. He might be taken to a remote corner of the room, and a question whispered in his ear, which his cousin would answer without his making a sign or gesture. He was a fairly good musician, and could compel his cousin to sing songs handed him, although she had never heard the music, and was unable to read music herself.

A WOMAN'S SUFFERINGS

Some of the Agonies they Needlessly Endure.

NERVOUSNESS AND FEMALE WEAKNESSES RUIN MANY LIVES.

These Poor Sufferers Have Found a Sure Way to Get Well.

Female weaknesses are more common today than ever before. It is the mode of living; constant work and worry weaken the nerves and vitality, and female weakness follows. They are delicate and cannot stand the strain. As a result there is pain, discharge, suppression, irregularity, weak back, inflammation, bearing down, bad taste in the mouth, loss of appetite, faintness, constipation, nervousness, sleeplessness and irritability. There is hope for you now, but there will come a time when it will be too late. You may get some ideas from the following strong letter from Mrs. S. Taylor, of 251 West 17th st., New York City:

"For years I have been unable to attend to my household duties owing to severe sickness. I was troubled terribly with female weakness, nervous exhaustion, sleeplessness and general debility. I had coldness of limbs and feet and was in a helpless condition. I feared I should never get well.

MRS. SOPHIE TAYLOR.

"I had been put under a doctor's care all the time but got no better. I was utterly prostrated and good for nothing. By the advice of a friend who was cured by Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, I began using this wonderful medicine. After taking it a short time I was completely cured of all my troubles. My nerve strength returned, my female weakness disappeared, and today I am a different woman, feeling well and strong as I used to."

Such testimonials as these are always the means of curing thousands of suffering women who are wise enough to accept the advice of those who have been cured. Countless numbers of people all over the land have regained their health by this wonderful remedy, and are crying out to their fellow creatures to take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and be made well and strong. It is not a patent medicine, but the prescription of the most successful living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th st., New York City. He has the largest practice in the world, and this grand medical discovery is the result of his vast experience. The great reputation of Dr. Greene is a guarantee that his medicine will cure and the fact that he can be consulted by anyone, at any time, free of charge, personally or by letter, gives absolute assurance of the beneficial action of this wonderful medicine.

SUICIDE OF A STUDENT

Young Pierre Gulick Shoots Himself at Harvard.

While Alone in One of the Dormitories He Sent a Bullet Crashing Through His Brain—Found Dead by a Chambermaid—Mental Aberration Supposed to Have Caused the Deed.

Boston, Dec. 1.—Pierre Gulick, 21 years old, a member of the sophomore class of Harvard College, was found dead in his room in one of the dormitories of the college, having shot himself through the head with a 32-calibre revolver.

A note found in thee room requested another student to take charge of the suicide's affairs. It is said that the young student was subject to attacks of metal depression, and it is supposed that he took his life while suffering from melancholia. His friends reside in Springfield, Mass., whither the body will be sent.

Truman Abbe, '95, to whom the note was directed, said: "I am astonished to learn of Gulick's death. I am more astonished to learn that a note was directed to me, and was left by him. I knew him very slightly."

Gulick was very little known at college, excepting in musical circles. His brother, Dr. Luther Gulick, is superintendent of the physical department of the International Y. M. C. A. Training school at Springfield, Mass., with whom he stayed after the college terms had ended. His father, who is dead, was a missionary in Springfield.

The body was discovered by the chambermaid. All the rooms, it was supposed, were vacated. Every other student in the house had gone to recitation. The body was partially dressed and lay almost beneath a window.

The body of the unfortunate young man was hurriedly removed from the college building to an undertaker's shop, where it awaits the orders of relatives. Dr. Gulick, who was hastily telegraphed for, arrived late last night. He was prostrated with grief. The young suicide was last seen alive Thursday. He then appeared to be in good health and spirits. Dr. Gulick says the motive of the deed is a mystery; as his brother, always seemed to be cheerful. There were no domestic or other troubles that would lead to the act.

Springfield, Mass., Dec. 1.—Pierre J. Gulick, the Harvard sophomore, who committed suicide, is well known in this city. His father, Rev. Dr. Luther Halsey Gulick, a veteran missionary died here April 8, 1891.

Young Gulick was born in Italy, where his father was engaged in missionary work among the Roman Catholics. The five years of his life previous to his entering Harvard college in the fall of 1893, were spent in this city. He entered the Springfield High school in 1891, becoming a member of the junior class and graduating in 1893, with honors.

Although retiring and a young man who had few intimate friends he showed no signs of melancholia while living here. Besides his brother, Dr. Gulick he leaves two sisters, Mrs. F. F. Jewett, wife of Prof. Jewett, of Oberlin college, and Mrs. C. A. Clark, wife of a missionary of the American board in Japan, and two brothers, Rev. Sidney L. Gulick, a missionary in Japan, and Rev. E. L. Gulick, a pastor at Groton. His mother died here a few months ago.

PRINCE BISMARCK'S CONDITION

Too Ill to Take the Body of His Wife to Schoenhausen.

Berlin, Dec. 1.—Dr. Schweninger has left Varzin for Berlin. The date of the removal of the body of Princess Bismarck to Schoenhausen has not yet been fixed.

Prince Bismarck is not at present in a condition to make the journey.

Vessels Wrecked in a Gale.

St. Johns, N. F., Dec. 1.—The British steamer Louisburg, from Montreal has arrived here. Her officers report having encountered terrific weather in the gulf of St. Lawrence, her deck load having been washed overboard. The following vessels were lost at Bonavista during the great gale: Schooners Fortune, Emerline and North Star with general cargoes of provisions. Schooner Shamrock, with 700 quintals of fish. Three other vessels names not given. All crews were saved.

More of the Broom Trust.

Amsterdam, N. Y., Dec. 1.—The following broom concerns have formed a trust company under the name of the American Broom and Brush company: Goodman Manufacturing company, of Richmond, Va.; Dallas Broom company, of Dallas, Penn.; E. Howard & Sons, of Fort Hunter, and Myers & Parker, of Fultonville. The company has bought the broom plant of John D. Blood & Co., in this city, which is the oldest and largest in the country.

General Grant in Marble.

Washington, Dec. 1.—In addition to the statues of Daniel Webster and General Stark, which are to be put in place in Statuary hall at the capito soon after the convening of congress, it is expected that the Grand Army statue of General Grant will be raised into position at an early day. This work of art, prepared in Rome, has remained inthe capital rotunda inclosed in the same box in which it was shipped from Italy ever since the adjournment of congress last summer.

Counterfeiters in Newark.

Newark, N. J., Dec. 1.—Henry Hill and John C. Hann, both of New York have been arrested her for counterfeiting. Three hundred and fifty counterfeit silver dollars were found in their possession.

Father Shoots His Son.

Luray, Va., Dec. 1.—T. S. Brown, of Stanley, shot and mortally wounded his son William in that town, while the young man was beating his stepmother.

Local Weather Forecast.

Showers; warmer; southeasterly winds.

BUSINESS IS BETTER.

An Improvement Noticed in Most Eastern Cities.

New York, Dec. 1.—There is no general or radical improvement in business at the south, the southwest or the northwest, says Bradstreet's report, but in the middle and New England states the reverse is true; a material gain in demand for many seasonable staples having shown itself with a corresponding increase in volumes of goods distributed or ordered for future delivery. Decreases in price of steel rails and bars, cattle, hogs, Indian corn and naval stores are reported, but quotations for structural iron, rice, whiskey, tobacco, pork, coffee and sugar are steady. It should be explained that rails are now held at $22, the lowest price on record, and that steel billets and pig iron are respectively $2 and $1.50 below English quotations. New England woolen mills are generally well supplied with spring orders. At Philadelphia some worsted spinners have had to refuse orders for immediate delivery, and textile manufacturers report good orders for delivery after January 1. The eastern jewelry trade is smaller than in October and September, but the wholesale dry goods business is much larger in November than October, and there is a much better feeling among textile manufacturers.

A stimulating influence of a purely statistical nature is the decrease of 2,068,000 bushels of wheat in the quantity afloat for and in store in Europe last week, thus nearly, though not quite, overcoming the increase of 2,128,000 bushels of wheat available in the United States and Canada last week. Exports of wheat (and flour as wheat), both coasts, amount to 2,667,000 bushels this week, against 3,312,000 bushels last week, 2,440,000 bushels in the week one year ago, 4,533,000 bushels in the last week of November, 1892 and as compared with 5,662,000 bushels in that week of 1891.

MORE GOLD CERTIFICATES.

Secretary Carlisle Will Probably Resume the Issue.

Washington, Dec. 1.—It is believed that Secretary Carlisle, now that the gold reserve has passed the mark of $100,000,000, will resume the issue of gold certificates for such additional gold as may be subsequently deposited, when such certificates are desired. It is generally conceded that this law bearing on the subject is mandatory in its provisions as it "authorizes and directs" the secretary of the treasury to issue gold certificates for gold deposited in sums of $20 and over. No question exists that the law is mandatory in prohibiting the isue of gold certificates after the gold reserve falls below the $100,000,000 point, and in April, 1893, when the gold reserve was first invaded an order was issued to that effect. In February last when the gold reserve was increased by the first bond issue to $105,000,000, no gold certificates were issued, because so far as known no demand was made for them and the reserve stood at over $100,000,000 only for a few weeks. When all the gold for the last issue of bonds is paid in, the reserve will reach nearly $115,000,000, and it is thought it will continue above the $100,000,000 limit for some time to come. Consequently there will be no danger in resuming the issue of gold certificates for new gold deposited.

MR. CLEVELAND'S AILMENT.

Unseasonable Weather Compels Him to Remain at Home.

Washington, Dec. 1.—Owing to the unfavorable weather to-day it was thought best for the President to remain at Woodley and not to venture out of doors, and the cabinet meeting for to-day was abandoned. It is also stated that there is no business that needs the attention of the cabinet. If there are matters upon which any of the cabinet desire to consult the President they will drive to Woodley. Private Secretary Thurber says that the president is improving, and is much better, and it was only because the damp weather was thought likely to have a bad effect upon his rheumatism that the trip to the White House was abandoned.

Dedicated by Mgr. Satolli.

Wilmington, Del., Dec. 1.—Catholics of the diocese of Wilmington had the honor of a visit from Mgr. Satolli, the papal delegate, who came to join in the re-dedication of St. Joseph's church at Duponts Banks, after its enlargement and general improvement. He also participated in the blessing of the three handsome altars recently presented to the church by J. Smith Brennan, of Wilmington, by the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and by the sodality of the church. The services at the church began with a mass celebrated at the house of sisters by Dr. Papi, Mgr Satolli's secretary. Then the ceremonies of dedication and the blessing of the altars began. They were participated in by Mgr. Satolli, Bishop Curtis and the Catholic clergy of this city.

Bland for Governor.

Washington, Dec. 1.—Congressman Bland is being urged to become a candidate for governor of Missouri in 1896. Lively correspondence looking to this end is going on between Washington and Missouri. It is deemed highly important by Mr. Bland's friends that he authorize an announcement of his intentions at once. The only other candidate likely to be before the convention is Judge Gibson, of Kansas City. This is not the first time Mr. Bland has been urged to become a candidate for governor. Up to the time of his defeat for congress, however, he would not listen to it. Now it is claimed that he is giving the matter serious consideration.

Football Player Shot.

San Francisco, Dec. 1.—"Brick" Whitehouse, a prominent footbal player, and member of the Stamford University eleven, was shot and killed here by Alexander Loughborough.

Irwin Will Pay Up.

Pittsburg, Pa., Dec. 1.—George M Irwin, the discretionary pool operator has arranged to pay up all his clients, and proceedings against him will be dropped.

State Canals Closed.

NAILED TO THE CROSS

Armenian Peasants Tortured by Kurds.

Despite Turkish Denials the Butchery of Christians Continues Unabated—Another Horrible Chapter of the Slaughter Given by a Physician Whom England Saved from Death.

London, Dec. 1.—Another chapter of horrible details has been added to the almost incredible tale of Armenian atrocities. Men crucified head downwards, youths murdered before their agonized parents' eyes, women compelled to save their honor at the cost of a would-be ravisher's life, men burned alive—all these are added to the long list of Turkish cruelty.

Dr. G. Thoumaian, who was one of the Armenian physicians at Herrick college, Marsovan, Asia Minor, and who was sentenced to death and forced to undergo terrible torture, being finally released through thee intervention of Great Britain in July, 1893, has made public the latest details of the Turkish outrages which have come into his possesion. Dr. Thoumaian writes:

"The chief of police of Moosh, which is the headquarters of the Sassoon district, went with a number of gendarmes to the village of Tchurig and nailed the headman and some others head downward to a cross, beat them and drenched them alternately with hot and cold water.

"The chief of police then attempted to dishonor the wife of one of the victims, and the unfortunate woman seizing a knife, plunged it into the chief's brain, whereupon the gendarmes made a general slaughter of the peasants.

"The Armenian villages on the plains of Moosh and Bitlis, in the vicinity of Sassoon and Van, have been fired and their streets made to run with blood. From Marnig over one hundred oxen and one thousand sheep have been driven off and the same has occurred at Colossig and Havaborig.

"The villages of Kozloo and Sheik-Aghoob have been sacked by Kurds and two young girls were made captives. At another village a miller was burned alive. At Hanzashiek three Armenians were murdered.

"This is only a daily tale of the horrors in the villages on the plains of Moosh. If these authentic details come from villages on the open plain, what must be the truth in distant places in the mountains of Sassoon?

"In September, 112 Kurds appeared in the village of Baghezig, ostensibly for the purchase of supplies, eating, drinking and carousing all day. They plundered the village, robbed the church of its costly vestments and rode away.

"On the following day the band of Kurds raided the village of Faroagi and stole fifty head of cattle and a herd of sheep belonging to the celebrated monastery of Varaka. In the village of Daghveran, two youths were openly butchered by Kurds before the eyes of their helpless relatives.

"I could give pages and pages of such horrors done to my people. None of these wrongs have been redressed nor will they be so long as Bahri Pasha, himself a Kurd, remains governor general of Van. He is the greatest enemy of the Armenian race.

"When the Porte tried to hinder Armenians from emigrating to Russia and Persia this ferocious fanatic explained that the Porte could get rid of the Christians and at the same time get their land. Since October 1893, 179 families have emigrated from Aghpac to Persia.

"Quite recently Bahri Pasha made a tour of that district and confiscated all the property of absent Armenians including those who had gone away on business. Those who returned were thrown into prison.

Rome, Dec. 1.—The christian Armenians, having vainly appealed to all nations to prevent the Turks from periodically slaughtering them, have now asked the Pope to interfere.

THIRTEEN PERSONS POISONED

Arsenic Said to Have Been Thrown in Bud Turner's Well.

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 1.—Thirteen persons on Bud Turner's plantation, near Calhoun, Ga., are ill from poison. All of the Turner family and several of the servants are very sick. The symptoms indicate arsenical poisoning.

At first it was thought that fresh hog meat had caused the illness of the family, and an investigation was made to discover trichinae, but thus far no trace of it has been found.

The last report from Calhoun is that arsenic had been thrown in the well but by whom it has not yet been learned.

Burned in the Guard House.

RAPIDLY BREAKING DOWN

MRS. S. BATES TELLS THE STORY OF HER SUFFERINGS.

How She Was Cured By Munyon's Little Pellets After Physicians Had Failed.

Mrs. S. Bates, of Cecil, N. J., adds her testimony to that of the thousands who have been saved from a life of suffering by Munyon's Remedies. She said: "I had suffered greatly with indigestion and stomach trouble. Everything I ate distressed me, I was nervous and fretful and rapidly breaking down. Physicians had failed to help me, nor did any of the many remedies I took relieve me until I began using Munyon's Dyspepsia Cure. The result was astonishing. After taking but three doses I felt greatly improved, and after taking one 25c. bottle I was entirely cured."

Munyon's Stomach and Dyspepsia Cure cures all forms of indigestion and stomach troubles such as constipation, rising of food, distress after eating, bloating of the stomach, palpitation of the heart, shortness of breath and all affections of the heart caused by indigestion. It soothes, heals and invigorates stomachs that have been weakened by over-eating, or where the lining of the stomach has been impaired by physic and injurious medicines. Price 25 cents.

Munyon's Homoeopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

BLOWS ARE RULED OUT

Yale and Princeton Must Play Gentle Football.

Superintendent Byrnes Issues Orders That No Brutality Is to Be Permitted at Manhattan Field, and Two Hundred Policemen Will See That He Is Obeyed—Before the Game.

New York, Dec. 1.—Despite the cloudy weather and promise of rain or snow, Manhattan field was the Mecca of fashionable people from an early hour this morning. The snow and rain of yesterday made the ground rocky and for a time it loked as though the game would not take place. Capt Hinkey and Trenchard, however, decidede that the thousands of ticket holders could not be disappointed, and that the game should be played. The struggle will not begin until this afternoon and the result will necessarily be late.

Supt. Byrnes announced yesterday morning that the police detailed to Manhattan field will permit no brutality in to-morrow's game.

Inspectator Conlon will be in command of a detail of 250 men stationed about the field. The inspector was fully instructed this morning by the superintendent that should the game develop anything other than a purely scientific contest, it should be treated exactly as would a prize fight. He would not allow, said the superintendent, a lot of college youths or any other players, to act like a lot of pugilists and possibly maim each other for life under thee excuse of football rules.

His orders were explicit and commanded the inspector to stop the game at thee first sign of brutality manifested.

About 200 of the officers will be stationed at regular posts about the grid iron, while the remainder will be assigned to duty at the gates, in the grand stand and among the crowd who may not feel financially strong enough to purchase seats inthe grand stand.

Reports from various points of police interference because of the unseemly conduct of football players led the superintendent to remark that people who hesitated to attend thee game because of a fear their tender sensibilities might be socked by an exhibition of slugging need have no fear upon that score.

Both teams presented a fine appearance this morning. There appears to be little choice between them, though betting men are giving odds on Yale.

Princeton has had a good rest since the game with Pennsylvania, and though one of her best men was laid up the team is much stronger than when it faced the Quakers. Princeton claims that only six of twenty plays were used against Pennsylvania, as she did not want to show her hand to Yale by introducing any of the new tricks. A change was also made in the make-up of the team, and which it is said, was for the better. Captain Trenchard has been practicing kicking since the game at Trenton and he became quite an adept in the line. He will occupy this position, and Cochran, the regular full back, will take his place at end.

Little Poe, who played at quarter back against Pennsylvania, has done so well in practice that Captain Trenchard has decided to play him at half back opposite Rosengarten. Ward, of course, will play quarter back. This change Captain Trenchard thinks is a good one. Morse is anxious to play and he may take Rosengarten's place at the last moment.

Yale will be minus the services of Jeremy and Greenway. As excellent substitutes have been placed in their positions the absence of these two men will not be felt.

DEATH CLAIMS TWO MORE.

The Victims of the Southbridge Disaster Now Number Four in All.

Southbridge, Mass., Dec. 1. — Two more of the football players in the barge which was struck by the New York and New England train yesterday, are dead. The list of the dead now is:

Charles Gauthier, thirty, Southbridge; Joseph Cook, eighteen, Southbridge; John Street, twenty-two, Lee, Mass., the half back of the Williams College freshman, eleven; Victor Nelson, twenty-three, Southbridge.

Those dangerously injured are Andrew Taylor, Southbridge, Southbridge Alfred E. Hughes, nineteen, Southbridge, and Charles Simpson, seventeen, Southbridge. Little hope is entertained for the recovery of Taylor. Other than the above three, the injured members of the party will recover.

ARKANSAS FOREST FIRES.

Much Damage Done in Southern Parts of That State.

Arkansas City, Ark., Dec. 1.—The woods are all burning in this vicinity. The damage to grazing lands in the bottoms will be great. It is feared that some hunting parties have been lost in the swamps of this county. Steamboats cannot pass this city now and it will be some days before they can do so.

The fire may continue a week longer, unless there is rain. There has been no rain for four months.

King Declines Re-election.

New York, Dec. 1.—At a meeting of the Erie railroad directors here, President John King declined re-election and Mr. E. B. Thomas was given the office.

Head Master Brown Killed.

Quincy, Mass., Dec. 1.—Sylvester Brown, head master of the Martin school, Boston, was instantly killed at the Wollaston depot by the Newport express, which tore off the top of his head.

Great Colonizing Scheme.

Pittsburg, Dec. 1.—Real estate men have purchased 50,000 acres of ground in Craven County, Ga., and have arranged to establish a colony there with eighty families from here.

READY FOR THE TAX.

Printing Done to Collect on Income in a Few Weeks.

Washington, Dec. 1.—Secretary Carlisle has upon his desk the complete regulations, as prepared by Superintendent Pugh for putting the income tax into effect. He will give them consideration probably next week. The regulations are very voluminous, as they now stand and provide as far as can now be foreseen for every conceivable question that may arise in the execution of that law.

Two forms are provided, one for the return of the income of individuals and one for the return of corporations. The latter form provides for every kind of corporation taxable under thee law. A curious feature of the law is the section that directs that "profits realized within thee year from sales of real estate purchased within two years previous to the close of the year for which the income is estimated "shall be subject to taxation. What constitutes "profits and gains" in the eye of the law is a question that the treasury officials fear will prove perplexing. As during the present fiscal year there will be only six months' expenses to be incurred, from January 1, 1895, to June 30, 1895, in carrying out the law it is probable that Secretary Carlisle's urgency estimate on acount of the income tax will not be more than $300,000, but that appropriation for the next fiscal year when the law will be in full operation, it is expected will reach $400,000 or perhaps more. So far but $700 of the appropriation of $9,000 for putting this law into effect have been expended, but when all the necessary printing is done, this amount will be nearly, if not entirely, exhausted.

EFFECT ON FINANCE.

Results of the Bond Issue in Stock and Security Markets.

New York, Dec. 1.—Speculation in stocks displays little response to the success of the government bond issue the influence of the large over-subscription being overcome by the failure of foreign interests to obtain any considerable share of the new issue. The market having also withstood the reduction of the Northwestern dividendto a 5 per cent. basis, has finally succumbed to the shutting down of the Sugar truset refineries, which action, though the allegation is that the trade is on an unprofitable basis, is otherwise construed in Wall street. Foreign exchange is strong at 4.87¾ for demand sterling, houses which drew in expectation of alotments of new 5 per cent. United States bonds having been purchasers. Gold exports seem probable in the near future. Silver is demoralized by sellers of eastern bills on the part of the Japanese government, coupled with fears that Japan may insist on a war indemnity from China in gold and not in silver. There is an increased demand for funds at Chicago (notably from packers) and at Milwaukee. At New Orleans increased ease in the money market is the feature.

HOME RULE FOR CITIES.

Papers on It Read at the Christian Sociology Meeting.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 1.—At the session of the American Institute of Christian Sociology, John R. Commons, professor of political economy at the Indiana University, read three papers on "City Government." The first dealt with the problem of home rule for cities, Mr Commons advocating administrative control. The second was on "Municipal Administration," the speaker recommending civil service reform in all departments. The third paper dealt with the common council. Prof. Commons belived in a government by a mayor and cabinet as a substitute for the council.

Prof. Herron read a paper on "The Social Inspiration."

The principal address was by Prof Samuel Dickie on "Temperance Reform and Civic Righteousness." He pointed out the necessity for temperance reform before reaching a state of civic righteousness.

EX-SENATOR BROWN DEAD.

A Millionaire, Ex-Governor and a Figure in National Politics.

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 1.—Ex-Senator Joseph E. Brown died at his home here. He has been in feeble health for many months, but his death was not looked for so soon.

He was governor of Georgia for four terms, serving during the late war. He was senator for two terms, and at the time of his death was seventy-five years old. Senator Brown was also at one time chief justice of Georgia. He leaves an estate valued at many millions.

Accident to the Ericsson.

New London, Conn., Dec. 1.—The torpedo boat Ericsson had another misfortune when she went on the course on Long Island Sound for a preliminary run to test the machinery preparatory to the speed trial. She reeled off the miles at a rattling pace, said to be about 25 knots per hour, when her low pressure piston rod broke, wrecking the low pressure cylinder. The Ericsson limped back into the harbor, where she must remain for many days to repair.

Sentenced Almost for Life

Fort Smith, Ark., Dec. 1.—Thurman Balding, alias "Skeeter," Jesse Snyder and Will Ferris, all members of the Cook gang, were sentenced in the United States court. "Skeeter" received thirty years and Snyder and Ferris twenty years each.

Winsted, Conn., Dec. 1.—The managers of the Franklin Moore bolt works announced to their employees that commencing Monday they will run five days a week. For the past six months the works have run 28 ½ hours each week.

"Protection" in Boston.

Boston, Dec. 1.—Policeman Lewis G. Smith and John J. Ryan have been placed on trial by thee police commissioners, charged with having received money for "protection" from Harry Sampson, a resturant keeper.

The Astor Tramp on Trial.

New York, Dec. 1.—John Garvey, the the tramp who entered the Astor home and went to sleep in one of the beds, has been placed on trial in the court of general sessions, charged with burglary.

PEACE NEAR AT HAND

Early Settlement of the Japanese War Expected.

Negotiations Being Carried on by Ministers Dun and Denby Are Nearing a Successful Termination—The Ministers Not to Specify the Conditions on Which China Is Willing to Make Peace.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 1.—Unofficial advices received here state that the negotiations for peace between China and Japan, with the United States ministers at Pekin and Tokio as the medium of communication, are proceeding satisfactorily.

Neither of these gentlemen will be permitted either by the United States government or Japan to specify the conditions on which China is willing to make peace. It is their duty to bring the two nations together, and this being done, their official connection with the matter ceases. Unofficially, however, each gentleman may be of service in expediting the work of peace.

The report that Great Britain purposes making a great naval demonstration at Chusan to-day falls flat in diplomatic circles. It is argued that the time has passed when Japan can be influenced by any movement of that character.

It is plainly evident that Mr. Gustav Dietering was incontinently snubbed by Count Ito, the Japanese minister of foreign affairs. Tokio dispatches state that he was not permitted to see the Japanese minister, and this report is confirmed in other quarters.

He may have made overtures of peace to Count Ito indirectly, but this is doubted. The impresion here is that his mission ended in a flat failure.

It is asserted that the peace envoys from China will be selected by the Yamen, and will, no doubt, consist of members of that body. Count Ito, it is said, will doubtedly be one of the envoys on the part of Japan, and it is not unlikely that Okuma may be one of his associates. Okuma has held in the past the portfolios of finance and foreign affairs. He is a man of brilliant parts and tried ability.

Meanwhile, the victorious Japanese are pushing on to Moukden, the capital of Manchuria. The capture of this place, it is said, will be a matter of easy accomplishment, and will be almost as humiliating to China's pride as the fall of Pekin.

Moukden is the "Sacred Capital." It has been for many generations the home of the present Chinese dynasty, and the foot of the western barbarian seldom touches its soil. It lies in the heart of a fertile country and the Japanese troops can, if desired, spend the wintere there comfortably.

The capture of Wei-Hei-Wei by the Japanese is daily expected. Its capture will be mere incident of thee march to Pekin, but it is not doubted to be a part of the Japanese programme to invest it before proceeding further into the interior.

Shanghai, Dec. 1.—The successive defeats sustained by the Chinese armies and fleet are generally attributed by the native population of this and other cities in China to the influence of the German advisers of Li Hung Chang, whose only aim is self-aggrandizement.

London, Dec. 1.—A despatch from Chee-Foo asserts that terms of peace between Japan and China have been very nearly completed through the medium of the United States ministers at Tokio and Pekin, and the feeling of security is so strong that many foreigners are returning to Pekin.

Divers from this place are examining the Chinesee warship Chen-Yuen, which recently went ashore near Wei-Hai-Wei, and repairs upon the ship have already begun.

AFRAID OF TRAIN ROBBERS.

Missouri Pacific Discontinues Night Trains on One of It's Branches.

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 1.—An order has been issued by General Manager Doddridge of the Missouri Pacific Railroad company discontinuing after Dec. 9 all night passenger trains on the Kansas & Arkansas Valley division, running between Coffeyville, Kan., and Van Buren, Ark.

Mr. Doddridge says the present condition of affairs in the territory resulting from the recent hold-ups made by the numerous bands of outlaws in that section of the country has compelled him to take this action to protect the passengers of his road. The day trains will run as usual.

Did Not Originate at Evelyn.

Princeton, N. J. Dec. 1.—An investigation was made by the Princeton board of health into the origin of diphtheria in Evelyn College, where Miss Lindsley, of Utica, N. Y., and Miss Burroughs, of Manasquan, N. J., died of the disease. The report of the board is that the disease did not originate at Evelyn, but was introduced there from some other locality.

Standard Oil Officers Safe.

Albany, Dec. 1.—Gov. Flower has refused to allow the Texas authorities to extradite the Standard Oil officials, on the ground that as none of them had been in Texas they were not fugitives from that state.

Chloroformed His Horses.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 1.—Mayor Pingree, not having use for his carriage horses this winter, has had them chloroformed to death. They were valuable but he refused to sell them, fearing they would be abused.

Seely Seen in Canada.

New York, Dec. 1.—Samuel Seely, ex-bookkeeper of the Shoe and Leather bank, who embezzled $354,000, has been seen in Canada. A $5,000 reward has been offered for his capture.

Robbed on Kingston Streets.

Kingston, N. Y., Dec. 1.—Herbert Snowman, an inventor, was held up here by three well dressed men and robbed of $700.

Killed in a Runaway.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 1.—N. King, a painter, was killed here by being thrown form his wagon, his horse having bolted.

From him this flattery came to her like some delicate perfume, and though her pleasurable emotion struggled with her reason, she was powerless to resist absorbing it.

"You will perhaps tell Maj. Passmore of our—our conclusions?" she asked.

"Would it not come better from you, being your case?"

"Oh, no; I fancy he would value—that is, your declaration would have more weight."

"Very well, if you think so. But let us see; how can it be put? We can't say boldly: 'You must let your niece marry this young fellow, or—'"

"Oh, no, that would never do; Maj. Passmore is so dogmatical."

"Ah! I have it! We can say your niece is suffering from a peculiar affection of the heart, and we recommend that you place her under the care of Dr. Plyne, who has made a special study of and understands the complaint."

"Oh, yes, yes, that would do splendidly!" cried Ilelen. "But he doesn't know Walter Plyne is practising."

"All the better."

"But if, when he learns who he is, he refuses?"

"We must abandon the case."

"Would you?"

"Decidedly, I should support you."

"And it would serve him right, for he is an arrogant old skeptic. He has treated me with ill-concealed contempt ever since I took the case."

"Oh, he has, has he? That must have sadly tried your patience," said Dr. Lancewood, with earnest sympathy.

"He has. He is not the only scoffer. There are masculine women, too; some who patronize, some who sneer, and others so narrow-minded and cynical they make the career of a woman doctor positively unendurable!"

Tears of vexation were precious near, as she uttered this passionate protest; so near that his tender rejoinder brought them glistening and trembling on her long, dark lashes.

"Yes, yes, I can quite understand, Helen, the heathen bigotry you have had to contend with. It is crushing enough to a young man beginning practice, but to an earnest, sensitive young woman it is cruel, atrocious, inhuman!"

She hastily brushed away the moisture from her eyes as she remarked: "Those are the only words of sympathy I have heard in my three years' practice."

"Oh, Helen!" he cried, passionately, grasping her hand as she rose from the table, "if it had not been for my folly with Annie Grice, I might have saved you from all this social torture."

"It was not your folly, Dr. Lancewood," she said, turning away.

"Oh! yes it was, Helen."

"No; it—it was mine. Annie afterwards told me she had deliberately angled for you—but—but—I was too proud to apologize for the wrong I had done you—I—I—do so now," with an effort to suppress the tremor in her voice.

Encouraged by her wavering manner he drew her firmly towards him, and said:

"Let us forget that, Helen—my darling!"

There was a moment's resistance, a swift upward glance from her moist eyes, a half-smothered sob, a gasp; then what had been the haughty female physician melted into the confiding, tremulous woman, with her head pressed against his heart.

"Oh! Helen, Helen! What precious years of your sweet companionship I have lost!" he cried, at length releasing her.

"Yes, and I of yours, Gerald. And to think if it had not been for this consultation—"

"It might have been forever, darling. I shall always bless the day I was summoned here."

"And I. Oh! Gerald," she exclaimed, glancing in the mirror; "I fear my tear-stained eyes will betray us, when we report to Maj. Passmore."

"Oh! no, Helen; you can put on your veil, and remain in the shade, and leave me to conduct the matter."

"Very well. Ring the bell, and let us get it over."

CHAPTER III.—MAJ. PASSMORE DISSENTS.

When Aunt Ruth and Maj. Passmore came into the room Dr. Lancewood, in his grave, professional manner, said: "After a long and serious consideration of your niece's case, I have to report on behalf of Dr. Glade and myself, there is nothing to be done, so far as we can aid her."

"You don't mean to say," gasped Maj. Passmore, "her case is hopeless?"

"Well yes—and no."

"No and yes. What do you mean? Has her case been neglected?"

"Yes. It has got beyond our control."

"I feared so! I thought Miss Glade did not comprehend it."

"Ha! There you wrong her. Dr. Glade understood the case much better than I did—than I ever should."

"Then why did she not tell us sooner—this is criminal negligence—I shall hold her responsible!" flashing a look of contempt at Helen.

"Pardon me, Maj. Passmore. Dr. Glade has done all that could be done."

"But if the case is hopeless."

"In our hands it is. But there is hope in another direction. In a word, Miss Constance is suffering from a peculiar affection of the heart."

"Oh, it's not the lungs, then?"

"No. Now we recommend you to place her under the care of Dr. Plyne."

"Plyne, Plyne, Dr. Plyne—who is he? The name seems familiar."

"A heart specialist, associated with Dr. Wrench here."

Maj. Passmore looked searchingly from Dr. Lancewood to Helen.

"Is this Dr. Plyne a recent graduate?" he asked.

"He is, and as a matter of fact, I believe, a relation of yours."

"Oh, I see, I see," cried Maj. Passmore, his face assuming a vermillion hue. "Hum! And you, Dr. Lancewood, lend yourself to this feminine conspiracy?"

"Oh, Roger, don't say that," cried Aunt Ruth, timorously.

"Hold your tongue, Ruth!" fiercely.

"I lend myself to nothing of the kind—it is my conviction." Then Dr. Lancewood rapidly gave his reasons. When he had concluded, Maj. Passmore said:

"I shall do nothing of the kind. I'll not have him in the house."

"Very well," said Helen rising, "then I relinquish the case."

"I am glad you do. Lancewood, you'll manage it better alone."

"I shall have nothing further to do with it, sir. I agree with Dr. Glade. We have given you our opinion; if you follow your own, you must be responsible for the consequences. Good-day, sir; good-day, Miss Passmore." And with dignified urbanity, Dr. Lancewood followed Helen into the hall.

Maj. Passmore was beside himself with uncontrollable rage.

"Lancewood," he exclaimed from the door, "that girl's bewitched you; she's leading you by the nose—you've lost your wits—you'll regret this, mark my words!"

"Maj. Passmore," said Dr. Lancewood, with exasperating coolness, "I am sorry to see you have permitted your habitual brusqueness to degenerate into rudeness."

Before the irate major could reply, the door was closed, and the two doctors were gone.

"Oh, Gerald, you carried it off splendidly," said Helen as they drove away.

Two days later Maj. Passmore sent Dr. Lancewood a note asking him to call, and apologizing for his conduct. At first Dr. Lancewood decided to ignore the call, but Helen said:

"Yes, do, Gerald, for the poor girl's sake; think of our own case." So Dr. Lancewood answered the summons.

"Are you still of the same opinion?" asked Maj. Passmore when they were together.

"Quite," answered Dr. Lancewood, firmly. "Because if you do not the girl may not live a year, for if her system becomes reduced her constitutional weakness will supervene, and her decline will be rapid."

"SHE'S TOO YOUNG TO MARRY YET."

"I cannot close my eyes to the danger; still, this young Plyne, I mistrust, is mercenary."

"You are mistaken about that. I have seen him, and I have questioned Dr. Wrench about his ability. He will make his way in the world. He has been a conscientious student, and he will make a successful practitioner. If he remains with Dr. Wrench he will ultimately come into a valuable practice. Therefore I see no reason why you should oppose his union with your niece."

"She's too young to marry—yet."

"You may withhold your sanction until the irreparable mischief is done."

"This is your own individual conviction?"

"It is."

"Then I suppose I must submit, for Ruth is of the same opinion and never gives me any peace over the matter. I'm anxious to do what is right for the girl, so—so if you will be so kind you may bring Dr Plyne to-morrow."

"I will do so," said Dr. Lancewood.

One morning at breakfast, six months later, Maj Passmore received by mail the wedding cards of Dr. Helen Glade and Dr Gerald Lancewood.

"There, Ruth!" he exclaimed, handing his sister the cards, "I told you that girl had bewitched him!"

[THE END.]

Anyone who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cents bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. "THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE"

BY STEPHEN CRANE.

It is a war story of remarkable power and contains descriptive passages that rise to the highest levels of Tolstoi and Zola. There are scenes in it which show how death comes to the soldier while he is still on his feet and even unconscious that he is hurt. The story is full of action. Mr W. D. Howells says of this young writer that he is the most promising now before the public. Mr. Hamlin Garland also ranks him very high in a bit of recent criticism. "The Red Badge of Courage" is the best piece of fiction Mr. Crane has yet written Don't fail to read the opening chapters on Dec. 3.

SCOTT'S PRIZES.

They Are a Fine Lot and Will Be Placed on Exhibition.

Monte Scott covered himself with glory last week at the races in Madison Square Garden and captured eight very handsome prizes. His riding throughout was first-class, and he showed the same dash and vim that so many Plainfielders have admired in him on the Crescent Oval. The prizes are at the home of his manager, Clarence Teel, North avenue, and probably will be exhibited in the window of J. Hervey Doane's store on Park avenue. They are as follows:

Tuesday, 1 mile Class B., second prize, silver Swiss watch; 5 mile championship, third prize, diamond locket. Thursday, 5 mile scratch, second prize, Mexican onyx table; one-mile indoor championship, third prize, silver mounted umbrella. Friday, 2-mile handicap, second prize, gold watch; 1-mile lap race, third prize, cut glass claret jar. Saturday, 5-mile scratch, third prize, banquet lamp, onyx and gold with silk shade; 3-mile scratch, third prize, gold and silver jardiniere vase.

Plainfield Republican Splits.

(From The Elizabeth Journal.)

Plainfield is furnishing, just at the present time, an illustration of the unwieldiness of a too large party majority. In general elections Plainfield Republicans present a solid front, and their majorities are magnificent. But in local elections they split up, and sometimes the splits are very beneficial. They split a year or two ago on city judge and elected a very good Democrat. They split last year on Chosen Freeholder. This year they split on the Congressional nomination and caused quite a little anxiety. And now, they are split on assessor in their local election. J. A. Hubbard, brother of Director Hubbard of the Board of Freeholders, has been assessor for many years, and a very excellent assessor he has been. But the First and Fourth ward Republicans, who are a little more restless than the others, managed to turn Mr. Hubbard down at the recent city convention, and considerable feeling was thereby created. Mr. Hubbard has consented to run without being nominated. The City Attorney has decided that pasters may be used on the regular tickets, and it looks as though Mr. Hubbard would stand a good chance of being elected again. But it is a very interesting struggle between local Republican factions. The Democrats have made no nominations.

The West End Coal Magnate.

George O. Stevens, who has long been in active business management of the coal trade of Davis & Stevens, has by the retirement of his partner become sole owner. The personal popularity of Mr. Stevens, his record of honorable dealing, and his square and upright treatment of his patrons, guarantee him a constantly increasing patronage. His yard and office are at West Front street and Grant avenue, and you can get him by telephone. Orders left with Stevens are promptly filled, and he supplies the best fuel in the market.

Complains of Her Husband.

Mrs. James Corrigan of Cottage place called on Sergeant Kiely yesterday morning and complained of her husband beating her.

The matter was referred to Chief Grant, and he told her to go before the City Judge, but as yet she has not done so.

She said that Policeman Dennis Carney, in whose house she lives, would not protect her from the assaults of her husband.

Will Not Be Senator.

[From The Elizabeth Journal.]

A Jersey City Republican suggests, in the N. Y. Tribune, the name of Roswell G. Horr of Plainfield for U. S. Senator from New Jersey. Well, if Mr. Horr made a speech everybody would listen. But he will not be Senator this time.

Guns Made to Kill.

The Elizabeth Journal remarks: "A fatal accident at New Brunswick, and another at Plainfield, on Thanksgiving Day, serve to emphasize the fact that guns are made to kill, and that death and destruction are always at the muzzle end of a gun. How long it takes men and boys to learn these terrible facts.

FATAL RIFLE BULLET.

Michael Evans Dies of His Wound in the Head.

THE BALL EXTRACTED AFTER DEATH

Coroner Boring Empanels a Jury of Plainfielders to Investigate the Shooting Affair—Burial Permit Issued, and Funeral Held Today.

Michael Evans, who was found Thursday morning lying unconscious in his dooryard, with a bullet wound in his head, died at Muhlenberg Hospital at 2:45 Sunday morning.

County Physician O'Reilly was notified, and he ordered a coroner's inquest.

Constable Rockafellow selected the following jury: W. W. Coriell, foreman; E. B. Titsworth, A. B. King, Isaac Brokaw, J. P. Mosher, Theodore Kurzhals, Henry Smith, Alonzo Townley, John Beerbower, U. B. Crane, L. O. Shepard and Sylvester Scribner.

They met at the Hospital this morning at 9. Coroner George Horing administered the oath.

County Physician O'Rielly was present, as were also Drs. Hedges, Murray, Tomlinson, Probasco and Mravlag, Judge Coddington, Chief Grant, Policeman McCue and a Daily Press reporter. After the jurors retired, Dr. Mravlag at the request of Dr. O'Reilly began a search for the bullet.

As a result of the autopsy, the bullet was found directly back of the brain, through which it had passed. The ball was very much flattened.

The coroner made an appointment for Thursday afternoon at 1:30, when the jurors will meet in the city court room and the case will be reviewed.

The Hebrews were very faithful to Evans during his illness. Two of their number were kept constantly at his bedside.

The funeral services were held this afternoon at 2, from the house of the deceased, Rabbi Gorwitz officiating. Delegations from the Bound Brook and Somerville Hebrew congregations were present. Those acting as pall-bearers were B. Guttman, J. A. Karet, M. Lichentritt, F. Marx, M. Abrams and S. Dreier.

Interment was made in the cemetery of the Plainfield Hebrew congregation, Gateville, near Bound Brook.

Kane and Walsh, the boys who did the shooting, are still held in the County Jail. Walsh takes the matter coolly, but Kane cries a great deal and is hysterical.

MOST EXCITING OF ALL.

Final Basketball Game in the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium.

The last of the basketball games was played in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium Saturday evening. It had been planned to have a game between the first teams of the High School and the North Plainfield Public School, but as a number of the High School boys were either injured or out of town, a team composed mostly of substitutes and a few outsiders played the North Plainfield team under the name of a picked Y. M. C. A. team. After the most exciting game of the week the Y. M. C. A. won 13 to 12.

The teams were made up as follows:

Y. M. C. A.		NORTH PLAINFIELD.
H. Richardson	right forward	H. Moore
J. V. Rittenhouse	left forward	W. Buell
G. Coard	right wing	R. Turrill
P. Voeseller	centre	W. Jeffreys
C. Dolliver	left wing	E. Peck
C. Pfender	right guard	L. Hummer
W. Littell	left guard	M. Honeyman

In the second half, C. Rittenhouse was substituted for Dolliver, and V. R. Schuyler for Coard. The four goals for North Plainfield were made on fouls, two by Moore and two by Buell. On the Y. M. C. A. team, Richardson threw a goal from the field and one on a foul, and Rittenhouse threw one from the field.

Very little team work was done by either side except between the forwards particularly on the Y. M. C. A. team. The play throughout the game was very hard, and much individual work was done. The game went in favor of the North Plainfield team until in the last half minute when Rittenhouse threw a goal from the field. After the game the High School boys and their friends marched to the refreshment room where they enjoyed ice-cream and cake, intermingled with the High School yell.

STATE CHILDREN'S HOME.

Plainfield Interested in the Spread of the Movement.

A meeting in the interest of the New Jersey Children's Home Society, which is an auxiliary the National Society, with headquarters in Chicago, was held in Trinity Reformed Church lecture-room yesterday afternoon.

After a few minutes spent in devotional exercises, led by J. D Spicer, chairman of the meeting, Rev. G. B. Young gave an account of the growth and work of this organization. The origin of the idea of placing homeless children in childless homes was conceived in the brain and heart of a Presbyterian pastor, Mr. Van-Arsdale of Illinois, eleven years ago. Two years later the first State charter was secured and today the Children's Home Society stands recorded as a national organization, eighteen of our States have fallen in line with the work, while others are asking for information as to plans and methods. A very clear idea of what this society is doing was given by Rev. M. T. Lamb, State Superintendent of New Jersey. He told how successful they had been in the West, that in the State of Iowa 760 homeless children had been placed in good homes, while their books showed 2,300 (more than three times the number furnished homes) applications which they had been unable to fulfil.

The fact that these children were not given homes as servants, but as loved members of families, was given particular emphasis by Mr. Lamb, the society answering all mercenary inquiries with the reply that they did not furnish servants.

Mr. Lamb refered to that love, in every one's heart, for the little children made manifest in a more or less marked degree, and how God's love for the poor homeless waifs was the same as for the child born in a palace, and that if given pure Christian influence and surroundings they stood as fair a chance as any to make a success of his or her life.

Mrs. Kimball, President of the Plainfield home, was present and told of the work of the home, and also offered her hearty co-operation with the work of the State Society.

As there were but a few of the churches represented, the appointing of a Local Advisory Board was deemed unwise. School Superintendent H. M. Maxson made a motion that a committee of three be selected with power to found a Local Board, which motion was carried. H. B. Newhall, H. M. Maxson and Rev. Cornelius Schenck were asked to serve on the committee to confer with Messrs. Lamb and Young at the close of the meeting.

MALICIOUS DESTRUCTION.

Bad Treatment of Sewer Pipes by Boys and Cranks.

The Press is informed that the sewer contractors are much annoyed by malicious injury to their pipes after they have been distributed along the streets.

At first they piled the pipes in the roadway, but at the request of Chief Doane, they have lately had them placed on the curb, so as to leave the carriage way clear in case of fire. The pipes are much less of an obstruction to travel in the latter position, and can do no injury to the grass at this season of the year.

The contractors are the losers by the delay in receiving pipes from the makers, and feel it a hardship, after their stock has been thinned out by a rigid inspection, to have it further reduced by malicious boys or cranky property-owners who throw the pipes from the curb into the street.

Either class should be promptly prosecuted if detected.

Important to Commercial Travelers.

On and after Dec. 1, Baggage Agents of the B. & O. R. R. Co. will accept coupons from mileage books issued by B. & O. R. R., P. & W. R'y, B. & O. S. W. Southwestern Mileage Advertising Books, nor books older than one year from date of issue. 2t

Mrs. Wells to Speak.

A meeting will be held in Vincent Chapel, Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 4, at 2:30, under the auspices of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the M. E. Church. Mrs. Mary Leonard Wells will make the address. She is conversant with all kinds of missionary work, also a very gifted speaker, and will certainly interest and instruct all who hear her. A cordial invitation is extended to all, especially the women of the local societies.

Mr. Ira P. Wetmore, a prominent real estate agent of San Angelo, Texas, has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in his family for several years as occasion required, and always with perfect success. He says: "I find it a perfect cure for our baby when troubled with colic or dysentery. I now feel that my outfit is not complete without a bottle of this Remedy at home or on a trip away from home. For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

OBITUARY.

Lewis E. Clark.

The death of Lewis E. Clark occurred at his home, Central avenue and Fourth street, Saturday evening about 6, after an illness of only a few hours. He was seized with heart failure about 10 in the morning, and sank gradually and gently into a final sleep.

Mr. Clark was 71 years of age. For years he had been the faithful clerk of the Board of School Trustees, and previously had served as collector. He leaves two sons and two daughters. The funeral will take place from his late residence, 326 Central avenue, Wednesday afternoon at 2:30.

Mr. Clark had a stroke of paralysis about six years ago, and since then had lived a quiet, retired life.

Mr. Clark was a consistent member of the Crescent Avenue Church.

—Putnam & DeGraw are making great preparation for their Chrismas trade.

—Constable Moffett has served the writs issued by Justice Nash in the cases of Clifton & Campbell against Samuel Corrigan, for $135.17, and Clifton against Samuel Corrigan for $10.25.

ELECTION TOMORROW.

Liberal Distribution of Paster Ballots.

TWO SPLIT TICKETS IN THE FIELD.

Assessor Hubbard's Friends Will Vote for Him in Spite of Mr. MacDonald's Withdrawal—Pasters Out for School Trustees.

The regular municipal election of Plainfield city takes place tomorrow. There are two regular tickets in the field—Republican and Socialist-Labor. The Democrats have made no nominations.

In spite of J. F. MacDonald's withdrawal, the friends of J. A. Hubbard will continue in their plan of re-electing Mr Hubbard as assessor by paster ballots. Much doubt is expressed among laymen concerning the legal opinion that the new three-year-term law affects assessors who were elected before the law was passed. They do not see how the Legislature can extend the term of office of a man already elected, and they consider it ex-post-facto legislation and unconstitutional.

Every voter in Plainfield has been supplied with a Hubbard ballot, accompanied by the following circular letter:

To the Voters of the City of Plainfield:—

The failure of the Republican City Convention to renominate for Assessor, Joseph A. Hubbard, has given thoughtful voters a serious shock. He has filled the office, first in the town and later in the city, for twenty-six consecutive years, with ever conscientious solicitude, to secure even-handed justice for all; his knowledge and experience in the special affairs of the office are unequaled, and invaluable; he is known and appreciated and influential in the Board of Assessors of the County, and his efforts have ever been directed to secure an impartial assessment by which no more than its fair and equitable proportion of taxes should be levied against the City of Plainfield, in which every citizen has a vital and personal interest. He is not a partisan; in municipal affairs mere party interests should have no place; business principles and methods should prevail. Let no voter hesitate to exercise his independent judgment. Does any good reason for change exist? Absolutely none. Enclosed is the regular Republican ballot, save that for Assessor the name of Joseph A. Hubbard is substituted for that of J. Fred MacDonald, with a few separate pasters. Let these be used, and the services of this capable and experienced public officer be retained in a position of so much importance to every property holder.

J. Evarts Tracy,	John M. Whiton,
W. B. Wadsworth,	Rowland Cox,
L. W. Randolph,	Samuel Huntington,
S. C. Peck, Jr.,	W. D. W. Miller,
Mason W. Tyler,	E. B. Clark,
Isaac L. Miller,	A. D. Cook,
H. G. Bunkle,	James Clark,
James T. Scott,	Tunis J. Carey, and others.

Besides the Hubbard ticket there is another paster ballot afloat, offering J. Augustus Smith and Samuel Huntington as candidates for school trustees. The note accompanying the pasters says:

Before voting for School Trustee, stick these pasters over the names of J. B. Probasco and Leander N. Lovell on the official ballot. Let us have public meetings of the School Board, and do away with extravagant methods in conducting our Public School system and a further increase of our bonded debt.

The attempt to oppose Messrs. Probasco and Lovell is necessarily late in the day, because when they accepted the nomination it was of course supposed they stood on the popular platform as adopted at the Republican convention. Afterwards, when the time for legally making regular nominations had passed, they repudiated that platform.

The attempt to use pasters against them comes too late to accomplish their defeat, though they will probably be used with more or less effect as a rebuke to them for their peculiar acceptance of the nomination and not the platform.

Notes of the Fair.

The attendance at the Y. M. C. A. Fair was very large Saturday night, and the goods were easily disposed of. F. H. Andrews, Walter McGee and David Titsworth were the auctioneers, and did the work very satisfactorily.

The receipts from the drills were clear profit, as the expenses were borne entirely by friends of the Association and the participants in the drills.

The total Fair receipts reported to 3 p. m. today are $4,600. It is estimated the profit will be between $3,500 and $4,000.

Work will be begun at once on furnishing the building, and will be pushed as rapidly as possible.

Mr. MacPhie, physical director of the association, will have full charge of the equipment of the gymnasium.

Now that the fair is over work on the bowling alleys will be begun as soon as possible.

—Lillian Kennedy and company will open a season of melodrama in Music Hall tonight at 10, 20, 30 and 50 cents.

—The case of Williams against Gwynett will come up in Justice Newcorn's court Wednesday morning at 10.

Sayers Wins.

The suit of Lowden & Hill of Philadelphia against John H. Sayers of Plainfield, for $32.35 for bale of sponges bought and returned by Sayers, was decided by Judge McCormick this morning in the Court of General Session in favor of Mr. Sayers.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Mrs. Reed of Spooner avenue is kept at home by illness.

Miss F. F. Clark of the Seminary is entertaining her brother.

Miss Grace Rowland and mother have returned from Junction.

...THE...

RED BADGE OF COURAGE.

An Episode of the American Civil War.

BY STEPHEN CRANE.

[Copyright, 1894, by the Author.]

CHAPTER I.

THE cold passed reluctantly from the earth and the retiring fogs revealed an army stretched out on the hills resting. As the landscape changed from brown to green the army awakened and began to tremble with eagerness at the noise of rumors. It cast its eyes upon the roads which were growing from long troughs of liquid mud to proper thoroughfares. A river, amber-tinted in the shadow of its banks, purled at the army's feet, and at night, when the stream had become of a sorrowful blackness, one could see across it the red, eye-like gleams of hostile campfires set in the low brows of distant hills.

Once a certain tall soldier developed virtues and went resolutely to wash a shirt. He came flying back from the brook waving his garment, banner-like. He had heard a tale.

"We're going to move to-morrow—sure," he said, promptly, to a group in the company street. "We're going way up the river, cut across and come around in behind them."

To his attentive audience he drew a loud and elaborate plan of a very brilliant campaign. When he had finished the blue-clothed men scattered into small, arguing groups between the rows of squat brown huts. Smoke drifted lazily from a multitude of quaint chimneys.

"It's a thundering lie!" said a loud young private. "I don't believe the derned old army's ever going to move. We're sot. I've got ready to move eight times in the last two weeks, and we ain't moved yet."

The tall soldier felt called upon to defend the truth of a rumor he himself had introduced. He and the loud one came near to fighting over it.

Many of the men engaged in the spirited debate. One outlined in a peculiarly lucid manner all the plans of the commanding general. He was opposed by men who contended that there were other plans of campaign. They clamored at each other, numbers making futile bids for the popular attention.

There was a youthful private who listened with eager ears to the words of the excited soldier and to the varied comments of his comrades. After receiving a fill of discussions concerning marches and attacks, he went to his hut and crawled through an intricate hole that served it as a door. He wished to be alone with some new thoughts that had lately come to him.

He lay down on a wide bunk that stretched across the side of the room. In the other end cracker boxes were made to serve as furniture. They were grouped about the fireplace. Equipments hung on handy projections. The smoke of the fire at times neglected the clay chimney and wreathed into the room. And, too, this flimsy chimney of clay and sticks made endless threats to set afire the whole establishment.

The youth was in a little trance of astonishment. So they were at last going to fight. On the morrow, perhaps, there was going to be a battle and he would be in it. For a time he was obliged to labor to make himself believe. He could not accept with assurance an omen that he was about to mingle in one of those great affairs of the earth.

He had, of course, dreamed of battles all of his life—of vague, bloody conflicts. In visions he had seen himself in many struggles that had thrilled him with their sweep and fire. But monotonous weeks of camp life had made him finally regard himself as merely a part of a vast blue demonstration. He had come prepared to devastate the enemy; instead, he was made to sit still in one place and try to keep warm during the winter. He decided then that war was a legend.

However, he was now told that he was going to fight. He was mutely astonished, and lay in his bunk trying to prove mathematically that he would not run. Here was a great problem. He was forced to admit that as far as war was concerned he knew nothing of himself.

A little panic fear grew in his mind. As his imagination went forward to this fight, he saw hideous possibilities. He contemplated the lurking menaces of the close future and his mind failed in an effort to see himself standing stoutly in the midst of them.

He sprang from his bunk and began to pace nervously to and fro. "Good Lord, what's the matter with me," he said in dismay.

HE SPRANG FROM HIS BUNK.

After a time the tall private slid dextrously through the hole. The loud young one followed. They were wrangling.

"That's all right," the tall soldier was saying as he entered. "You can believe me or not—just as you like."

His companion grunted stubbornly and said: "Well, you don't know everything in the world, do you."

The youth, pausing in his nervous walk, interrupted their quarrel. "Going to be a battle, sure, is there, Jim?"

"Of course there is," said the tall soldier.

Presently the youth asked: "How do you think the regiment will do?"

"Oh, they'll fight all right after they once get into it," said the other with cold judgment. "There's been heaps of fun poked at them because they are new, but they'll fight all right, I guess."

"Think any of the boys'll run?" persisted the youth.

"Oh, there may be a few of 'em run, but there's them kind in every regiment, especially when they first goes under fire," said the tall soldier, in a tolerant way. "The boys come of good stock and they'll fight all right after they once get dead into it."

"Did you ever think you might run yourself, Jim?" remarked the youth, thoughtfully.

The tall private waved his hand. "Well," said he, profoundly, "I've thought it might get too hot for Jim Conklin in some of them scrimmages, and if a whole lot of the boys started to run why I s'pose I'd start and run. But if everybody was a-standing and fighting, why then I'd stand and fight, by jiminy."

"Shucks!" snorted the loud private, scornfully. But the youth felt grateful for these words of his tall comrade. He had feared that all of the untried men felt a great and correct confidence. He was now in a measure reassured.

CHAPTER II.

The next morning the youth discovered that his tall comrade had been the fast-flying messenger of a mistake. He felt, however, that his problem was in no wise lifted from him. There was on the contrary an irritating prolongation. The tale had created in him a great concern for himself. And now, with this newborn question in his mind, he was compelled to sink back into his old place as part of a blue demonstration.

For days he made ceaseless calculations, but they were all wondrously unsatisfactory. He found that he could establish nothing. Finally he concluded that the only way to prove himself was to go into the blaze and then, figuratively, to watch his legs to discover their merits and faults.

Meanwhile he continually tried to measure himself by his comrades. The tall soldier, for one, gave him some assurance. This man's serene unconcern dealt him a measure of confidence, for he had known him from childhood, and from his intimate knowledge he did not see how this man could be capable of anything that was beyond him.

The youth would have liked to have discovered another who suspected himself. A sympathetic comparison of mental notes would have been a great joy to him. He occasionally tried to fathom a comrade with seductive sentences. He was afraid to make an open declaration of his condition, because it might place some unscrupulous confidant upon the high plane of the unconfessed, from which elevation he could be derided.

One morning, however, he found himself in the ranks of his prepared regiment. The men were whispering speculations and recounting the old rumors. In the gloom before the break of day, their uniforms glowed a deep purple hue. From across the river the red eyes were still peering. In the eastern sky, there was a yellow patch like a rug laid for the feet of the coming sun. And against it, black and pattern-like, loomed the gigantic figure of the colonel on a gigantic horse.

From off in the darkness came the trampling of feet. The youth could occasionally see dark shadows that moved like monsters. The regiment stood at rest for what seemed a long time. The youth grew impatient. It was unendurable, the way these affairs were managed. He wondered how long they were to be kept waiting.

At last he heard from along the road at the foot of the hill the clatter of a horse's galloping hoofs. It must be the coming of orders. He bent forward, scarce breathing. The exciting clickety-click as it grew louder and louder seemed to be beating upon his soul. Presently a horseman with jangling equipment drew rein before the colonel of the regiment. The two held a short, sharp-worded conversation. The men in the foremost ranks craned their necks.

As the horseman wheeled his animal and galloped away, he turned to shout over his shoulder: "Don't forget that box of cigars." The colonel mumbled in reply. The youth wondered what a box of cigars had to do with war.

A moment later the regiment went swinging off into the darkness. It was now like one of those moving monsters wending with many feet. The air was heavy and cold with dew. A mass of wet grass, marched upon, rustled like silk.

There was an occasional flash and glimmer of steel from the backs of all these huge crawling reptiles. From the road came crackings and grumblings as some surly guns were dragged away.

The men stumbled along still muttering speculations. There was a subdued debate. Once, a man fell down and as he reached for his rifle a comrade, unseeing, trod upon his hand. He of the injured fingers swore bitterly and aloud. A low, tittering laugh went among his fellows.

Presently they passed into a roadway and marched along with easy strides. A dark regiment moved before them, and, from behind, also, came the tinkle of equipments on the bodies of marching men.

The rushing yellow of the developing day went on behind their backs. When the sun rays at last struck full and mellowingly upon the earth, the youth saw that the landscape was streaked with two long, thin, black columns, which disappeared on the brow of the hill in front and rearward vanished in a wood. They were like two serpents crawling from the cavern of the night.

The river was not in view. The tall soldier burst out in praise of what he thought to be his powers of perception. "Didn't I tell you?"

The youth took no part in them. As he walked along in careless line, he was engaged with his own eternal debate. He could not hinder himself from dwelling upon it. He was despondent and sullen and threw shifting glances about him. He looked ahead often expecting to hear from the advance the rattle of firing.

CHAPTER III.

When another night came, the columns, changed to purple streaks, filed across two pontoon bridges. A glaring fire wine-tinted the waters of the river. Its rays, shining upon the moving masses of troops, brought forth here and there sudden gleams of silver or gold. Upon the other shore, a dark and mysterious range of hills was curved against the sky. The insect voices of the night sang solemnly.

Presently, the army again sat down to think. The odor of the peaceful pines was in the men's nostrils. The sound of monotonous ax-blows rang through the forest and the insects, nodding upon their perches, crooned like old women. The youth returned to his theory of a blue demonstration.

One gray dawn, however, he was kicked in the leg by the tall soldier and then, before he was entirely awake, he found himself running down a wood road in the midst of men who were panting from the first effects of speed. His canteen banged rhythmically upon his thigh and his haversack bobbed softly. His musket bounced a trifle from his shoulder at each stride and made his cap feel uncertain upon his head.

He thought the damp fog of early morning moved from the rush of a great body of troops. From the distance came a sudden spatter of firing.

He was bewildered. As he ran with his comrades he strenuously tried to think, but all he knew was that if he fell down those coming behind would tread upon him. All his faculties seemed to be needed to guide him over and past obstructions. He felt carried along by a mob.

The sun spread disclosing rays and, one by one, regiments burst into view like armed men just born of the earth. The youth perceived that the time had come. He was about to be measured. For a moment he felt in the face of his great trial like a babe. And the flesh over his heart seemed very thin.

The regiment slid down a bank and wallowed across a little stream. The mournful current moved slowly on and from the water, shaded black, some white bubble eyes looked at the men.

As they climbed the hill on the further side artillery began to boom. Here the youth forgot many things as he felt a sudden impulse of curiosity. He scrambled up the bank with a speed that could not be exceeded by a bloodthirsty man.

HERE THE YOUTH FORGOT MANY THINGS.

He expected a battle scene.

There were some little fields girted and squeezed by a forest. Spread over the grass and in among the tree trunks, he could see knots and waving lines of skirmishers who were running hither and thither and firing at the landscape. A dark battle-line lay upon a sun-struck clearing that gleamed orange color. A flag fluttered.

Other regiments floundered up the bank. The brigade was formed in line of battle and, after a pause, started slowly through the woods in the rear of the receding skirmishers who were continually melting into the scene to appear again further on. They were always busy as bees, deeply absorbed in their little combats.

The youth tried to observe everything. He did not use care to avoid trees and branches, and his forgotten feet were constantly knocking against stones or getting entangled in briars. He was aware that these battalions with their commotions were woven red and starting into the gentle fabric of softened greens and browns. It looked to be a wrong place for a battle-field.

The skirmishers in advance fascinated him. Their shots into thickets and at distant and prominent trees spoke to him of tragedies, hidden, mysterious, solemn.

During this march, the ardor which the youth had acquired when out of view of the field rapidly faded to nothing. His curiosity was quite easily satisfied. If an intense scene had caught him with its wild swing as he came to the top of the bank he might have gone roaring on. This advance upon nature was too calm. He had opportunity to reflect. He had time in which to wonder about himself and to attempt to probe his sensations.

MOLLIE.

There's a s'picion in the atmosphere o' snow
An' it makes my heart go pit-a-pat, for oh!
I kin almos' feel the tingle,
An' hear the merry jingle,
An' the creakin' o' the cutter on the snow!

There's a sharp an' likely feelin' in the air,
That sets the blood a-glowin' rich and rare;
I kin almost see the glimmer
O' the stars 'at shine an' shimmer
When a-sleddin'in the sparklin' winter air!

Oh, I hunger for the tinkle o' the bells,
An' the ne'er forgotten story 'at it tells
O' straw rides quaint and jolly,
In the days when pretty Mollie
Made by heart-strings tinkle-tinkle like the bells!

There's a soft an' subtle feelin' in my heart,
'At drives away life's every sting an' smart,
Oh, the mem'ry of love's folly!
It was sleighin' time when Mollie
Put her sweetness an' her sunshine in my heart! —Evening Sun.

WOMAN'S FIELD OF INDUSTRY.

She Is Competing Actively With Man in Chicago. Her Accomplishments.

The Chicago Tribune has taken the trouble to hunt out the women of the city who are earning a living in the various ways which used to be man's exclusive property, and it would seem from the result that what women cannot do in the field of employment is much more simple than what she can accomplish.

The first on the list is the story of a woman un ertaker, who has been in the busines 15 years. Several other women are engaged in the same unattractive employment. They make their offices cosey and homelike with dainty things, hiding the grewsome reality of their work as much as possible, and in most cases are very successful.

A dozen different barber shops are conducted by women, with women assistants, and most of their customers are men.

Women engaged in the art of various degrees of excellence are legion, but now and then one masters the art of photography, and Chicago has several successfully employed in this business. One secret of their success is their appreciation of the fact that photographs must flatter to be quite satisfactory, and another is their winning way of making each man believe he is a perfect Adonis.

Dentistry is found to be a lucrative business for a dozen women, and they express their confidence in woman's skill in this profession with a great deal of assurance. Many of their patients are children, for by winning their confidence women succeed better than men.

Miss Sara Steenberg is an insurance broker, and the only one in Chicago. Another woman is a pension agent, and has been looking after soldiers' pensions for years.

Chicago claims more women lawyers than any other city in the Union, and these number nearly a dozen. The representative woman in the profession is the wife of a lawyer, and co-operates with his firm to such an extent as is customary among lawyers who find it to their advantage to work together.

Women in the medical profession are so numerous and well established that they are accepted as a matter of course in every city, and Chicago has her proportion. In connection with them are the professional nurses, who are employed in hospitals, sanitariums, and private families; and the demand for teachers in nursing schools is a growing one.

Physical culture furnishes a wide field for woman's work, and parlors filled with all the appliances of a first class gymnasium are successfully conducted by women, who direct the exercises scientifically with specific results from each case.

The laundry business is not one which suggests ease and pretty surroundings or possible fame, but a great many women in Chicago are making a nice living out of it.

A few women have ventured into the caterer's field, and the making of pies, cakes, bread, preserves and jellies is a profitable business for many others.

One woman in the suburbs of Chicago has a butcher shop and another one a milk route, and still another carries on the largest cooperage business in the city.

Brewing is certainly a unique employment for women, yet one woman was left by her husband's death with this business and some boys to care for, and with the aid of a foreman she has carried it on for many years. Now the sons have the management, and she is the proud owner of a handsome home and a fine property.

A number of women are in the boot and shoe business, and in big department stores there are many women occupying responsible places as buyers. It seems, in fact, that there are very few branches of commercial life in which women are not engaged. Women druggists are plentiful enough, but one woman owns a wholesale drug business. There are women florists who own their establishments, women furriers, dealers in musical instruments, grocers, hardware merchants, commission merchants, and women who deal in almost everything, from stoves to cigarettes.

Paris Fashion Hints.

A special Paris correspondent of the N.Y. Press says:

Very large sleeves and the hair combed down over the ears will continue the fashion this winter. Other details more or less important pale before these two.

If the statement seems hyperbolic the reader can verify it by observing a woman at any juncture where her dress is of importance. Always her hand involuntarily seek the part of it with which fashion is for the moment preoccupied, to see that it is enough distended or collapsed, and at present when she dresses, or is about to enter a room, or sees somebody coming on whom she wants to make an impression, she pulls out her sleeve top and pats her hair a little further down over her ears, just as a man when about to encounter a good looking woman begins to curl his mustache.

Unmoved.

"It's no use," she said dejectedly. "I've simply got to suffer."

"What's the matter?"

"Young Mr. Slogo called last night. I endured his society patiently until in self-defence I was forced to remark, 'Really, Mr. Slogo, I'm very much afraid it is getting late.'"

"And what did he do then?"

"He simply smiled and said that women are naturally timid."—Washington (D. C.) Star.

THE SPOKESMAN OF THE PEOPLE

THE RETIRED BURGLAR.

A Professional's Mortifying Experience in a House in a Country Town.

Once in a country town, said the retired burglar, I broke into a small but very comfortable appearing house that I didn't expect very rich returns from, but which I thought would pay for the labor. I skirmished around a little in the cellar, finding the usual assortment of jams and preserves and things, and on the parlor floor I found about the ordinary run of knick-knacks. The things in general were of rather less value than I had expected to find them, and there was not much of anything worth taking. So I went upstairs and into the front chamber.

I'd scarcely begun on the bureau, and hadn't got the top drawer open, when I heard from the bed a sound very much like a laugh. I thought I might be mistaken, for I really didn't see anything to laugh at, and I should have thought that if there'd been anybody awake in the bed, they'd have been more likely to be alarmed than to think it was funny to see me there. But the next minute I did hear a noise from the bed; no laughing now, just a man's voice, deep and solid, and no quavering, saying:

"Well?"

It was a good big voice, but there wasn't any shootin' in it, not just yet, anyway, and I turned my fight on him. He was sitting up in bed, a pretty good-sized, square-shouldered sort of man, and the minute I saw him I knew that I had heard somebody trying to keep from laughing and that this was the man.

"Wait a minute," he said, and there was something in his way of saying it that made me feel that it was all right to wait. He got out of bed and walked over to the bureau where I was and took a match out of an iron match box that was nailed against the window frame near by and lighted a lamp that stood on the bureau. Then he went across the room to a closet near the door I had come in by, which I suppose I should have looked into myself in the course of time if I hadn't been disturbed. He opened the closet door and reached in and brought out a jimmy, which he stood up against the wall. I wanted to stop him right there, but didn't exactly like to interrupt, and he reached in again, and this time he brought out a dark lantern. He stood that by the jimmy, and was reaching in again when I stopped him.

"Don't," I said, and he respected my feelings and stopped and looked at me. I guess we both smiled a little bit then and then I just went away.—N. Y. Sun.

DIED FOR LOVE.

And Now Her Grave Is Always Covered with Flowers.

Some time ago passers-by in Broadway, looking through the high fence that surrounds Trinity churchyard, saw a slender, black-gowned girl kneeling by the grave of Charlotte Temple. Her head was bowed in her hands, and she seemed utterly lost to her surroundings. After awhile she arose with a very pale face; walked swiftly through the gates and disappeared in the crowd. She was only one of many devotees at the shrine of the poor girl who died for love. Nobody ever visits Trinity churchyard without pausing for a few minutes before the big brown slab that bears only the name: "Charlotte Temple."

"Oh, yes!" said the gray-haired old man whose duty it is to see that the ancient tombs are kept in order. "It is the most popular grave in the yard. I have been here going on seventeen years now, and there have been very few days in good weather when the grave has not had a visitor. Several times I have seen women come here and stand in the cold and sleet and snow looking at the tomb. Somehow they always look as if they were in trouble.

"Seven or eight years ago I began to put potted flowers, geraniums and the like, on the grave, and I have kept it up ever since. It is mainly to mark the grave, so that visitors can find it. It is the only grave in the yard that has flowers on it. Otherwise the people would bother me to death. When they ask where the grave of Charlotte Temple is now, I simply tell them that it is over on the west side with some potted flowers on it. That saves me a deal of trouble.

"Several of the gravestones are crumbling badly and will have to be repaired if the descendants of the dead want to perpetuate their memory. See, here is the oldest grave in the place."

Then the old man swept away a layer of dust from a crumbling gray stone and showed the date, 1681. "We have several that date almost as far back," said he, "but none of them is so popular as that of Charlotte Temple."

Then the ancient attendant tucked his broom under his arm, picked up his wheelbarrow and trundled away among the graves.—N. Y. Herald.

DINED THE BOWERY.

CHAUNCEY DEPEW'S SPREAD TO HIS SECOND WARD FRIENDS.

Union League Welcomed the Bowery to Murray Hill and the Boys Raise the Roof. Orator Ronan Makes a Hit and the Host Tells Funny Stories.

The ultra aristocratic Union League Club of New York was the place of meeting, and the occasion was a dinner given by Dr. Depew to Mr. G. Teoppicanro, Mr. James Shaughnessy, Mr. Isaac Semansky, Mr. Michael Doherty, Mr. Samuel Isadore, Mr. Denis Healy, Mr. C. Pedsiconi, and other election district captains of the Second Assembly district. There were forty-eight captains and thirteen other invited guests, including the Hon. Shiner Simpson, Denis Shea, the Mayor of Canarsie; John Murray Mitchell, late of the Bowery, and William Brookfield and Job E. Hedges, who are strangers there. The Hon. Thomas C. Platt and the Hon. Warner Miller sent letters of regret, Mr. Miller taking occasion to say to "the boys" of the Second: "We all dropped inside the breastworks this time, and we're going to stay there."

It was feared early in the afternoon that the feed might be a failure, the Doctor having unfortunately selected a Friday for feasting. But when this was pointed out to him, it is said, he telephoned to the club and had a bisque of lobster prepared and plenty of stuffed crabs, and few of the boys shied at flesh meat anyhow.

It was a go-as-you-please dinner in the matter of dress, but Insect O'Connor came out strong in a spike-tail coat and a red four-in-hand.

Mr. O'Connor exclaimed, as he got inside the door of the club and untied his rope waistband: "Tank de Lord I can let me wind strap loose. I aint et since election. Been savin' up fur dis feed wid Chance an' I been puttin' a knot in 'er every day."

The north end boys wore yellow chrysanthemums and some of them dress suits. The south side crowd wore white ribbon badges with the words in gilt, "Our Chauncey—He's a Peach."

The table was laid in the old meeting room of the club. It was the first dinner ever given there. Dr. Depew received his guests in the corridor, Alfred R. Whitney, who didn't know any of them, asking of each his name and introducing him.

The first man Mr. Whitney introduced was Mr. Whiskers, who whispered his name to Mr. Whitney.

"What? Whiskers?" asked Mr. Whitney.

"Thomas Whiskers," said Mr. Whiskers.

"Mr. Depew, permit me to introduce Mr. Thomas Whiskers," said Mr. Whitney boldly, and Mr. Whiskers blushed as the Doctor shook hands.

The introductions took about fifteen minutes, and then the guests were led into the dining-room, whither a hundred members of the Union League Club had preceded them. The band played "Do, do, my huckleberry, do," as they all sat down.

Gen. C. H. Collins sat at the head of the first small table, Cornelius N. Bliss at the head of the second, and William Brookfield at the head of the third. When the burgundy and champagne began to flow things got lively. Not that any Second district man acted as if he wasn't used to it, but it made the feed more sociable. By and by the band struck up "The Bowery." That hit Mr. John Murray Mitchell in a tender spot, and he led off with the song. In about a minute everybody was with him. Then the tune changed to "Annie Rooney," and the boys whooped that up. Then it twisted off to

My Pearl's a Bowery girl,
She's all the world to me, and everybody swung right in with the boys.

There were some things that were new to the boys. For instance, the Roman punch was served in an ice cup. The ice cream came done up in carmine frills, and Mr. O'Connor mistook it for a rose and pinned it in his buttonhole. His next neighbor grabbed it away and told him what it was. But most of the boys were up to snuff. In the middle of the fun Dr. Depew got up, and from the southeast corner of the room there went up a Comanche yell that shook the timbers.

The Doctor made a speech that was chiefly political. He started out with a welcome, in the course of which he asked: "Why shouldn't the boys of the Bowery meet the boys of the Union League Club?" Then he said: "They do meet, and it is one of the most healthful signs of the times."

The public, he said, had been under a misapprehension. The Union League Club had been called the home of the millionaires, its sympathies all with the plutocrats, while the Bowery boys had been called a collection of roughs and toughs. Both assertions were false.

"All the Union Leage Club requires of its members," said the Doctor, "is a good character, good citizenship, and loyalty to the old flag. The Bowery comprises a population, with few exceptions, the friends of good order and good citizenship, and men who believe in maintaining the law."

Maybe the boys didn't yell at that. The Comanche howl resounded again, and the Captain at the lower end of the Doctor's table shouted, "Foxy Duck!" The Doctor continued and jollied the boys along, telling them over and over what good people they were, and then he came to the election. He called it a revolution.

Mr. Bliss also made a little speech, and then Thomas Ronan was introduced as a typical Bowery boy.

"Ye needn't expect t' hear a Daniel Webster, or a Henry Clay, or a Thomas Grady, or a Bourke Cockran," he said "I'm only a graduate from a sawmill."

"This year," he said, "a man came down in de Second—I couldn't mention his name down there; he wouldn't let me—but I'm on his own dunghill now, and I'll speak it. It was Ollie Teall, an when he come the Tammany fellows began to—but say, that reminds me of a story about an old lady I knew up in Peekskill."

Dr. Depew nearly fell off his chair. He waved his napkin in the air, and the Union Leaguers shouted and roared while the boys whooped 'er up and yelled "Bully for you, Tom!"

Mr. Ronan told his story—it was not a Depew story—and proceeded with a speech which everybody pronounced a daisy.—N. Y. Sun.

Pay for His Bill.

He had made a hearty meal at one of the restaurants near the Third street depot, says the Detroit Free Press, and as he rose up, with his hand in his pocket, he said to the proprietor:

"Two years ago in the Sandwich islands I met a man from this town."

"The bill is fifty-five cents," said the proprietor as he crooked his finger.

"Yes, I know, and the man casually observed that some day or other I might find myself in this town."

"Please hand over your bill, sir."

"Certainly, and he added that if I ever did and felt hungry and was dead broke to call on you. He couldn't remember your name, but he said you were the man with the big heart."

"I want fifty-five cents, sir!" said the proprietor.

"I know you do, and the man added that while you didn't profess to run an orphan asylum you never refused to chalk it down in the case of an unfortunate. You may put my account on the slate."

"You pay cash or get the boot," said the proprietor as he came out from behind the counter.

"That was another matter he referred to," continued the stranger. "He said that at rare intervals you gave a man the boot, but the kicks were few in number and lightly administered. If, in your judgment—"

"In my judgment I'll kick your heels over your head!" shouted the proprietor, as he seized him and led him to the door.

"The Detroiter whom I met in the Sandwich islands said that you sometimes blustered and blowed around, but it was only for moral effect."

"I'll moral effect you, you old dead beat! Take that—and that—and that!"

Seven vigorous kicks were administered, the last of which lifted the man into the street. He crossed over, turned about on the curbstone, and called across:

"I counted 'em, and there were only seven. Seven times eight are fifty-six, or not quite eight cents a kick. Say, old man, I like your large-hearted and liberal way of doing things. Call it an even eight cents a kick and lemme come over and eat fifty dollars' worth of grub."

What Is Heroism?

There are different kinds of heroism, says an exchange. To some people it is jumping into the midst of a fight, and to others it is the quiet endurance of everyday troubles. The boy who must give up his inclinations because his duty commands, who must live a life of self-sacrifice, is a greater hero than the one who in the enthusiasm of the moment sacrifices his life for another. The boy who stood by his admiral and went down with the sinking English man-of-war was a hero who ought to have a tablet in Westminster Abbey, where England keeps a record of her greatest men, but he was in no respect greater than a boy we know, whose father has lately died, and who has given up his hope of a college career to go into business to help support his mother. The everyday patient, uncomplaining heroes are the truly great ones.

A Legal Levy.

The book peddler had called at the lawyer's office to sell him a book and the lawyer very peremptorily didn't want any book. The peddler insisted and the lawyer continued to decline. At last the lawyer rose in wrath. "Now, look here," he said emphatically, "I've told you I don't want your book, and I mean what I say. Furthermore, my advice to you is to get out of this promptly, or I'll throw you out." The peddler was about to make a remark. "And," interrupted the lawyer, "let me also say that if you hesitate, I shall charge you for that advice, and levy on your books to satisfy judgment. Now git," and the suppressed peddler got.—Detroit Free Press.

REMARKABLE CURES

Of Recent Date.

A Statement from Ex-Mayor John Corson, Esq., of Clinton, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

I acknowledge with the utmost pleasure the wonderful cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in my case.

I had been a sufferer from piles, which gave me constant pain and distress, during twenty long years, attended with frequent loss of blood and with great and painful protrusion of the pile tumors and rectum whenever my bowels moved.

I tried constantly to get relief from my sufferings, but to no purpose until Mr. Bryan, a friend of mine, who had been cured by Dr. Lighthill of the same trouble, recommended him to me, and he effected a complete and radical cure in my case also, and earned my lifelong gratitude.

JOHN CORSON.

THE CASE OF MR PETER G. EYCK, OF BISSELL, HUNTERDON CO., N. J.

Dr. Lighthill Effects a Complete Cure Where Ten Physicians Had Failed.

TO THE SICK, SUFFERING AND AFFLICTED:

For many years past I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. Every movement of the bowels was attended with loss of blood and with intense pain which lasted for hours and sometimes all day. My condition was aggravated by a prolapse of the rectum, which greatly increased my suffering and sometimes gave me most agonizing pains.

So great was my distress and so bad my condition that I sold my farm, not being able to work it any longer. At one time the protruding pile tumors became so highly inflamed and swollen that they could not be replaced, and I had to go to bed, applying hot poultices for three months before I could get relief.

I had been under the treatment of ten different physicians, some of New York City, Easton, Washington and elsewhere, without any benefit whatever, and had given up my case as hopeless when, luckily for me, I heard of Dr. Lighthill's skill and success in such cases, and went to him for treatment, with the happy result that he effected a radical and permanent cure in less than four weeks's time; and I am glad to say that the entire treatment gave me neither pain nor distress.

I consider my cure perfectly wonderful, and so do all my friends and neighbors. I am confident that there is no case of piles which Dr. Lighthill cannot cure.

BELIEVED IN FRESH AIR.

The Cool Traveler's Way of Completely Defeating the Fussy Man.

In a train that left the Grand Central depot the other afternoon were seated two gentlemen, one directly in front of the other, says the New York Advertiser. Both were well dressed. The gentleman in front had the calm, self-contained manner of a well-bred man, the other the fussy air of a person who deems himself of considerable importance. There were only a few persons in the car besides the persons mentioned, and dozens of seats remained unoccupied. As the train rushed out of the tunnel into the sunlight of an unusually bright day the serene gentleman raised the window and proceeded to read his evening newspaper. A minute later the fussy man arose, leaned over and closed the window. The serene man paid no attention to the act for a minute, and then, as though having just discovered that the window was down, raised it again and went on reading. The fussy man glared at the back of the other, moved about unsteadily in his seat, and with an air of angry defiance closed the window again, this time with a bang. The other did not take his eyes from the newspaper for a few minutes, but continued reading as though he was in no wise concerned in the singular contest. Finally he glanced toward the window, and without any sign that his temper was in the least ruffled, took up his silver-headed cane and with the head of it shattered the pane and knocked out the small pieces of glass that stuck to the sides. Then he replaced his cane in the corner, took up his newspaper and resumed its perusal.

It is doubtful if the combined efforts of the world's greatest word painters could do even partial justice to a description of the fussy man's face as he witnessed this extraordinary proceeding. Pity for once that the camera fiend was not on hand to preserve it for posterity. But he was not, and so no one save those present will ever know how he looked. It seemed at times as though he were secretly pinching himself to see if he were really awake. Not a word was uttered however, by either man. At Larchmont manor the serene man was about stepping from the train when he met the conductor.

"By the by," said he, as though just remembering some long-forgotten incident, "I've broken a window pane in there. Here's my card."

A moment later he had jumped into a handsome turnout and was spinning up the road. The fussy man did not look. He had not come out of his coma of bewildering amazement.

Arctic Cannibalism.

Dundee whalers bring intelligenre of a ghastly discovery made by the crew of the Balaena in Prince Regent's inlet. The boat's crew landed in Elvin bay near Water's Edge, and found an Eskimo camp with a number of corpses, the men having evidently died from starvation. The party had evidently been driven to cannibalism by their sufferings, some of the bodies being partially eaten, while clean-picked bones were lying about. One corpse was decapitated, and the head was found some distance away. It is supposed that the party had been surprised by winter, and been unable to get away from the island, which is quite barren and destitute of game. The bodies were in a good state of preservation.

"WHAT have you got there, Jimmieboy?" asked his teacher, observing that the small youth was playing behind the cover of his desk. "Two horse-chestnuts and one little pony-chestnut," said Jimmieboy.—Harper's Young People.

Hypnotism at the Counter.

"Have you ever been hypnotized in a dry goods store?" asked a woman. "I mean, have you ever been waited on by clerks who absolutely force you to buy what you do not want? Let me tell you what happened to me the other morning. I went into a store to buy a gown, and in a certain store one of those horrid hypnotic clerks fixed me with his glittering eye and positively controlled my purchase. He mesmerized me into letting him cut me off a gown pattern that I did not want; it did not suit me in color, design or texture, yet there I stood spellbound and allowed the scissors to seal my doom. A cash boy was then called to carry the purchase to the lining counter. On the way over there I emerged from my hypnotized condition and had my revenge. What do you think I did? I turned a corner, scurried through crowds of other victims, got out a side door and went about my business. No one in the store knew me, and I have felt better ever since. If the hypnotic clerk had trouble with the proprietor about the gown so much the better. It will teach him not to exercise his mesmeric powers over helpless women."—Albany Express.

Wholly Recovered.

"I haven't heard anything about old Wopperjaw lately. He used to have a way of dropping a ten-dollar bill in the contribution box every Sunday at church, making a present of a house and lot to newly-married couples of his acquaintance, giving a silver dollar to the bootblack whenever he got a shine, and sending a lot of schoolma'ams to Europe every summer at his own expense. Folks said he was going crazy."

"Yes, he did seem sort of queer."

"Did he ever get over it?"

"O yes. He's perfectly sane now. He doesn't throw away his money any more. He's building a monument for himself in the cemetery that's to cost two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars."—Chicago Tribune.

FINE "MILLER" LAMPS with Exquisite Shades for Gifts.

Cut out and save this card.

ARE BEAUTIFUL, USEFUL, APPROPRIATE.

The "Miller" is made in all styles of Banquet, Boudoir, Piano, Vase, Study, Bracket, Hall, Library, Chandelier, so everybody can find designs to please in our assortment, which is the best in New York. Our "Miller" Oil Heater will warm a room. We also make Brass Tables with Onyx Tops, The "Rochester" lamp, etc. Established 1844. We make only the best.

The "Miller" gives bright, steady light, flame does not "climb" to smoke ceiling; lighted without removing chimney; a simple turn of button (which a child can do safely), adjusts the wick so the flame is always even (a great improvement over the old way of pulling up the wick); to put in new wick is no trouble. An Indicator tells when lamp is full of oil; the draft is so controlled that chimneys are not broken by the flame. THE "MILLER" A WONDERFUL LAMP; EVERYBODY SHOULD BUY IT. If your dealer will not supply come to us. Catalogues sent on application.

MADE HER OWN TERMS

Japan Forwards Her Reply To Minister Denby.

She Is Willing To End the War if Her Conditions Are Complied with. Fiendish Torture of Chinese Prisoners—Every Man in Port Arthur Slaughtered—A Witness' Tale.

Tokio, Dec. 3.—Peace negotiations are progressing. The minister of foreign affairs has handed to United States Minister Dun a counter proposition for transmission to United States Minister Denby.

Owing to the impenetrable secrecy surrounding the negotiations, it is impossible at this stage to discover the exact nature of this counter proposition, but it is supposed to differ from Minister Denby's original proposition mainly in respect to the amount of the indemnity demanded by Japan, and in the adoption of certain rather onerous guarantees for the faithful execution of China's pledges.

It is rumored that one of these guarantees is the continuation of Japanese occupation of Port Arthur until the treaty conditions are fulfilled, but it is apprehended that such a demand may involve Great Britain, to which nation such occupation would be obnoxious.

London, Dec. 3.—A correspondent telegraphs as follows from Hiroshima, Japan:

"I have just returned from the seat of war and had a conversation with Viscount Mutsu Munemitzu, the foreign minister, in regard to the misconduct of the Japanese at Port Arthur. I informed him that I had watched the Japanese army enter the town. The Japanese reported that civilians fired upon them from the houses and they therefore deemed it necessary to exterminate them.

"The Japanese were further excited by finding the remains of Japanese prisoners. Some of these prisoners had been burned alive. I saw no resistance in the town. During the next four days the Japanese pillaged the whole town and killed almost every man.

"Very few women or children were killed. Those who were killed were probably killed unintentionally. I saw scores of Chinese prisoners pinioned, stripped and shot, hacked with knives, ripped open, disemboweled and dismembered. Many bodies were partly burned."

Chee-Foo, Dec. 3.—All traffic to the northward will cease in ten days and the Japanese will have to be quick if they intend to attack Pekin in 1894. It is reported that the next attack will be made upon Wei-Hai-Wei, but General Chang, a brave and competent officer, commnads the defence of this stronghold and he is assisted by several foreigners.

A Chinese refugee from Port Arthur says that six generals had equal commands in the defence and all fought bravely, but the plans lacked combination. Hence the defeat. Two generals escaped, one to Chee-Foo, where he is in hiding, and the other to Tien-Tsin. It is likely that they will be beheaded.

Part of the Japanese fleet was lately at Wei-Hai-Wei, but has since departed. The Chinese fear that if peace be concluded now the disbanded troops will plunder the whole country within their reach.

WILL SELL SOME PROPERTY.

Object of Archbishop Ireland's Visit to New York.

Chicago, Dec. 3.—A special to a morning paper from Minneapolis says Archbishop Ireland denied his trip to New York was for negotiating a loan of $500,000 to raise the indebtedness of his diocese.

It has leaked out, however, that the visit had even a more momentous significance than a loan.

The archbishop and Thomas Cochran, of St. Paul, have a large amount of property in the midway district between Minneapolis and St. Paul. He is endeavoring to induce an eastern syndicate to buy this property.

Mr. Cochran is still in the east and is supposed to be carrying on the negotiations.

Plan a Great Steel Mill.

Anderson, Ind., Dec. 3.—The syndicate of St. Louis capitalists that purchased the De Pau Steel Rail works at New Albany have announced that it will move the New Albany plant and a St. Louis plant to Alexandria. The three are to be consolidated and will make the largest concern of the kind in the United States. Over 1,000 men will be employed.

Kaiser William's Speech.

Berlin, Dec. 3.—The speech from the throne has been finally revised and is now in the form in which the emperor will read it to the deputies Wednesday. It contains the usual declarations that Germany enjoys friendly relations with the powers and that the aspirations of all Europe seem to point to the maintenance of peace.

Sugar Refineries Resume.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Dec. 3.—Resumption of work at the sugar refineries which recently shut down, was begun last night, when 1,400 men were set to work. To-day 1,300 additional men will be given employment.

Identified the Suicide.

Holyoke, Mass., Dec. 3.—The body of the man who committed suicide by jumping into the canal has been identified as that of Patrick Ginley, a former resident of Holyoke and lately of Shelburne Falls.

Burned by Revolutionists.

New York, Dec. 3.—A Port au Prince, Hayti, cable says the northern part of that city has been burned. This is the work of revolutionists. Hundreds have been rendered homeless by the conflagration.

Parkhurst's Mother-in-Law Dead.

Northampton, Mass., Dec. 3.—Mrs. Philena N. Bodman, aged 77, widow of Luther Bodman and mother of the wife of Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst of New York, died here of apoplexy.

YALE STORIES DENIED.

No Paid Professionals Played with Pennsy's Eleven.

Philadelphia, Dec. 3.—The published charges said to emanate from Yale sources that some of Pennsylvania's football team are paid professionals has led Messrs. H. L. Geyelin, president of the athletic association; John C. Bell, chairman of the football committee and Professors Simon Patten and J. William White, representing the faculty athletic committee to formally authorize the following statement:

"The charges that some of Pennsylvania's team are paid professionals and are not bona fide students regularly attending recitations and college work, are absolutely and unqualifiedly false.

"Every member of Pennsylvania's team is an amateur and a genuine student in good class standing.

"A rule of the faculty forbids any student to represent Pennsylvania upon any of her athletic teams unless he is an amateur. Moreover another rule provides that no student in any of the professional schools shall play upon a University of Pennsylvania team until he has resided one academic year at the university."

Manager Delabarre, of the University of Pennsylvania football team says:

"We have no difficulty in assigning the motives which Yale had in making these harsh, unsportsmanlike and false charges against the amateur and class standing of the members of our football team. No one free of partisan alliances, can be found who does not at least divide honors equally between Pennsylvania and Yale.

"Yale begins her attack on Pennsylvania by saying that under no circumstances will she accept Pennsylvania's challenge. Dr. Hartwell and his Yale cohorts are a little previous in making this statement. Pennsylvania under no circumstances will challenge Yale. If Yale wants a clear cut championship and one that the public will recognize, she is the one to do the challenging."

BURNED TO A CRISP.

Father and Daughter Meet an Agonizing Death at Boston.

Boston, Dec. 3.—The explosion of a parlor oil stove and the resulting fire cost the loss of two lives in an Italian tenement house in North Square. The fire started in the office of Dr. E. Ferrara on the second floor. Dr. Ferrara had been out of the city and upon returning to his office found that his parlor oil stove was on fire. He picked up the stove and started for the front door. He set the stove down in the hall in order to regain his breath, when some one, he does not know who, kicked it into the street. When kicked the stove exploded and the flames and blazing oil shot back into the hall. Dr. Ferrara jumped from the window and escaped.

When the fire had been extinguished the dead bodies of Luigi Roma, aged 35 and his daughter Concetta, aged 9, were found in the hall at the head of the stairs on the third floor. Both bodies were horribly burned and were removed to the North Grove street morgue.

Roma and his daughter did not live in the house but had been visiting Roma's sister, Mrs. Nicolu Cella, who lived on the third floor and who was ill.

At the time of the fire, Roma was out in the square talking with a friend. Seeing the flames he rushed back into the house to save his daughter and was returning to the street when overtaken by death.

TO PROTECT CHRISTIANS.

Lord Kimberly Insists Upon Better Treatment of Armenians.

Vienna, Dec. 3.—The American committee in Athens has petitioned the ministers of the powers signing the Berlin treaty. After reviewing the massacres in Armenia and describing the misery of the Armenian Christians, they implore that article 61 of the treaty be enforced. This is the article guaranteeing the security of the Armenians.

London, Dec. 3.—The Daily News correspondent in Constantinople confirms the report that Great Britain warned Turkey against violating the Berlin treaty by permitting the slaughter of Armenians. He says:

"Lord Kimberly energetically insisted that the Porte must govern Armenia better. The British consul in Erzeroum, Mr. Graves, has been instructed to watch the commission of inquiry."

Indians Threaten Trouble.

Albuquerque, N. M., Dec. 3.—Trouble is feared in the Spring mountains between ranchmen and roving bands of Navajo Indians who are alleged to be stealing stock and committing all kinds of depredations. Gilbert Tabor, a ranchman just in from that district says the Navajos are bolder than ever before. They threatened to scalp N. S. Thompson who tried to take some of the stolen cattle away from them.

Ecker Arrested for Forgery.

Frederick, Md., Dec. 3.—Robert Ecker was arrested here charged with forgery. He is also wanted in Illinois, Missouri and Nebraska for similar offenses. Ecker is 32 years old and has a wife and child living at Green Mount, Pa.

Bought the Cruiser.

New York, Dec. 3.—A special from Guyaquil, Ecuador, says that public sentiment has been greatly interested in the purchase of a vessel of war from Chili. The possession of the Esmeralda will amply suffice to protect Ecuador.

Orders His Papers Burned.

London, Dec. 3.—The will of James Anthony Froude orders that all his literary papers be destroyed, including the unprinted documents concerning the Carlyles which Thomas Carlyle bequeathed to him.

Burned by Incendiaries.

Omaha, Neb., Dec. 3.—The box factory of Cudahy & Co., packers, has been destroyed by fire, the work of incendiaries. Loss $40,000.

Ives Breaks a Record.

Chicago, Dec. 3.—In a practice game of 14 inch balk line billiards, anchor barred, Ives has made a run of 531, the largest on record.

WITH ROYAL GREETING

John Burns' Arrival From England Celebrated.

Samuel Gompers and Other American Leaders Welcomed the Englishman Down the New York Bay with Music and Speeches—Enthusiastic Scenes at the Steamship Dock.

New York, Dec. 3.—John Burns, M. P., and representative of amalgamated labor in England, arrived here on the Cunard steamer Etruria. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, and a couple of local labor leaders went down the bay on a revenue cutter and boarded the big liner at Quarantine to receive the noted Englishman. The real welcome, however, did not occur until Mr. Burns ran down the gang-plank and landed, breathless, among a hundred enthusiastic members of different trades union organizations, who had gathered to meet him.

As the Etruria was being warped into her wharf a band played "Hail to the Chief" and other inspiring airs, which brought Mr. Burns from the shelter of the cabin into the drizzling rain. He stood at the rail of the vessel and looked down upon hundreds of upturned faces and a sea of waving umbrellas. Finally, when he appeared on the gang-plank, the crowd cheered and the stevedores and laborers on the dock threw their hats into the air and gave a lusty hurrah. Mr. Dumas, representing Typographical Union No. 6, stepped forward and delivered an address. It was several minutes before Mr. Burns could be heard in reply owing to the continued cheering.

After some handshaking with labor leaders, Mr. Burns was escorted to the Colonade hotel.

Mr. Burns is to attend the annual congress of the American Federation of Labor in Denver, which begins on December 10.

When interviewed later at his hotel Mr. Burns said in answer to a question that he undoubtedly favored independent political action for the labor parties in both this country and England.

Mr. Burns said that he had been a member of parliament for two years and of the county council six. He is also a member of the Amalgamated Engineers, one of the greatest of labor organizations, including 75,000 members in its ranks.

He stated that he had spent six weeks in prison, and narrowly escaped serving a term of five years for propagating opinions which were at one time very unpopular, but had since come to be regarded with more favor.

Speaking of labor in this country, Mr. Burns expressed his surprise that notwithstanding universal suffrage and the payment of salaries to members of congress, there was not one direct representative of labor either in the American house of representatives or the senate.

In Britain there are over a dozen, and there are 1,200 workmen members of town and county councils, school boards, etc. The number, he thought, would be doubled if members were paid salaries.

When asked if he did not think that the payment of members would lead to corruption, Mr. Burns said that as far as that was concerned he believed it would have an opposite effect in Great Britain.

Since the adoption of the eight-hour day by the government, Mr. Burns said it had become very popular among large private firms, and the movement was fast gaining ground among the various trades. He also stated that the condition of the English workman had been purposely misrepresented in this country for political purposes. He laughed at the idea of pauper labor at home, and said that the advantages of the American workingman's position had been magnified for similar reasons.

Prices of rent, food, clothing, etc., must also be considered, he said, when rates of wages were compared.

In regard to his socialistic views Mr. Burns said that he believed in the nationalization of land, railways mines and a number of other things. Socialism would win in England by gradual process and was growing very fast, with the concurrence of educated thought. The nationalization of land he thought less important in England than here, as the British were more of a manufacturing people. It was likely to be brought about there by means of taxation, graduated and cumulative.

The visitors will be taken round to the municipal buildings and offices today, and to-night a mass-meeting and public reception to Burns will be held at Cooper Union. A dinner will be tendered him on Tuesday night and on Wednesday he leaves for Denver.

Dressed as a Woman.

London, Dec. 3.—The police have learned that a week ago a man, evidently insane, appeared in woman's attire in the streets of Kensington and tried to stab several women. He slashed two respectable women slightly and killed the disreputable woman whose body was found on Holland Vilas road. He has not been captured.

Dedicated a Russian Church.

Streator, Ill., Dec. 3.—The only strictly Russian church in the United States except the cathedral at Sitka, Alaska was formally dedicated in this city by Bishop Nicalas, of the Greek church in Alaska and the Aleutian islands.

Myers and Gorner Drowned.

Atlantic City, N. J., Dec. 3.—The supposition that George Gorner and Frederick Meyers, two business men of this city, were drowned on Saturday has been confirmed by the washing ashore of their clothing.

Fatal Powder Explosion.

Brussels, Dec. 3.—The Caulille forcite factory in Beverloo has been blown to pieces. Three persons were killed and twenty others were wounded.

Captain Hunter Dead.

Cincinnati, Dec. 3.—Captain Robert Hunter, one of the most prominent loyal legion men in the United States is dead at his home here.

COULD HARDLY BREATHE.

Catarrh of the Nose, Throat, and Stomach—Life Made Miserable by Headaches, Pain and Cough.

Lida McCandless, No. 1230 South Thirtyfifth street, Philadelphia, in conversation with a reporter, said: "I had a very bad case of catarrh of the nose, throat and stomach, with frequent headaches, pain under the shoulder blades and a horrible cough. I had to keep my mouth constantly open day and night to breathe, and felt as miserable as one possibly could. I was advised to try Munyon's Catarrh Cure. I am happy to say that from the beginning I felt relieved and continued to grow better until now I am entirely well. I am so thankful that this remarkable remedy was ever discovered, and hope others will take advantage of my experience."

Have you Catarrh? Are you willing to investigate a treatment that cures Catarrh by removing the cause? If so ask your druggist for a 25c bottle of Catarrh Tablets. The Catarrh Cure will eradicate the disease from the system, and the Tablets will cleanse and heal the affected parts and restore them to a natural and healthful condition.

Munyon's Homœopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

WITH NATIONAL BANKS

Comptroller Eckels Gives Their Annual Details.

Fifty Institutions Were Organized With $5,000,000 Capital and Forty-one Charters Were Extended—Seventy-nine Banks Passed Out of the System—Very Few Failures.

Washington, Dec. 3.—The report of Hon. James H. Eckels, comptroller of the currency, submitted to congress to-day, gives full information in regard to the organization, supervision and liquidation of the national banks for the year.

It shows that during this period 50 banks were organized, with a capital stock of $5,285,000. Of these 27 are in the northern and eastern states. The charters of 41 were extended having an aggregate capital stock of $5,143,000, and a circulation of $1,678,050.

Ten banks, with a capital of $1,575,000, which were in the hands of receivers at the date of the last report, resumed business during the year, and the charter of 6, with a capital stock of $665,000, and circulation amounting to $283,950, expired by limitation, 5 of which were succeeded by new associations, with a capital stock of $300,000, and circulation amounting to $92,250.

On October 31, 1894, the total number of national banks in operation was 3,756, with an authorized capital stock of $672,671,365, represented by 7,955,076 shares of stock, owned by 287,842 shareholders. The total resources of the banks were $3,473,922,055.27, of which their loans and discounts amounted to $2,007,122,191.30, and money of all kinds in bank $422,428,192.45.

Of their liabilities $1,728,418,819.12 represented individual deposits, $334,121,082.10 surplus and net undivided profits, and $172,331,978 circulating notes outstanding. The total circulation of national banks amounted to $207,472,603, a net decrease during the year of $1,741,563, and a gross decrease of $8,614,864 in circulation secured by bonds.

During the year 79 banks, with an aggregate capital stock of $10,475,000 passed out of the system by voluntary liquidation, 21, including 2 which failed in 1893, with a capital stock of $2,770,000, became insolvent and were placed in charge of receivers.

A comparison is made of the operations of the year just closed with the statements contained in the report of the comptroller for the previous year, which shows that the number of new banks organized decreased 69, voluntary liquidations increased 33, the number of receivers appointed decreased 44, extensions of corporate existence increased 1, expirations of charters by limitation increased 2, the number of banks organized to succeed expiring associations increased 1, and the total number of active banks decreased 40.

The lawful money reserve of the banks, which reached its lowest point on July 12, 1893, when it was $289,244,850, steadily increased after that date until May 4, 1894, when it amounted to $452,103,214. It then decreased to $438,931,970 on July 18, 1894, and further to $402,894,682 on October 2, 1894, such decrease between May 4, 1894, and October 2, 1894, being accounted for by the increase in the item of loans and discounts during the same period, due to the revival of business between the dates named, particularly between July 18, 1894, and October 2, 1894.

The average annual dividends paid by the banks between March, 1869, the date earnings and dividends were first reported to the office, and March, 1894, is shown to be $44,355,814, and the net earnings $55,237,454. The rate per cent. of dividends declared varies from 10.5 in 1870, to 6.8 in 1894. The average for the twenty-five years is 8.5.

Cleveland Well Again.

Washington, Dec. 3. — President Cleveland is reported to be so far improved that he will be able to resume his duties at the white house to-day. Secretary Gresham visited the president at Woodley and took a short drive with him.

Fire Losses at Pittsfield.

Pittsfield, Mass., Dec. 3.—Fire did $100,000 damage in J. M. Burn's business block on North street. The heaviest losers are: Lasch & Sons, men's furnishings; F. W. Pickup & Co., novelty store; Prince & Walker, carpets.

Pequod and Schooner Collide.

New London, Conn., Dec. 3.—The Fall River schooner, Julia A. Warr, was run into on Long Island sound by the steamer Pequod of the Providence line, and so badly damaged that it was necessary to tow her into this port.

Negroes Lynch a Negro.

Ocala, Fla., Dec. 3.—A negro named William Jackson was lynched by negroes near here. Jackson had ravished a negro woman, and had been arrested, but negroes took him from the officers and hung him.

Thieves Murder a Miner.

Shamokin, Pa., Dec. 3.—While Samuel Leggett, a miner at Scott shaft, was on his way home from this place unknown parties crushed his skull with an axe. He died without recovering consciousness.

Gen. Swaim's Sentence Remitted.

Washington, Dec. 3.—By direction of the president, Secretary Lamont has made an order remitting the unexpired portion of the sentence of Brigadier General Swaim. He will be retired shortly.

The Victoria's Costly Cargo.

Tacoma, Wash., Dec. 3.—The steamer Victoria arrived here with a cargo of fine silk valued at $1,500,000, the most costly ever landed on the Pacific coast.

ANOTHER BIG ROBBERY.

Over Seventeen Thousand Dollars Stolen from a Brooklyn Bank.

New York, Dec. 3.—Another bank defalcation, with many of the curious features which have distinguished those in the Chemical and in the Shoe and Leather bank has come to light.

The Manufacturer's' National bank, of Brooklyn, is out $17,800 through the dishonesty of one of its trusted bookkeepers. This man was E. Austin Leitch, who had been connected with the institution for about four years.

Curiously enough, Leitch was discharged from the Manufacturers' National bank about three months ago, while the defalcation only came to light during the last week. It was exposed through the change in bookkeepers.

The officers of the bank hope to recover the full amount and for that reason were averse to give out the name of the depositor who received the money from Leitch, as their efforts to get hold of the $17,800, were only made during the last two days.

Leitch it is stated will be prosecuted as well as the depositor. Leitch was seen at his home. He denied the story of the theft.

THREE TRAIN VICTIMS.

They Are Killed in a Collision at Lockport, Pa.

Locksport, Pa., Dec. 3.—A collision by which two persons were killed and one fatally injured, occurred near here.

George W. Hull, a New Jersey Central engineer, was sent ou to bring in a special coal train from the mines. About half a mile from here he ran into the rear end of a fast freight train, which had stopped at a crossing. A dense fog prevailed and Hull was not able to see the lights. His engine was upset in a ditch and he was probably killed instantly. Lewis Gordon, his fireman, of Elizabethport, jumped in order to save himself but broke both legs and will die. The caboose of the freight train was wrecked and set on fire by a lamp. While it was burning Thomas Lukins, the conductor, came back when a barrel of oil in the caboose exploded. The burning oil was thrown upon Lukins and he was burned to death.

READ HIS LAST PAPER.

Prof. Herron Ends His Work Before the Sociology Meeting.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 3.—At the session of the American Institute of Christian Sociology, Prof. G. D. Herron read his last paper.

It was on the "Transfiguration of Society." He thought that whatever was done in the name of Christ, whethere buying or selling, eating or drinking, was wrongly done. He believed his grace was sufficient to manage railroads, cook dinners, build houses, conduct law suits, till farms and administer the finances of state.

The American people, he said were now offered the choice between the law of love and social atheism which was but the preparation for political anarchy and national destruction. The division of human affairs into the secular and religious was the device of the devil.

MAY CHANGE OFFICERS.

The Sugar Trust Reported Likely To Have New Managers.

New York, Dec. 3.—It is the general impression that the Sugar Trust is contemplating a change in the management of that huge monopoly. The matter has taken such definite shape that the name of C. C. Harrison, of Philadelphia, is mentioned as the person who has been selected to succeed H. O. Havemeyer as president. Harrison and the investors in the stock are doing all they can to lend substance and character to it. It is pretty certain that sugar will remain in a dull and inactive condition for a long time to come and that this will be used to induce congress to throw protection to the trust.

FRACTURED HIS SPINE.

One Football Player Whom Death May Claim.

Washington, Dec. 3.—The condition of Bahen the captain of the Georgetown college football eleven who was so seriously injurd on Thanksgiving day remains about the same.

His spine is fractured and the pressure on the spinal cord has produced paralysis from the chest down. He was moved from the college dispensary to-day and taken to a hospital where an effort will be made to remove the fractured pieces of bone.

The operation is to be made as a last resort and his recovery is doubtful. The other players injured during the same game are either entirely recovered or out of danger.

Foul Play Feared.

South Norwalk, Conn., Dec. 3.—George Lowndes, aged 18 years, was killed by a train while returning to his home in Noroton. His body was found lying beside the track. When Lowndes came here at dark, he had a companion. Deputy Coroner Burke, who officially investigated the affair suspects foul play.

Death of a Target Victim.

Plainfield, N. J., Dec. 3.—Monace Evans, the Hebrew peddler whom two boys, Peter Kane and James Welch, shot on Thanksgiving day, while they were shooting at a target with a Winchester rifle, has died. Welch and Kane, who are both only 15 years old, have been lodged in the county jail.

Mexico Begins a Railroad.

Oaxaca, Mex., Dec. 3.—The threatened war between Guatemala and Mexico has caused the latter government to begin the construction of a military railroad from Tehuantepec to the Guatemalan frontier.

Will Trot for a Big Stake.

Houston, Tex., Dec. 3.—The managers of Joe Patchen and Ryland T. have decided to trot the match for $10,000 between the above horses at Dallas, Texas, Saturday, Dec. 8.

Three Skaters Drowned.

Newport, Vt., Dec. 3.—Willie Daggett, Ed. Scott and George Kilby were skating on the lake here when they skated into a rift at Farrant's Point, and all were drowned.

Flour Mills and Men Burned.

Flint, Mich., Dec. 3.—The Thread flour mills here were destroyed by fire and two men were burned to death. Loss $400,000.

CONGRESS HERE AGAIN

Much Business Ready for Immediate Attention.

After the President's Message Is Read the Tariff Bills and the Nicaragua Canal Bill Will Probably Be Taken Up—Arizona and New Mexico Ask for Statehood.

Washington, Dec. 3.—The house of representatives will convene in the third and final session of the Fifty-third congress this afternoon. When its term runs out at noon on the fourth of March next, it will have been in session for fifteen months. The attendance of members to-day is not expected to number much, if any more than a quorum—indeed, the record of arrivals at the postoffice of the house up to last night was far short of a majority.

For a day or two, however, it is more than probable there will be no absolute necessity for the presence of a quorum. Besides listening to the reading of the message of President Cleveland, it is not likely that anything else will be done. The house may hear the announcement of the death of Hon. Myron B. Wright, of Pennsylvania.

No programme of business has been arranged by the committee on rules. Mr. Outhwaite, one of the majority members of the committee had not arrived in the city yesterday, and Speaker Crisp and Mr. Catchings had not consulted the minority members, Messrs. Reed and Burrows.

A meeting of the committee will be held after the adjournment to-day and they will doubtless agree upon some line of action.

Among the bills that are likely to come up are the Nicaraguan canal bill, and the bill to permit railroad companies to pool passenger and freight business. The contested election case of Williams versus Settle from North Carolina, which was postponed from last session by agreement, will also be brought up but the results of the late election have divested it of interest.

Aside from the regular appropriation bills, therefore, there is not much business in sight that is likely to receive final or decisive action.

A new financial policy, the recent bond issue, and the investigation of Judge Ricks of the United States court for the northern district of Ohio, in relation to his action as clerk of the court, will doubtless be discussed.

Chairman Sayers of the appropriation committee, says he will have the pension and appropriation bills on the calendar early in the week, and that if no other more important business presents itself for consideration the house will send them to the senate before the week closes. The pension bill is now ready to be reported, and the final meeting of the sub-committee having in charge the fortifications bill was held at 11 o'clock to-day. Generals Schofield and Batcheller were present for examination. Gen. Schofield is president of the ordnance board and General Batcheller had submitted some estimates for work at Fortress Monroe.

The senate calendar contains 145 bills and resolutions that have been reported by committees, many of them measures that are of great importance and which will be urged for action as soon as the senate can emerge from the inertia which always characterizes the beginning of a session.

Most important among these, from political point of view, are the four so-called "pop-gun" tariff bills, sent over from the house at the close of the last session.

Mr. Jones of Arkansas, and Mr. Harris, of the finance committee have said that they intended to call these bills up and especially the sugar bill, at the earliest possible moment, but it is not likely that they will urge them during this week.

As it now stands on the senate calendar the house bill providing for free sugar was amended by the senate finance committee by imposing a duty of forty per cent. on all sugars. The house bill providing for free coal was amended by the committee by imposing a duty on bituminous coal when imported from any country that levies a duty on American coal.

In view of the recent complications at Bluefields, Mr. Morgan will take the earliest opportunity to bring to the attention of the senate, his bill relating to the construction of the Nicaraguan canal. There is but little doubt that the bill will pass the senate, but its fate in the house is surrounded by elements of doubt.

The house bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy, which was favorably reported to the senate, will be a matter of earnest discussion.

There was also reported the house bills to admit the territories of Arizona and New Mexico to the sisterhood of states. Mr. Faulkner will endeavor to add these new stars to the flag before this congress dies.

Ballington Booth Sick.

Chicago, Dec. 3.—Commander Ballington Booth, chief of the Salvation Army in the United States, is critically ill with a combination of nervous prostration and typhoid fever. He has been confined to his room for over a week and a consultation of physicians has been held.

Absurd ideas took hold upon him. He thought that he did not relish the landscape. It threatened him. A coldness swept over his back, and it is true that his trousers felt to him that they were no fit for his legs at all.

A house standing placidly in distant fields had an ominous look. The shadows of the woods were formidable. He was certain that in this vista there lurked fierce-eyed hosts. The swift thought came to him that the generals did not know what they were about. It was all a trap. Suddenly those close forests would bristle with rifle barrels. Iron-like brigades would appear in the rear. They were all going to be sacrificed. The generals were stupids. The enemy would presently swallow the whole command. He glared about him, expecting to see the stealthy approach of his death.

He thought that he must break from the ranks and harangue his comrades. They must not all be killed like pigs. And he was sure it would come to pass unless they were informed of these dangers. The generals were idiots to send them marching into a regular pen. There was but one pair of eyes in the corps. He would step forth and make a speech. Shrill and passionate words came to his lips.

The line, broken into moving fragments by the ground, went calmly on through fields and woods. The youth looked at the men nearest him and saw, for the most part, expressions of deep interest as if they were investigating something that had fascinated them. One or two stepped with overvaliant airs as if they were already plunged into war. Others walked as upon thin ice. The greater part of the untested men appeared quiet and absorbed. They were going to look at war, the red animal, war, the blood-swollen god. And they were deeply engrossed in this march.

As he looked, the youth gripped his outcry at his throat. He saw that even if the men were tottering with fear, they would laugh at his warning. They would jeer him, and if practicable pelt him with missiles. Admitting that he might be wrong, a frenzied declamation of the kind would turn him into a worm.

He assumed, then, the demeanor of one who knows that he is doomed, alone, to unwritten responsibilities. He lagged, with tragic glances at the sky.

CHAPTER IV.

The brigade was halted in the fringe of a grove. The men crouched among the trees and pointed their restless guns out at the fields. They tried to look beyond the smoke.

Out of this haze they could see running men. Some shouted information and gestured as they hurried.

The men of the new regiment watched and listened eagerly, while their tongues ran on in the gossip of the battle. They mouthed rumors that had flown like birds out of the unknown.

The din in front swelled to a tremendous chorus. The youth and his fellows were frozen to silence. They could see a flag that tossed in the smoke angrily. Near it were the blurred and agitated forms of troops. There came a turbulent stream of men across the fields. A battery changing position at a frantic gallop scattered the stragglers right and left.

A shell screaming like a storm-banshee went over the huddled heads of the reserves. It landed in the grove and, exploding redly, flung the brown earth. There was a little shower of pine needles.

Bullets began to whistle among the branches and nip at the tree-trunks. Twigs and leaves came sailing down. It was as if a thousand axes, wee and invisible, were being wielded. Many of the men were constantly dodging and ducking their heads.

The lieutenant of the youth's company was shot in the hand. He began to swear so wondrously that a nervous laugh went along the regimental line. The officer's profanity sounded conventional. It relieved the tightened senses of the new men. It was as if he had hit his fingers with a tack hammer at home.

He held the wounded member carefully away from his side so that the blood would not drip upon his trousers.

The battleflag in the distance jerked about madly. It seemed to be struggling to free itself from an agony. The billowing smoke was filled with horizontal flashes.

Men running swiftly emerged from it. They grew in numbers until it was seen that the whole command was fleeing. The flag suddenly sank down as if dying. Its motion as it fell was a gesture of despair.

Wild yells came from behind the walls of smoke. A sketch in gray and red dissolved into a mob-like body of men who galloped like wild horses.

The veteran regiments on the right and left of the Three Hundred and Fourth immediately began to jeer. With the passionate song of the bullets and the banshee shrieks of shells were mingled loud cat-calls and bits of facetious advice concerning places of safety. But the new regiment was breathless with horror. "Gawd, Saunders got crushed," whispered the man at the youth's elbow. They shrank back and crouched as if compelled to await a flood.

The youth shot a swift glance along the blue ranks of the regiment. The profiles were motionless, carven. And afterwards he remembered that the color sergeant was standing with his legs braced apart as if he expected to be pushed to the ground.

The bellowing throng went whirling around the flank. Here and there, were officers carried along on the stream like exasperated chips. They were striking about them with their swords, and, with their left fists, punching every head they could reach. They cursed like highwaymen.

Frequently, over this tumult could be heard the grim jibes of the critical veterans, but the retreating men apparently were not even conscious of the presence of an audience.

The battle reflection that shone in the faces on the mad current made the youth feel that forceful hands from Heaven would not have been able to have held him in place if he could have got intelligent control of his legs.

The sight of this stampede exerted a flood-like force that seemed able to drag sticks and stones and men from the ground. They of the reserve had to hold on. They grew pale and firm, and red and quaking.

The youth achieved one little thought in the midst of this chaos. The composite monster which had caused the other troops to flee had not then appeared. He resolved to get a view of it and then, he thought, he might very likely run better than the best of them. There were moments of waiting. Then some one cried: "Here they come."

There was rustling and muttering among the men. They displayed a feverish desire to have every possible cartridge ready to their hands. Their boxes were pulled around into various positions and adjusted with great care. It was as if seven hundred new bonnets were being tried on.

At last a cry was repeated up and down the line in a muffled roar of sound: "Here they come. Here they come." Gun-locks clicked.

Across the smoke-infested fields came a brown swarm of running men who were giving shrill yells. They came on stooping and swinging their rifles at all angles. A flag tilted forward sped near the front.

CHAPTER V.

A hatless general pulled his dripping horse to a stand near the colonel of the Three Hundred and Fourth. He shook his fist in the other's face. "You've got to hold 'em back," he shouted savagely. "You've got to hold 'em back." He seemed greatly insulted.

In his agitation, the colonel began to stammer. "A-all-right, general, all right, by Gawd, we-we'll do our best." The general made a passionate gesture and galloped away.

The man at the youth's elbow was mumbling as if to himself: "Oh, we're in for it now. Oh, we're in for it now."

The captain of the company had been pacing excitedly to and fro in the rear. He coaxed in school-mistress fashion as to a congregation of boys with primers. His talk was an endless repetition: "Reserve your fire, boys—don't shoot until I tell you, save your fire—wait until they get close up—don't be damned fools."

Perspiration streamed down the youth's face, which was soiled like that of a weeping urchin. He frequently with a nervous movement wiped his eyes with his coat-sleeve. His mouth was still a little ways open.

He got the one glance at the foe-swarming field in front of him and instantly ceased to debate the question of his piece being loaded. Before he was ready to begin, before he had announced to himself that he was about to fight, he threw the obedient, well-balanced rifle into position and fired a first wild shot. Directly, he was working at his weapon like an automatic affair.

He suddenly lost concern for himself and forgot to look at a menacing fate. He became not a man but a member. He felt that something of which he was a part—a regiment, an army, a cause, or a country—was in a crisis. He was welded into a common personality which was dominated by a single desire. For moments he could not flee, no more than a little finger can commit a revolution from a hand.

If he had thought the regiment about to be annihilated perhaps he could have amputated himself from it. But its noise gave him assurance. The regiment was like a fire-work, that, once ignited proceeds superior to circumstances until its blazing vitality fades.

It wheezed and banged with mighty power. He pictured the ground before it as strewn with the discomfited.

DIRECTLY HE WAS WORKING.

There was a consciousness always of the presence of his comrades about him. He felt the subtle battle brotherhood more potent even than the cause for which they were fighting. It was a mysterious fraternity, born of the smoke and danger of death.

Presently he began to feel the effects of the war atmosphere—a blistering sweat, a sensation that his eyeballs were about to crack like hot stones. A burning roar filled his ears.

Following this came a red rage. He developed the acute exasperation of a pestered animal, a well-meaning cow worried by dogs. He had a mad feeling against his rifle which could only be used against one life at a time. He wished to rush forward and strangle with his fingers. He craved a power that would enable him to make a world-sweeping gesture and brush all back. His impotency appeared to him and made his rage into that of a driven beast.

Buried in the smoke of many rifles, his anger was directed not so much against the men whom he knew were rushing toward him, as against the swirling battle-phantoms who were choking him, stuffing the irsmoke-robes down his parched throat. He fought frantically for respite for his senses, for air, as a babe, being smothered, attacks the deadly blankets.

There was a singular absence of heroic poses. The men bending and surging in their haste and rage were in every impossible attitude. The steel ramrods clanked and clanged with incessant din as the men pounded them feverishly into the hot rifle barrels. The flaps of the cartridge-boxes were all unfastened and flapped and bobbed idiotically with each movement. The rifles, once loaded, were jerked to the shoulder and fired without apparent aim into the smoke or at one of the blurred and shifting forms which upon the field before the regiment had been growing larger and larger like puppets under a magician's hand.

The men dropped here and there like bundles. The captain of the youth's company had been killed in an early part of the action. His body lay stretched in the position of a tired man resting, but upon his face there was an astonished and sorrowful look as if he thought some friend had done him an ill turn. The babbling man was grazed by a shot that made the blood stream widely down his face. He clapped both hands to his head. "Oh," he said and ran. Another grunted suddenly as if he had been struck by a club in the stomach. He sat down and gazed ruefully. In his eyes there was mute, indefinite reproach.

At last an exultant yell went along the quivering line. The firing dwindled from an uproar to a vindictive popping. As the smoke slowly eddied away the youth saw that the charge had been repulsed. The enemy were scattered into reluctant groups. He saw a man climb to the top of the fence and fire a parting shot. The waves had receded leaving bits of dark debris upon the ground.

Some in the regiment began to whoop frenziedly; many were silent. Apparently, they were trying to contemplate themselves.

After the fever had left his veins, the youth thought at last he was going to suffocate. He became aware of the foul atmosphere in which he had been struggling. He was grimy and dripping like a laborer in a foundry. He grasped his canteen and took a long swallow of the warm water.

A sentence with variations went up and down the line. "Well, we've held 'em back, we've held 'em back—derned if we haven't." The men said it blissfully, leering at each other with dirty smiles.

The youth turned to look behind him and off to the right and off to the left. He experienced the joy of a man who at last finds leisure to look about him.

Under foot, there were a few ghastly forms motionless. They lay twisted in fantastic contortions. Arms were bended and heads were turned in incredible ways. It seemed that the dead men must have fallen from some great height to get into such positions. They looked to be dumped out upon the ground from the sky.

From a position in the rear of the grove a battery was throwing shells over it. The guns squatted in a row like savage chiefs. They argued with abrupt violence. It was a grim powwow. Their busy servants ran hither and thither.

A small procession of wounded men were going drearily to the rear. It was a flow of blood from the torn body of the brigade.

To the right and to the left were the dark lines of other troops. Far in front he thought he could see lighter masses protruding in points from the forest. They were suggestive of unnumbered thousands.

Once he saw a tiny battery go dashing along the line of the horizon. The tiny riders were beating the tiny horses.

From a sloping hill came the sound of cheerings and clashes. Smoke welled slowly through the leaves.

Batteries were speaking with thunderous oratorical effort. Here and there were flags, the red in the stripes dominating. They splashed bits of warm color upon the dark lines of the troops.

The youth felt the old thrill at the sight of the emblems. They were like beautiful birds strangely undaunted in a storm.

As he listened to the din from the hillside, to a deep, pulsating thunder that came from afar to the left, and to the lesser clamors which came from many directions, it occurred to him that they were fighting, too, over there and over there and over there. Heretofore, he had supposed that all the battle was directly under his nose.

As he gazed around him, the youth felt a flash of astonishment at the blue, pure sky and the sun-gleamings on the trees and fields. It was surprising that nature had gone tranquilly on with her golden process in the midst of so much devilment.

CHAPTER VI.

The youth awakened slowly. He came gradually back to a position from which he could regard himself. For moments he had been scrutinizing his person in a dazed way, as if he had never before seen himself. Then he picked up his cap from the ground. He wriggled in his jacket to make a more comfortable fit, and, kneeling, relaced his shoe. He thoughtfully mopped his reeking features.

So it was all over at last. The supreme trial had been passed. The red, formidable difficulties of war had been vanquished.

But, of a sudden, cries of amazement broke out along the ranks of the new regiment. "Here they come again! Here they come again!"

The youth turned quick eyes upon the field. He discerned forms swelling in masses out of a distant wood. He again saw the tilted flag speeding forward.

The shells which had ceased to trouble the regiment for a time, came swirling again and exploded in the grass or among the leaves of the trees. They looked to be strange war flowers bursting into fierce bloom.

The men groaned. The luster faded from their eyes. Their smudged countenances now expressed a profound dejection.

They fretted and complained each to each. The sore joints of the regiment creaked as it painfully floundered into position to repulse.

The youth stared. Surely, he thought, this impossible thing was not about to happen. It was all a mistake.

But the firing began somewhere on the regimental line and ripped along in both directions. The level sheets of flame developed great clouds of smoke that tumbled and tossed in the mild wind near the ground for a moment and then rolled through the ranks as through a grate. The clouds were tinged an earth-like yellow in sun rays, and, in the shadow, were a sorry blue. The flag was sometimes eaten and lost in this mass of vapor, but more often it projected, sun-touched, resplendent.

Into the youth's eyes there came a look that one can see in the orbs of a jaded horse. His back was quivering with nervous weakness and the muscles of his arms felt numb and bloodless. His hands, too, seemed large and awkward as if he were wearing invisible mittens. And there was a great uncertainty about his knee joints.

He began to exaggerate the endurance, the skill and the valor of those who were coming. Himself reeling from exhaustion, he was astonished beyond measure at such persistency. They must be machines of steel.

He slowly lifted his rifle and catching a glimpse of the thick-spread field he blazed at a cantering cluster. He stopped then and began to peer as best he could through the smoke. He caught changing views of the ground covered with men who were all running like pursued imps and yelling.

To the youth it was an onslaught of redoubtable dragons. He became like the man who lost his legs at the approach of the red and green monster. He waited in a sort of horrified, listening attitude. He seemed to shut his eyes and wait to be gobbled.

Men began to scamper away through the smoke. The youth turned his head, shaken from his trance, by his movement as if the regiment were leaving him behind. He saw the few fleeting forms.

He yelled then with fright and swung about. For a moment, in the great clamor, he was like a proverbial chicken. He lost the direction of safety. Destruction threatened him from all points.

Directly he began to speed toward the rear in great leaps. His rifle and cap were gone. His unbuttoned coat bulged in the wind. The flap of his cartridge-box bobbled wildly and his canteen, by its slender cord, swung out behind. On his face was all the horror of those things which he imagined.

HE SPED TOWARD THE REAR.

The lieutenant sprang forward, bawling. The youth saw his features, wrathfully red, and saw him make a dab with his sword. His one thought of the incident was that the lieutenant was a peculiar creature, to feel interested in such matters upon this occasion.

He ran like a blind man. Two or three times he fell down. Once he knocked his shoulders so heavily against a tree that he went headlong.

Since he had turned his back upon the fight his fears had been wondrously magnified. Death about to thrust him between the shoulder blades was far more dreadful than death about to smite him between the eyes.

As he ran on he mingled with others. He dimly saw men on his right and on his left, and he heard footsteps behind him. He thought that all the regiment was fleeing pursued by these ominous crashes.

As he went across a little field, he found himself in the region of shells. They hurled over his head with long, wild screams. As he heard them he imagined them to have rows of cruel teeth that grinned at him. Once, one lit before him and the livid lightning of the explosion effectually barred his way in his chosen direction. He groveled on the ground and then springing up went careering off through some bushes.

The youth moderated his pace when he had left the place of noises behind.

Later, he came upon a general of division seated upon a horse that pricked its ears in an interested way at the battle. There was a great gleaming of yellow and patent-leather about the saddle and bridle. The quiet man, astride, looked mouse-colored upon such a splendid charger.

A jingling staff was galloping hither and thither. Sometimes the general was surrounded by horsemen and at other times he was quite alone. He looked to be much harassed. He had the appearance of a business man whose market is swinging up and down.

The youth went slinking around this spot. He went as near as he dared trying to overhear words. Perhaps the general, unable to comprehend chaos, might call upon him for information. And he could tell him. He knew all concerning it. Of a surety the force was in a fix and any fool could see that if they did not retreat while they had opportunity—why—destruction.

He felt that he would like to thrash the general, or, at least, approach and tell him in plain words exactly what he thought him to be. It was criminal to stay calmly in one spot and make no effort to stay tempestuous defeat. He loitered in a fever of eagerness for the division-commander to apply to him. But, a moment later, the youth saw the general bounce excitedly in his saddle.

"Yes, by heavens, they have." The officer leaned forward. His face was aflame with excitement. "Yes, by heavens, they've held them. They've held them."

He began to blithely roar at his staff. He beamed upon the earth like a sun. In his eyes was a desire to chant a paeon. He kept repeating: "They've held 'em, by heavens."

His excitement made his horse plunge and he merrily kicked and swore at it. He held a little carnival of joy on horseback.

THE DAILY PRESS

ESTABLISHED MAY 10, 1887. PLAINFIELD, N. J., TUESDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1894. TWO CENTS A COPY. $5 A YEAR.

AN EXCELLENT COURSE.

Splendid List of Lectures in All Souls Church.

The annual lecture course of All Souls Church has now become one of the recognized features of Plainfield's literary bill-of-fare; The excellence of the course and the cheapness of the tickets are well-known to our lecture-going population. Indeed it would be a mystery how five such good lectures, as those announced elsewhere in our columns, could be given for the small sum of one dollar, were it not an open secret that the speakers generously give their services. Rev. Merle St. Croix Wright will open the course on Friday night, December 7, with a lecture on Walt Whitman, "the good gray poet", as he is often called. Walt Whitman's reputation in England is as great as or even greater than in this country, and it behooves us all to know something of this famous citizen of our Republic, who is thought by many persons to be the representative poet of Democracy. Mr. Wright's reputation in New York city (where he has a large church) and elsewhere as a preacher and thinker, is so high, that his thoughtful words will be sure to command attention in our city. He is considered one of the most brilliant lights among the young clergymen of the Unitarian denomination.

Rev. Hobart Clark is too wellknown and too highly appreciated in Plainfield to need special notice at our hands. It may be said, however, that Mr. Clark made a special study of the English cathedrals during his long sojourn in the British Isles. Wm. L. Gibbs of Fanwood has kindly promised to furnish and superintend the stereopticon illustrations, which will add so much to the interest of this lecture.

Rev. Watari Kitashima, a native Japanese who has been converted to Christianity, and is installed as pastor of a church at Vineland, will lecture upon the war now going on between China and Japan. Mr. Kitashima brings high testimonials from Mrs. Mary A. Livermore among others. She says "We can commend you and your lecture most heartily to the public."

Those who heard Hon. Roswell G. Horr at Music Hall a month or two ago, need not be told what a rare treat awaits us in his lecture on the "Labor Problem." It would be difficult to find, in the length and breadth of our land, a speaker who could equal this gentleman in the somewhat rare combination of sound common sense, overflowing with wit and humor, and unfailing good nature. He makes his audience fairly roar with laughter, yet he teaches them a lesson at the same time. Mr. Horr's reputation is a national one.

A. Emerson Palmer, one of the editors of the New York Tribune, will give a lecture on George Eliot, the poet. Mr. Palmer is much liked in Plainfield, where he has spoken before. His exposition of this subject will be awaited with eager interest by all who are familiar with his cleverness and ability, and by all who admire—as who does not?—the prose works of this great novelist.

NEW YEAR'S DANCE.

Plainfield Sons of Veterans Promoting Sociability.

At the meeting of John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, last evening the members decided to give a reception and dance New Year's Eve. It will be an invitation affair. Willard Sutton, Cyrus Moore and Charles Stephens were appointed.

Nominations were opened for officers for the ensuing year, and resulted as follows:

Captain—W. C. Dobbins.
1st Lieutenant—W. Sutton.
2d Lieutenant—Ed Bowman, Charles Stephens.
Delegate to State Encampment—H. S. Thatcher; alternate—H. C. McVoy.

The question of uniforms was discussed, and it is expected that by the first of January there will be about 25 members ready to uniform.

The new ritual is expected by Dec. 15. It will require three evenings to exemplify it, which will make much additional work on the part of the officers and members.

SCHOOL FIRE SAFETY.

At Last Action Is Being Taken by the Board.

FIRE ESCAPES WHERE NEEDED.

Hydrants to Be Placed Near the Unprotected Irving School—Another Star-Chamber Session Discovers Itself—Reciprocity Proposed Between Dunellen and Plainfield.

The December meeting of the Board of Education was called to order last night at 8:15 by President Probasco. The other members present were Messrs. Finch and Lovell. Dr. Jenkins did not arrive until 8:45. On account of the death of his father, Clerk Clark did not attend, and H. M. Maxson acted in his stead. The minutes of the regular November meeting were read and approved.

It transpired that the Board had had another of their star-chamber special meetings Nov. 5, in reference to the Love matter, and the minutes of that meeting also were approved. The only business appearing as transacted at that meeting was the Love affair, and the Board sustained Superintendent Maxson in the course he had taken in the matter.

A number of bills, including one for over $100 for repairs to the Wadsworth building, were read by Secretary Finch and approved and ordered paid.

A motion was made that Miss Flora Petrie, who had served four years as teacher, should receive, after Dec 1, a salary of $450 a year. The motion was carried.

Mr. Lovell offered a motion, which was carried, that the schools close for the holiday vacation Dec. 21, 1894, and open Jan. 2, 1895.

Mr. Maxson, who had been appointed to investigate the request of residents inside the city line for the Board to stand the expense of their children attending school in the Dunellen district as it was too great a distance to walk to the Plainfield schools and they could not afford to pay the tuition fee, reported that he had looked into the matter and had learned that there were children in the Dunellen district on West Fourth street, near Guinea pond, who were attending the Plainfield schools, and he suggested that the Board pay to the Dunellen district the amount for each scholar that was allowed by the State, and that Dunellen do likewise with Plainfield. The matter was left to Mr. Maxson with power.

The Committee on Buildings reported that the work of flagging around the Irving School property was progressing.

President Probasco reported that the flagstaff at the Washington School had been taken down and that in doing so the staff had fallen and was so rotten that it had broken in two. He said that it was a good thing it had been taken down before it had fallen, and perhaps injured some of the scholars. A new flagstaff with weather-vane would cost about $95 President Probasco also called the attention of the Board to the fact that the Wadsworth School building had no flag thereon as required by law, and stated that a flagstaff with halyards and ball but without weather-vane, would cost between $25 and $50. This was also referred to the Building Committee.

Dr. Jenkins said that he had been informed by two members of the J. O. U. A. M. that the Secretary of State would furnish flags for school houses on application. President Probasco said he had never heard anything of the kind, and did not think it was true.

The subject of furnishing water for the Irving School building was brought up by the president, who said that the nearest hydrant to the school was 800 feet, and thought that in case of fire and scholars were injured the Board would be held responsible. The Water Supply Company would not lay pipes to the building unless they were guaranteed $50 a year from the Board. He had consulted Corporation Counsel Marsh and Chief Engineer T. O. Doane in regard to the matter and they had advised that the Board give the guarantee and secure water for the building. The company agreed to allow reduction in case of property owners along the line putting in city water. The company would not agree to have the work done at any stated time on account of the season. The Building Committee was given power to act.

Mr. Lovell asked about the matter of fire-escapes for the school buildings. President Probasco stated that the High School and Franklin School were the only buildings required by law to have fire-escapes, as they were the only ones that had classes above the second floor. The matter was referred to the Building Committee.

The Board agreed to attend the funeral of the late L. E. Clark in a body. A committee was appointed to draft resolutions on the death of Mr. Clark. The committee was President Probasco and Messrs. Finch and Jenkins.

As F. B. Clark had acted as deputy for his father to the Board, he was appointed clerk pro tem until the next meeting.

The Board then adjourned subject to the call of the chair

Ragan Saturday night.

THE CHASE OF A HEART.

AFTER THE FAIR HE WAS STILL AFTER THE FAIR.

Pathetic History of a Queer Little Gentleman, as Told to His Partner in Desertion in the Y. M. C. A. Building.

At first glance you would have said they were two chrysanthemums, nodding droopingly at one another in the deserted corner. But who ever saw a black chrysanthemum?—and one of these was black. As for the yellow—that was a sure enough flower. She was the only one left of all the beauties that had graced the Japanese quarter of the Fair. Her comrade in misery had little eyes twinkling, and ruddy cheeks aglow, only you could not see them till you had parted his thick and tangled mat of hair One might have taken him for a college football player, but instead he was a right proper and neat little Japanese gentleman.

They were alone in the great Y. M. C. A. Building.

All the nations had packed up their belongings and followed the trail of the Gypsies away from the camp. The Yankee storekeeper had been last to go, for he had lingered as long as there was anyone around affording a possible chance to make a swap. Even his sharp eyes did not detect the proper little Japanese, and his wife did not espy the blossom: and so they were left behind among the remnants of evergreen twigs and scraps of wrapping paper, which the janitor was to sweep to the fire.

The Japanese little gentleman made a profound bow to the mass of golden bloom. His joints squeaked, and in a shrill voice he piped an apology.

"Pardon, my dear young lady, for the groaning of my bones. I have been shivering all night under the branch of a frosted Christmas tree, and I suspect I'll be dead of rheumatism before another week is out."

Having no tears, the chrysanthemum shed one of her yellow tresses. The little Jap blinked; but his eyes were dry, and they opened and shut with a leaden sound.

"Of course"—he said—"you have n't a can of machine-oil in your pocket?"

The yellow-haired lady shook her head mournfully.

"Then"—said the little Jap—"I'll have to come over and thaw out in your sunshine."

With much squeaking and groaning he climbed painfully out of his cedar bough and leaned against an empty candy-box in respectful proximity to the chrysanthemum.

"We seem to be the sole survivors of all the glory,"—he remarked—"and we might as well be sociable. I used to be a good deal stuck up myself, through early intimacy with the glue-pot; but that's all past, and you see how humbly I stand at your feet and court your smiles."

The chrysanthemum beamed upon him in dazzling radiance, and when he gleefully rubbed his hands his knuckles did not crack.

"It just warms my soul"—he said—"to have your eyes gaze down upon me with that gorgeous gleam. If only I had met you before I lost my heart!" He sighed, and then added "May I call your name?"

"My middle name is the nicest;"—softly said the sunny-haired maiden—"that is Ann."

"Ah, Annie!"—said the little man impulsively.—"I could love you, Annie dear, if my heart were only here."

"You are a poet, sir!"—admiringly lisped the damsel thus addressed.

"No, Annie, not a poet—but a poor unfortunate lover who has suffered the cruel fate of haughty woman's scorn."

"Oh, sir,"—said Annie—"tell me your story. I am sure it is so romantic!"

"It is as brief as sad"—said he.

"I came to this Fair as bright and dapper a gentleman as ever waved a fan in dear Japan. The atmosphere of my native land was here, here in this bower which you and your sisters filled with bloom. I stood demure and quiet under a parasol where I could see the people. They did not notice me, and they never dreamed that I had a heart.

"I myself had forgotten the fact, till there came the moment of realization that I had lost it. I was uneasy by day, sleepless by night, thinking about it. I heard one of the Japanese maidens say she was in love. 'How do you know?'—she was asked. 'Oh,'—she replied—'I'm so happy all the time—all the time thinking of him—so happy and so much thinking, that I don't even sleep.' 'Now,'—thought I—'if I only were happy, I'd know I was in love.'

"But I could n't be happy till I found my heart.

"I knew I could n't have lost it in the Japanese quarter, for I had one day boldly offered it to the belle of the bazar and she had ridiculously rejected it. I sought it up in a cosy corner which I had loved to visit in the Russian tea room, and over my tea cups I scanned the glorious eyes of those grand dames there. The regal beauty of it all was bewildering, but I realized that if I left there my heart had gone ere this into some rare Welsh rabbit, and so I sought the other quarters. I lingered in Spain, in Sweden, intoxicated with the delight of one, elated with the vivacity of the other. But if my heart had been roaming there, it had eluded capture.

"In France I found it. Lingering over a box of bonbons, I felt a wave of rapture in the presence of a rare Alsatian peasant girl. I slyly felt in her pocket, and there was my heart. Just then another girl said 'Here are the pins you were asking for', and she replied 'I have the dearest little pincushion to keep them in!' Then she felt in her pocket—for my heart! I seized it and ran. She screamed after me, but I did n't propose to have my vital essence pricked out by a lot of sharp-tipped bits of Yankee wire, so I scampered into the darkest corner, and that was the Gypsy tent.

"There was a red light there, and it gleamed into the face of just the loveliest woman I had ever seen. And before I knew it I had lost my heart again, and she was toying with it in her hand.

"'It is yours,'—said I.—'Now tell my fortune.'

"'What a dear little red little ripe little strawberry!' She touched it to her lips, and I thrilled with gladness; but slowly her teeth gleamed dazzling white, and I knew she was going to bite.

"'Alas!'—I cried.—"'Oh, Gypsy queen, it is not a strawberry! it is my unhappy heart!'

"She laughed and handed it back.

"'I have hearts enough—so keep this, little boy!'

"For a long time I wandered about, my face smarting with shame as I thought of the taunts that my poor little heart had met. I clutched my hand over it and tried to still its throbs. And then I knew I longed to place it in the keeping of some gentle, loving soul.

"I turned my back on all the proud and haughty beauties, and found my ideal in the sweet American girl. She was a creature radiant and divine. I found her making a visit to Venice, and the celestial blue of her eyes created for me a new heaven infinitely rarer than the Italian azure. Before I could reach her side she had stepped into a boat and was borne away by the oars of the gondoliers, and singing as she went.

"I tossed her my heart, but whether she caught it, or whether it sank beneath the waters at the Bridge of Sighs, I can never know. I only know that she is gone from me forever."

The chrysanthemum was sobbing violently and shedding her golden locks all over the little Japanese. He looked up and was shocked to see how nearly bald she was getting.

"Go to the lake!"—she cried.—"Perhaps you may find her there." Then she wilted.

The little Japanese roamed rheumatically through the big building, looking for the lake, and night came on.

In the morning the janitor swept up the rubbish of the Japanese quarter, and in it was the frozen, lifeless stalk of a yellow chrysanthemum whose petals were all astray. And down in the big deep swimming tank he found the body of a little Japanese gentleman whose wig had lost its glue and had floated off, and whose face was pallid where the enamel had soaked away. But his eyes were brighe, and had a celestial blue that must have been reflected from afar.

Killed Him, But Regrets It.

One of the Rockview Terrace citizens is justly proud of a fine flock of Kanaka ducks. Lately they have one by one mysteriously disappeared. While engaged in feeding them yesterday afternoon, he noticed a wing protruding from beneath a board walk. He called the coachman, who carried an axe. They pried up the walk, and an animal dashed out at full speed. The coachman was faster, and got in the first blow, but both were knocked out in one round, as the duck thief was a great big skunk.

—Man or boy, you will find just what you want to wear at Werner's, the popular clothing house, 206 West Front street. Mr. Werner has just received $20,000 worth of ready-made goods which will suit you thoroughly, and on which the price is 50 cents on the dollar. Think of a $20 overcoat for $10, and other things in proportion.

SEWER WORK DELAYED

Extension of Time Asked by the Company.

WANT TO WAIT TILL SPRING.

Over 13,000 Feet of Pipe Laid, But That Is Not Quite One-Half of the Contract — Counselor Marsh Denies the City's Liability in a Damage Case—Citizens Rapid Transit Committee to Select Routes.

The regular monthly meeting of the City Council was held last evening. All the members were present. In the absence of Clerk MacMurray George B. Wean acted in his place.

The following petitions were read and referred: From R. K. Case and others for crosswalks on Ninth street near the Park Avenue Baptist Church, and College place at Ninth street. From Mrs. F. W. Clark and others, Netherwood, asking for electric lights on Park terrace between Belvidere and Berkley avenues, also on Leland avenue to Cushing road. In connection with the widening of Madison avenue, Samuel Dreier petitioned that he had paid $6 for a set of plans which were drawn up at the request of the Commissioners. J. P. Homan asked the Council for permission to build an extension on his house, 118 West Fifth street.

The Council received a communication that the five new fire hydrants had been placed as follows: Front street and Grant avenue; Front street 500 feet from Grant avenue; Plainfield avenue corner of Stelle avenue; Plainfield avenue corner of Sherman avenue; and Elmwood place corner of West Second street.

Policeman Charles Giese, on account of ill health, sent in his resignation, which was accepted.

Residents of Dunellen avenue asked the Council to give them lights from Front street to Clinton avenue.

The Mayor and Clerk were authorized to secure $4,000 on a note to continue the work on sewers, and the Treasurer was authorized to pay notes as they came due instead of carrying them on the books.

George Lewis was granted a hack license.

Mr. Frost reported that 12,318 feet of sewer pipes had been laid up to date, which is a trifle less than one-half of the work.

Mr. Dumont offered a resolution that the City Treasurer pay the $1,500 fire bond, with interest from July 1 at 5 per cent., as soon as possible. It was adopted.

The petition of Asa Collier, presented at the previous meeting, for a leanto on his building on Sycamore avenue, was taken up and granted.

Mr. Erickson, of the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, moved that the five new hydrants be accepted by the city, which was adopted.

Property owners on Arlington avenue and West Ninth street asked for a crosswalk on the west side of Arlington avenue. This was referred with power.

The ordinance relating to the laying out of Stelle avenue was adopted on third reading.

Street Committee reported back the petition for a crosswalk on Ninth street, and the walk was ordered laid.

A communication from W. W. Cook stated that great inconvenience had been experienced in getting the right size of pipes for the sewer construction, and asked that the work on Front street be laid over till Spring. On account of the difficulty, the company were unable to finish the work by Dec. 15, hence they asked for an extension of time. It was referred to the Sewer Committee.

The Street Committee, not willing to assume the responsibility of selecting the routes for the proposed extensions of the street railway in the city, asked that the Mayor appoint five citizens to lay out the routes, subject to the approval of the Council. This was adopted.

The ordinance relating to the laying of sidewalks in Netherwood was adopted on third reading. The walks are to be of bluestone flagging, cement or crushed stone, and are as follows: Belvidere avenue from South avenue to Woodland avenue; Woodland avenue from Belvidere to Watchung avenue; South avenue from Netherwood station to Richmond street.

Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh gave his opinion in regard to the bill of the Plainfield Water Supply Company for damages to one of the hydrants July 13, 1894, when two of the fire horses attached to a dump cart ran into the hydrant and broke it. The opinion was that the city is not liable for the acts of firemen in such cases, and therefore the city should not pay the bill.

The Council adjourned at 9:15 to meet again Dec. 14, at 8 p. m.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. V. DANCING FOR PRIZES.

Enjoyable Event at the Home of the Misses Weigman.

Miss Laura Raden and Miss Nellie Creger arranged a very enjoyable dance, which took place at the home of the Misses Weigman on East Front street last evening. A prize waltzing contest was a feature. Miss Connor captured the feminine prize, a fancy hair pin, and Arthur Sherwin the masculine, which was a doll. During the evening those present partook with zest of the excellent refreshments provided.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Stiglitz, Mr. and Mrs. Snyder, Mr. and Mrs. George Demarest, Mr. and Mrs. Feller, Mr. and Mrs. Belter, Mr. and Mrs. Grieb, Mrs. Raden, Mrs. Swenson, Mrs. Wiedemeyer, Mrs. G. Voehl, Mr. and Mrs. David Allen, Miss Caspar, Miss Lizzie Schafer, Miss Johnson, Miss Emma Angleman, Miss Laura Raden, Miss Anna Fiering, Miss Mollie Feller, Miss Nellie Creger, Miss Lizzie Scheidecker, Miss Connor, Miss Lottie Messler, Misses Lina and Gussie Sargeant, Miss Moraller, Miss Moreman, Mr. Weinwurm, Mr. Ivers, Emil Scheidecker, Arthur Sherwin and Irving Ball.

SILVER WEDDING.

Delightful Twenty-Fifth Anniversary at the Happy Hartpence Home.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Hartpence of 1 136 West Third street celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage at their home last evening. It was a delightful event, and many very handsome and useful presents were given as tokens of esteem and affection. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Hartpence, Sergeantsville, Hunterdon County; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wenzel and family Mr. and Mrs. Edward Brown, Mr. and Mrs. H. Angleman, Miss Reading and Miss Conover. About 11 all were served with refreshments, which were all that could be desired. The happy company left for their homes about 2, very much pleased with the event of the evening, and wishing Mr. and Mrs. Hartpence many more years of happiness.

GRAND OFFICERS ATTEND.

Knights Templar Enjoy a Royal Visitation.

The Sir Knights of Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. T., met at the asylum, 114 East Front street, last evening at 8, for inspection, rehearsal and review. After the work of the evening was concluded all retired to the banquet hall, where a feast was enjoyed and remarks were made by the official visitors and grand officers, as follows:

Eminent Sir John E Rowe, G C G; Very Eminent Sir Edward Mills, Deputy Grand Commander; Eminent Sirs Robert Dingwell, G G; L G Dawson, G S W; W H Sebring, G J W; J J Henry, G S B; and Eminent Sir D C Adams, and Sirs Jacob Kirkner, N Y Dungan, Rev E M Rodman, John M Crane and others. The last named are members of Trinity Commandery. The attendance was very large.

Drunken Brutality.

Arthur Smith, colored, of the boulevard, became drunk and disorderly last evening about 5, and when on Fourth street near Liberty he attacked Mrs. Tobin and John Collins, both aged persons, and beat them severely. He also broke several panes of glass.

Two boys came up town and notified Sergeant Kiely, and he, with Policeman McCue, went to the place of disturbance with a wagon and brought the troublesome man to the station house.

This morning Mrs. Tobin and John Collins made complaints against him, and Justice Nash held him in $250 bail on each charge to await the action of the Grand Jury.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF MANKIND.

President Seth Low Entertains an Optimistic View of Our Social Conditions.

The Workingmen's Club is an organization connected with the Episcopal Church of the Holy Communion, New York. It has for its main object the banding together of men for the purpose of mutual helpfulness. It's methods might successfully be adopted in any community. During illness every member of good standing has a physician free, and during the first twelve weeks of such illness he recives $5 weekly. Should his illness be prolonged from 13 to 24 weeks he receives $3 a week. In the event of his death his next of kin receives as many dollars as there are members in good standing in the club, and in the event of his wife's death he receives as many half dollars as there are members in good standing. During the twenty-two years the club has paid out more than $30,000 in sick and death benefits.

SETH LOW.

At a recent meeting, President Low, of Columbia College, said that the relation of the brain toiler to the hand toiler was very close. Although it may not always be admitted, there are few products of able men's brains that do not work good to those who toil with their hands. No class of people teaches the lesson of fidelity so well as the handicraftsman.

Every railroad train that carries its passengers in safety to their destination proves this. Many people are alarmed at the condition of unrest that seems to prevail. There is no cause for alarm. History fails to show any condition of unrest in the life of a nation that did not ultimately result in good.

This is era of combinations. These combinations have wiped out individuals yet combinations are not a bad force. They seem so only because we have not learned how to operate them.

The hostility between combinations and individuals, between capital and labor, will settle itself in good time and in the right way. The speaker believed so, because the Divine power which has brought society from a condition of slavery to individual equality teaches that all men are brothers, and that power will furnish the solution to all social problems which will be satisfactory to all.

THE CAT COMES RIGHT SIDE UP.

A Dog That Thought He Had Mastered the Theory But Hadn't.

A correspondent of the New York Herald writes:

I am somewhat interested in the question why a cat lights on its feet. To the untutored mind of an old farmer this question, so troublesome to French scientists, is perfectly simple. The cat, by a quick muscular movement, more rapid in its effects upon the body than the attraction of gravitation, forms a fulcrum of its own body, which enables it to turn and strike upon its feet.

In this connection it may be interesting for me to relate an amusing scene that I witnessed when a boy at home upon my father's farm. A part of my duties was to bring the cows from a field in a distant part of the farm. On these trips after the cows I was usually accompanied by a small but fleet footed cur dog. On one occasion the dog came suddenly upon a fox, and a race for life immediately commenced.

The field was new, but little cultivated and the surface uneven, caused by trees being uprooted, and after time and decay had done their work a knoll and corresponding depression at the side were left in the surface. Across one of these the fox ran, the dog but a jump behind.

As I was about to realize the height of a boy's ambition by seeing the dog at the next bound leap upon the back of the fox the scene suddenly changed.

The dog, with eyes intently fixed upon the object of his pursuit, failing to observe the lay of the land, turned a half somerset over the knoll, landing on his feet in the depression beyond, and not realizing that he had changed ends continued the race for several rods, not however, in the direction of the fox, but the other way.

Not long since I related this story to a party of gentlemen, and I was at once voted "the cake" for having told the biggest yarn. And as an evidence that it was a yarn, the argument was used that the dog must have landed on his back. But no. He simply did the cat act, struck upon his feet, and his body being reversed ran directly away from the fox.

Boston's Cultured Cabman.

A. Conan Doyle was astonished when a Boston cabman told him "he would rather have a ticket to his lecture than the fare." He thought he was travelling incognito and asked the man how he found him out. The man replied that "he knew him as a member of the Cabman's Literary Guild, to which the lecturer's library had been telegraphed in advance, and that he recognized Dr. Doyle to be the man, because his coat lapels had been evidently grasped by New York reporters, his hair manifestly cut by a Philadelphia barber, his hat seemingly saved with difficulty from the pirates by whom he was surrounded at a Chicago luncheon, while his overshoes bore traces of Buffalo mud and there was an odor of a Utica cigar upon his person." The doctor surrended at indiscretion, and gave to the fellow a ticket for his whole family.

High-water Mark of Sensationalism by a Metropolitan Pastor.

"The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad," was the text chosen by Dr. R. S. MacArthur, most prominent clergyman of the Baptist denomination in New York, recently for his sermon.

"These words express the feeling of patriotic American citizens," said Dr. MacArthur. "We express gratitude to God for peace within our own borders and with all the nations of the earth. We are grateful that during the last election our best citizens and our bravest and noblest women did their duty in creating a wholesome public sentiment, and that the men cast a patriotic ballot. We are grateful for the absence of partisan feeling over the result of the election. The best men of both great parties united to oppose the worst men.

"Tammany Hall was an indescribable monster, part man, part beast, part demon. The monster's triumphant chariot was a beer wagon, his throne a whiskey barrel, his sceptre a policeman's baton, and his crown both civic and ecclesiastical. The civic crown was ivy and bay, dedicated to Venus and Bacchus, and his ecclesiastical crown was the Pope's tiara.

"A recipe for the production of this institution is instructive. Take a large caldron, beneath it place embers from hades; into it put intellectual ignorance, social vulgarity, political venality and religious bigotry. Then add thugism, thievery and murder, and over all liberally sprinkle holy water. Dip out with the ladle of 'communism of pelf,' pour into the black bottle of municipal corruption, then let the Angel of Truth come with a label, which, when placed upon the bottle, will read in red letters. 'Deadly Poison,' and immediately below in black letters, 'Tammany Hall.'

"We have partially secured and still more fully demand protection for the American flag. The American flag will soon wave on ships in every part of the world, ships made in American yards, of American material, by American men, and commanded by American officers and sailors. The flag will be protected from unpatriotic contamination when it floats on the City Hall and other municipal buildings. There are times when we are glad to see the flag intertwined with flags of other nations, but true Americans never wish to see it dishonored by association on a public building with a green rag which is not the flag of any nation. That bit of green stands for national disloyalty and religious bigotry. Ireland has no flag but the British flag.

"We need still greater protection for our public schools. The American public schools should be the nurseries for American patriotism. They are not places where religion should be taught. Teaching of religion belongs to the home and the church. The Church and State must be kept forever separate. To politicians who would use the public schools to advance their selfish ambition or their party's purposes we say, 'Hands off, gentlemen!' To ecclesiastics, to whatever Church they belong, who lay their velvet gloves in which is the iron hand upon the public schools, we again say, 'Hands off, gentlemen!'"

MILITARY TRAINING.

High Type of Physical Development in the German Army.

The stalwart vigor of the German race of to-day might well be obvious to the most superficial observer coming from other lands. And many are of opinion that the favorable causes which have brought this about are likely to tell with undiminished force in the future, says the Chautauquan. Only the other day an English paper noted with "surprise" a series of statistics, from which the unwelcome facts shone forth that whereas the average English boy was heavier than the German at an early age, the difference in weight between them gradually decreased until at manhood the average weight was in favor of the German.

But the army has done more than this. In other countries often a centre of demoralization, in Germany the army has been a source of physical and moral cleanliness, moral in the sense that it compelled these elements to do and obey, which in other countries form and remain the scum of the population. It is to no small extent this military training, from which the Germans are falsely said to fly to other countries, which makes them such successful competitors in every walk of life.

Not a Good Illustration.

Mr. Dowling of New York was speaking of the incompatibility of a union of Church and State in this country. He said:

"Patrick and Biddy had been a long time married, but did not get along well together, for they were almost continually quarreling. It happened, however, that one day when they were sitting opposite the fire, in came the cat and dog, and laid down between them and the fire, and also opposite each other. Presently Biddy speaks up and says:

"'Faith, Patrick, isn't it a shame that we should be always quarreling; see the cat and dog, how peaceably they get along.'

"'Och, Biddy, sure and it isn't a fair comparison at all! Just tie them together and see how they'll act.'"—Middletown Record.

AUTHOR OF BEN BOLT.

Dr Thomas Dunn English's Unfortunate Early Indiscretion.

Dr. Thomas Dunn English is a Congressman from New Jersey. He is also a poet, novelist, dramatist, physician, lawyer and politician. A most interesting figure, merely to look at, as he stood talking to his younger fellow craftsmen in the New York Cloister Club recently and told the story of Ben Bolt.

Dr. English modestly confesses to 75 years, but his friend, Poet Bunner, claims five more for him, in spite of the records of the University of Pennsylvania, which put him in the class of '39.

The American Cyclopedia twenty years ago said: "He is the author of more than twenty successful dramas"; "he is the author of several novels"; "he is the author of the 'Gallows Goers,' a rough but vigorous poem of which hundreds of thousands of copies were circulated."

It was the most delightful period in the dinner hour when the dinner is being enjoyed—having been eaten—and the table bears only ash trays and coffee, when a comfortable, inviting silence inspires to monologue after the rattle of general talk, that Dr. English rose to talk to the "youngsters," as he called them, of the Cloister.

"An indiscretion committed more than fifty years ago should not be brought up against a man at such an hour as this," said the Doctor. "Let me tell about—well, say, about the popgun tariff bills, for you know I have a short session to serve yet in Congress."

The Friars laughed him down and called for "Ben Bolt."

"Well," said the Doctor, "I thought when I wrote

"And sweet Alice lies under the stone,

I had done with her and her possible sweetheart 'Ben Bolt,' but it appears not. I wrote those verses in 1843 at the request of N. P. Willis, who, with George P. Morris, had revived the New York Mirror as the New Mirror. Willis asked me for a sea song, and I started one. But I stuck. Possibly some of you younsters may have had that same experience when you have set out to write something to order."

THOMAS DUNN ENGLISH.

The particular "youngster" the speaker happened to be looking at as he said this was William Dean Howells, and the novelist laughed and nodded, as if in assurance that even a traveller from Altruria was sometimes stuck when so unaltruistic as to write anything to order."

"Then," the Doctor continued, "I began on something else, nearly finished it, patched on a piece of the unfinished sea song, and sent the thing to Willis, telling him if it did not suit not to return it, but burn it.

"Well, the lines became popular. It was copied, without credit, in the English papers, where it was assumed to be of British birth. After I saw it in print it seemed to me that the song would go well to music, and I spoke to several composers about it, but they all answered, 'It won't sing.' I thought it would and took the matter into my own hands by writing some music for the words myself.

"But my music did not become so popular as that adapted from a German song by a young singer and actor named Wilson Kneass, a son of a celebrated actress of that time. He had an opportunity to appear in a stage production if he could furnish a new and popular song. A fellow player named Hunt, an Englishman, recited 'Ben Bolt' to Kneass, and suggested it as a song. He had seen the words in an English paper and remembered them. Kneass adapted the music, as I have said, and the song made an immense hit, not only in this country, but in England, where it was sung, parodied, 'answered' and illustrated. It created a furore in London, and was, of course, still supposed to be strictly British. After several revivals, I supposed until recently that I had heard the last of it, but now a gentleman named Du Maurier, whom I never harmed in my life, revives it in 'Trilby.'

"When I first went to Congress, four years ago, I was duly reported in the papers as the author of the song, and it brought me many curious interviews. One member introduced me to his wife whose three Christian names were 'Alice Ben Bolt,' another assured me he had been lulled to sleep in his cradle by his mother singing 'Ben Bolt,' and a third informed me when he introduced me to his wife that it was her singing of 'Ben Bolt,' that won his proposal of marriage. 'I am sorry for it,'" I answered.

The Public Classified.

The public may be divided into three classes: Those who read and remember; they are few.

Those who read and forget: they are many.

Those who do not read: they are most.

The original writer of to day belongs to the first, and he writes for the others.—London Truth.

Little Jack prays every night for all the different members of his family. His father had been away at one time for a short journey, and that night Jack was praying for him as usual. "Bless papa and take care of him," he was beginning as usual, when suddenly he raised his head and listened. "Never mind about it, now, Lord," ended the little fellow; "I hear him down in the hall!"

Women and Children Were Tortured To Death.

Sickening Details of the Awful Armenian Slaughter Given by Refugees Who Escaped to Athens—Victims Scalded to Death by Kurds—Fiendish Cruelty.

Athens, Dec. 4.—Twenty Armenians from the Sassoun district have arrived here. One of the refugees, a man named Khadjik, states that his uncle and aunt were among the Armenians slaughtered by Kurds, the latter being violated previous to being put to death. He adds that an Armenian priest named Kevont was killed for refusing indignantly to celebrate Turkish rites in his church at Vartemis. The village contained 325 Armenian houses before the Turks attacked it, but when the fugitives left only twenty-five houses remained standing. The guns kept up a continuous fire upon Dalvorig until practically not one stone was left standing upon another.

Selo, the Bey of Initzoun, a Kurd, with a detachment of Kurdish cavalry, went with the Turkish soldiers to the village of Semal and forcibly took the Armenian priest from his church, after disgustingly defiling the sacred vessels and the priests hands. They then bound him on a donkey, which they drove a distance of a few yards. The soldiers then fired at the priest and killed him and the beast to which he was bound.

In the same village the Turkish soldiers entered an Armenian house and violated a woman and her daughter, the latter being fourteen years of age. From this village Selo forcibly took eight Armenian girls and sent them to his harem at Initzoun.

Further atrocities were committed by the Turks at the village of Keliehuzen. Before dawn this place was surrounded by soldiers, and while the inhabitants were still asleep it was set on fire.

The brutal soldiers entered the residence of a man named Arakel, who was asleep with his wife, and tortured them both in a terrible manner with red hot iron.

At Keliehuzen the soldiers killed the Armenian priest, Margos, who, with twenty other inmates of a house, was burned to death, the soldiers preventing anybody from escaping from the burning dwelling.

Dalvorig, it appears, is the largest village in the Province of Sassoun, and its inhabitants, when they learned of the horrors perpetrated by the Turks at Vartemis, attacked the Turks on the frontier. The Turkish commander eventually sent twelve soldiers into Dalvorig in order to learn what had occurred. The Armenians, filled with indignation at the atrocities committed by the Turks at Vartemis, attacked this detachment of Turkish soldiers and put them all to death.

When the Turkish commander heard of the death of his soldiers he determined upon avenging them in the most bloody manner possible. A strong force of Turkish troops was sent to the village with artillery, and the massacre began.

The chief of the village of Cheneg was captured by the soldiers and bound to his two daughters. All three were then scalded to death with boiling water.

A detachment of twenty-five regulars of the Turkish cavalry, after committing inexpressible horrors in the village of Sebghank, went to the village school and ravished the girls they found there. The cavalrymen then destroyed the building.

Ibo Bey, a notorious Kurd brigand of the village of Diibran and a colonel in the regular army, went with a detachment of Turkish troops to the Armenian villages of Bahlou, Hatezgent and Komk and at each place they committed every crime which it was possible to commit.

After driving out the men they collected the female children of Bahlou together, about two hundred in all, and killed them all with guns and swords. After the massacre the Turkish soldiers regaled themselves with wine and whatever else they could find in the village.

The Kurdish regular troops from Pizan and Bahran entered the Armenian villages of Aliandzig and Aghteg, killed the inhabitants and wrecked their houses.

The number of villages devastated in this manner is thirty-two. The Armenians fled in every possible direction, but many of them were captured by the Turkish troops before they could get away and were slaughtered.

Elected by Two Votes.

DROWNED IN THEIR CAR.

A Train Plunges Into Lake Champlain with Fatal Results.

Whitehall, N. Y., Dec. 4.—Train No. 4, on the Delaware & Hudson railroad, which left Montreal bound for New York, was thrown from the track one mile and a half north of the Fort Henry tunnel. It was in charge of Conductor McLaughlin, and the engineer was George Long. The train consisted of a mail and express car, baggage car, smoking car, emigrant car, passenger car and drawing-room car.

The engine did not leave the track, but the tender and the mail and express car went crashing along an embankment and finally plunged into Lake Champlain. One end of the smoker also went into the water. The emigrant and passenger cars left the rails, but fortunately their momentum was checked and they remained on the bank.

The express messenger and the mail messenger went down with their car and were drowned, and several others narrowly escaped the same fate. A number of persons received injuries, and for a time intense excitement prevailed.

The names of none of the injured passengers were learned, but the list of casualties as far as obtainable is as follows: Richard Quinn of Ballston, N. Y., express messenger; drowned. Samuel Rouse of Rouse's Point, N. Y., mail agent; drowned. James Coborne of Green Island, baggageman; bruised. James McLaughlin, conductor, of Whitehall, bruised. George Place, extra baggageman, bruised.

DECLARED HER INSANE.

Irene House, Who Has Had Nine Husbands, Must Go to an Asylum.

Trenton, N. J., Dec. 4.—Irene House, the woman who has had nine husbands, one of whom she shot and killed, has been adjudged insane by a jury of twenty-four men. The proceedings were brought in the interest of William Anderson, the woman's only son and her child by her first husband, to prevent her squandering property in which she has a life title with an annual income of $2,000.

The woman who is in jail charged by her eighth husband, Paul K. Redmond, with assault and battery and also with being guilty of infidelity with Harry Carson, her ninth and, as she claims, her legal husband, was visited in her cell by the jury to whom she characterized the proceedings as a conspiracy. She has been in the asylum several times, once for a year immediately after killing House, her second husband, she escaping punishment on the ground of insanity.

WERE OTHER WARRANTS.

Dr. McClintock Must Stand Trial in Pennsylvania.

Meadville, Pa., Dec. 4.—The case of Dr. C. B. McClintock, who is wanted in White Plains, N. Y., on a charge of abducting 16-year-old Hattie Pye, came before the court here. Sheriff Pugsley of White Plains presented the requisition papers. After examination Judge Henderson ruled that as there are two warrants out here anti-dating the White Plains warrant, the requisition papers could not be honored until the local cases were settled. The doctor was returned to jail.

New Torpedo Boats.

Washington, Dec. 4.—The secretary of the navy will to-day advertise for proposals for three torpedo boats for which congress appropriated $450,000. These boats are of the general type of the Ericcson, with slightly greater displacement and must attain an average speed of not less than 24.5 knots on the acceptance trial.

Drained Life's Dregs.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 4.—Mrs. Edith Armstrong, once Edith Forney, of an aristocratic Virginia family, and niece of John W. Forney, founder of the Philadelphia Press, was found dead in her cell in the county jail. She was a slave to morphine and opium and had committed a number of thefts to obtain the drugs.

Killed by a Boiler.

Providence, R. I., Dec. 4.—The boiler in a saw mill at Greene, run by John A. Brown, lumber dealer, blew up there, killing Mr. Brown and Lyman Scott, and seriously injuring N. Gladding, William Cushman and a boy named Remington. The boiler was thrown 250 feet into a swamp.

Thieves Rob a Jewelry Store.

Erie, Pa., Dec. 4.—Thieves broke into the jewelry store of J. F. Lewis, at Northeast, Pa., and succeeded in getting away with about $3,000 worth of watches and jewelry. The robbers utilized a hand car on the Lake Shore railroad in making their escape from the town with their plunder.

Republican Mayor Elected.

Woonsocket, R. I., Dec. 4.—At the city election Aram J. Bothier, republican, was re-elected mayor receiving 1,584 while Etienne C. Delabarre, democrat, received 1,246. The republicans elect four of the five aldermen and twelve of the fifteen common councilmen.

The Ram Katahdin's Trial.

Captain of Harvard's Team.

Boston, Dec. 4.—At a meeting of Harvard's football players Charles Brewer was elected captain for next season.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE

How the President's Message Was Received.

Apparent Listlessness Greeted the Document in Both Chambers—Cheers and Applause for Reed and Chairman Wilson—Many Important Senatorial Resolutions.

Washington, Dec. 4.—The galleries were crowded when the house began its session. Beyond some uproarious cheering when ex-Speaker Reed appeared on the floor, and a round of milder applause when Chairman Wilson came in, there were no scenes of great interest.

The house proceeded to business without any formality other than that of ordinary meeting days. Much attention was given to the president's message during the first hour of its reading but interest lagged and it did not revive until the part dealing with Mr. Carlisle's bond scheme was read. Silence marked the conclusion, and after the death of Representative Wright, of Pennsylvania, had been announced, the house adjourned as a mark of respect to his memory.

In the senate the reading of the message attracted but little attention. The voice of the secretary was so indistinct that the words could not be heard a dozen paces from his desk. When the reading had been concluded Mr. George (dem., Miss.) introduced a resolution instructing the committee on rules to report amendments to the rules giving the senate power to come to a vote at any time on any pending question after reasonable opportunity for debate. The matter was referred to the committee on rules. Mr. Hoar (rep., Mass.) introduced another requesting the president to communicate, if not incompatible with public interests, information as to alleged cruelties committed on Armenians in Turkey, especially on those who had declared their intentions to become naturalized in the United States. Mr. Blanchard (dem., La.) also introduced another on the same subject; declaring the reported outrages a blot on the civilization of the age; and requesting the president to communicate the remonstrance to the government of Turkey.

Mr. Turpie (dem., Ind.) advocated a change in the method of choosing United States senators, and declaring that the present method tends to mar and mutilate the system of popular represenative government. The resolution was laid on the table, with a notice that Mr. Turpie will address the senate on the subject next Thursday.

Mr. Lodge (rep., Mass.) called on the president for information as to the delivery by the United States consul at Shanghai of two Japanese citizens to the Chinese authorities. Mr. Peffer (pop., Kan.) asked that the judiciary committee be instructed to inquire and report as to whether the recent issue of United States bonds was authorized by any act of congress now in force. He also called on the president to inform the senate as to the facts and circumstances that necessitated the use of United States troops in Chicago last July.

The vice-president announced his signature to the bill passed by both houses last session granting the right of way through the Arlington reservation for electric railway purposes. Mr. Gorman's comment on this announcement was his remark, in an undertone, that a railroad bill was the first thing to be attended to at this session.

The majority of the democratic senators refused to talk of the president's message. Senator Brice of Ohio said: "The message is pretty nearly all figures and, although I have not verified them I suppose they are correct. His currency scheme is a dream and like all dreams entirely too visionary to be worth anything."

The republicans heartily condemned the whole affair.

Mr. Platt of Connecticut said: "There are two things that stand out prominently in this message. If the president thinks the present evils are to be cured by further doses of free trade and an effort to get free ships, he has failed to prove it."

Mr. Hawley of Connecticut said: "The message is disappointing. It was supposed there would be something in it. It is most remarkable that it wholly omits any reference whatever to the amazing expression of opinion of the people in the recent elections.

"As to foreign affairs the president's course is reactionary and un-American. He says nothing of the immensely important Nicaraguan canal and indicates a desire to retire from our policy in Samoa. Until Mr. Carlisle's report shall appear no opinion can be expressed on his financial policy. So far as it can be understood it proposes an inflation of paper currency on an insufficient basis and means a revival in some form of the old state banks."

Mr. Hoar of Massachusetts said: "The message makes no contribution of importance to the measures for the relief of the people in their present uncomfortable condition. It indicates the president's consciousness of the fact that he will not be listened to by any considerable portion of the people, either in his own party or among his antagonists, and that he makes his communication in conformity with custom and in obedience to the constitutional requirement."

Mr. Wilson of West Virginia, the chairman of the house committee on ways and means, simply stated that he was glad the president had taken the position he had on sugar—favoring a repeal of the duty on the refined product.

"His recommendations regarding an elastic currency," said Mr. Wilson, "are important but deserve to be carefully studied before expressing an opinion."

Mr. William A. Stone of Pennsylvania said: "The message is simply a statement in detail of the executive acts of the government, confessing the fact that a deficit exists in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, of $69,803,260 brought about as we claim, and as the country has declared, by democratic tariff legislation."

Speaker Crisp and ex-Speaker Reed both declined to express an opinion.

A WONDERFUL AUTO-HARP.

It Started a Great Revival in Blue Point, Long Island.

A wave of religious feeling has struck the little settlement of Blue Point, L. I. Within a month twenty-one converts have been baptized in Great South Bay, just at the end of Blue Point avenue, the main street of the village. The Blue Pointers are very much in earnest about this awakening, and when a Blue Pointer is really in earnest about anything it means something. Religion is the only topic of town talk now, and the crowning glory of this revival is the conversion of the Cochranes.

In response to an invitation, Deacon Hillyer came down from Brooklyn bringing with him an auto-harp.

"I knew almost nothing about the instrument when I got up to play," said Mr. Hillyer to one of the congregation afterward, "and I feared that I would make mistakes, but the spirit was within me, and it made the music through my fingers."

This marked the real beginning of the revival. Many who were present went home, and, in the language of the converted, "became thoughtful." Among these was young Ralph Abrams, who has for some time been "keeping company," as the villagers say, with Miss Alice L'Hommedieu, a pretty girl who lives with her aunt, Mrs. Cochrane, near the bay. Miss L'Hommedieu had been converted, and, between her influence and that of the meeting, Abrams decided that he wanted to be converted. He brought his brother Frank and his sister Venie to the same conclusion regarding themselves.

All three of the Abrams were baptized and became regular attendants at the meetings thereafter. As Alice L'Hommedieu was also a regular attendant, it was quite natural that young Abrams should walk home with her after meeting. One night when Deacon Hillyer had made a powerful address, the young man and the girl, while walking home, agreed to pray, after separating, for the conversion of the girl's aunt, Mrs. Cochrane, and her children. Mr. Cochrane had always been a devout man, but his wife had taken little or no interest in church matters. On reaching home Miss L'Hommedieu went to bed and began to pray for her aunt. In the midst of her prayers there came a knock on her door, and in response to her call of "Come in," Mrs. Cochrane entered.

"Alice," said she, "I've had a call to come to the Lord. I felt as if something were drawing me to renounce sin and be saved, and I was compelled to come to you and tell you of it."

"Praise the Lord!" exclaimed the girl. "I knew it; I knew He would call you!"

"He will save my children, too," continued the woman. "I know they will be saved, and I feel that now is the time. Let us go and call them."

The two women dressed themselves and went to the room of Percy Cochrane, who is nineteen years old. Before they could tell him the object of their visit he exclaimed:

"I am saved! The spirit has come to me! Praise the Lord! I have heard His word and believe it!"

By this time his younger brother, Edward, and their sister, Effie, had arisen. They, too, had felt the spirit call them and had come to tell their tidings of joy.

"Let us all go to the parlor," suggested Miss L'Hommedieu," and hold a meeting of praise and thanksgiving for the wonderful light that has been shown to us."

So they all went to the parlor and spent most of the night in praying and singing. On the following day the circumstances of the wonderful conversion of the Cochranes was known all through the village, and many came to congratulate them and rejoice with them. They were, baptized on the next Sunday in the open waters of the bay.

What the villagers regard as a remarkable case is that of Mr. and Mrs. Gale. They had attended one or two of the meetings. One night they entered and announced their conversion.

"The spirit has come to us," said Mr. Gale. "We have seen the error of our ways, and have turned from them. We feel that we are saved, and we want to be baptized in the faith."

So far the revival has been confined to the Baptists. The village is about evenly divided between Baptists and Methodists. The Methodists were invited to join the Baptists and make the revival unsectarian, but they declined. They say that when they wanted a revival they would get up one of their own.

Indian Runners.

An Indian has been known to carry a letter from Ganzapares to Cuihuahua and back again in five days, says a writer in Scribner's, the distance being nearly 800 miles. In some parts where the Tarahumaris serve the Mexicans they are used to run in the wild horses, driving them into the corral. It may take them two or three days to do it, sleeping at night and living on a little pinole. They bring in the horses thoroughly exhausted, while they themselves are still fresh. They will outrun any horse if you give them time enough. They will pursue deer in the snow, or with dogs in the rain, for days and days, until at last the animal is cornered and shot with arrows, or falls an easy prey from sheer exhaustion, its hoofs dropping of.

An Eccentric General.

Few commanders care to imitate the conduct of Bourbaki, when called upon to deal with a spy during the Austro-French war of '59.

"You are a spy!" said the general when the fellow was brought before him.

"Si Signor," was the answer.

"And you are sent by the Austrians?"

"Si Signor,"

"Very well," was the remark. Then turning to an aide-de-camp.

"Take him round our positions, and show him everything, and"—this to the spy—"when you think you have seen all you want to see, go back to those who have sent you and tell them with my compliments that I am waiting for them."

It Was a Bargain.

Vanity

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. Cleaning or dyeing makes it possible to use soiled or faded garments. And there's where our ax comes in. We are in the Cleaning and Dyeing business. Our cleaner is ready, and our dyer has his fall shades mixed.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTEBOOK.

There were recitations in Assembly Hall this morning by Miss Burnett '96 and Miss Bertha Thorne '95.

The following subjects have been given to the Third Class from which to choose a subject for their December essay. Subjects from Scott's Talisman: The Meeting in the Desert; The Scottish Knight at Engaddi; The Watch at St. George's Mount; The Attempted Murder of King Richard; The Tournament of Honor; Subjects for the Greek Class—The Character of Parysatis; The Character of Cyrus; Life of Xenophon. A number of the class have declared their intention of trying for the special essay prize.

Edgar I. Serrell '95 seriously injured his foot during the Thanksgiving vacation, and will not return to school for a week at least.

The North Plainfield Public School basket-ball team has challenged the High School team to another game.

DRAMA AND OPERA.

PALMER COX'S BROWNIES GROW IN PUBLIC FAVOR.

Grand Opera Promises Greater Successes than it Achieved Last Season. Many of Sardou's Plays in America. Living Pictures Approaching Suggestiveness.

Nothing could have been more brilliant in actual achievement or richer in promise than the opening of the opera season in New York. "Romeo and Juliet," when interpreted by such artists as Mme. Melba, Jean and Edouard de Rezke and Pol Plancon, is a constant delight. To say anything new of a work that has been heard for nearly 30 years is next to impossible. It is pleasant to note, however, that this opera is at last and most deservedly meeting with that appreciation which was denied it for many years. Perhaps Jean de Reske's incomparable embodiment of Romeo has as much to do with the present popularity of the work as anything else. Mme. Melba seems to have caught something of the tenor's spirit. I for my own part took much keener delight in the beautifully poetic and tender manner which marked her singing of the balcony scene music than in the brilliant waltz which the audience insisted upon hearing the second time. But then sustained tones coming from so pure a voice always gives one more pleasure than the most intricate and dazzling feats of vocalization. Edouard de Rezke was the Friar. His is such a gloriously sonorous voice that you can never think of anything else. Like his brother, he is always bent on being dramatically discreet, but whether he happens to sing Marcel or Friar Laurence or the King in Lorengrin, you always catch yourself saying, "Heavens, what a voice!"

M. Sardou will be well represented on the New York stage this season. Besides "A Woman's Silence," two more of the great French playwright's latest works are to be produced here within the next two months, while Mrs. Langtry promises us a revival of "La Patrie," probably in January. The first of the new plays to be seen is "Gismonda," which Mme. Bernhardt has just produced in Paris with great success, if the Parisian press is to be believed, and which Miss Fanny Davenport will present to the American public for the first time at the Fifth Avenue Theatre in December. The other new play I refer to is "Mme. Sans Gene," in which Miss Katherine Kidder will be seen at the Broadway Theatre on January 14, and which Mlle. Rejane will present in the original at Abbey's about a month later. Of "Gismonda" the French critics say it is "a work of high literary merit, as well as of real dramatic power."

Few productions this winter have so minimized the usual difference between promise and accomplishment as the dramatic presentment of Palmer Cox's familiar "Brownies." The exactness with which these whimsical figures have been transferred to the stage is a matter of considerable doubt, but there is enough of the familiar characteristics of the playful people to give to the performance a refreshingly novel aspect. Of course, actors could never be found who possess, even approximately, appropriate physical qualifications for brownies, and the attempt to secure this effect by artificial means would have made them too unwieldy for activity. A good enough illusion has been secured, however, to supply new and picturesque figures to the light style of entertainment. This in itself is an accomplishment to be grateful for, but the attention that the brownies attract is deserved for more important reasons. It is not to Mr. Cox's quaint costumes, or the graceful designs of Mr. Birch, that the brownies owe their prosperity in their fleshly form so much as to the fact that they have been endowed in their new creation with nimble brains as well as heels, with a brightness of speech and a spryness of humor that their pantomimic predecessors seldom possessed. Credit for this is doubtless due to Ben Teal, the director of the production. There is no dazzling wit in the brownies' talk, nor any triumphs of humor, but it is all clear-cut. It may be simple in its intent at times, but the leaden dullness of what we have often received as stage humor in such performances is gratefully missed. The lyrics are as simple, but as effective, and are often poetical in their whimsicalities of rhyme and fancy. The costumes designed by Reginald Birch are genuinely artistic. The "Brownies" dressmaking bills are probably not to be compared in size to "Cinderella's," nor are the surroundings ever so grand. But there is noticeable in costume, scenery, and action the force of an intelligence making an effort to do something else than unroll yards of stuffs and scenery before the gaze of an audience that is dazzled into an indifference as to what it hears so long as it sees. There are some delightfully effective scenes among the brownies' surroundings, and the final one is particularly striking in its arrangement of colors and its grouping. Its success is not, however, due to any extravagance of outlay, but to an artistic taste and direction which shows how much more should be valued such a faculty in a play's production.

A new lot of "living pictures" is shown in "Little Christopher Columbus," at the Garden. There are sixteen of the tableaux, and a round dozen are imitations of masterpieces of the nude in art. The naked figures are feminine, of course, and consist of live women posed against painted backgrounds. The present set is bolder than the previous one in its preponderance of unclothed bodies. The poor creatures thus exposed to public view are symmetrical in form and often beautiful in face. They are nearly or quite nude, so far as the eye of the spectator can discern, the texture and hue of the gossamer covering, where there is any, being an undetectable counterfeit of skin. In most cases the woman is displayed almost completely in such a skin-tight envelope, from neck to the very ends of her fingers and toes, every detail of her physical exterior distinctly visible under the intense light that is thrown on the "picture," and without a seam or joint-ure in the thin, soft cover, or a sign of anything except skin next to its underside, to relieve the illusion that it is all her own surface that is in view. Of course there is excellent art in the wonderful fidelity with which these women reproduce the famous pictures of Bougereau, Heyse, Hottot and Bisson, and they will on that account be defended against the charge of indecency. But, what would be said of an exhibition of exclusively nude works at the Academy of Design? And would these "living pictures" draw in the money that they do if the women in them were not alive?

Manual and Grammar.

The Plainfield Manual Training School will in future be known as the Plainfield Manual Training and Grammar School. The addition of the regular school course has been found to be necessary to meet the public requirements.

A. B. Clemens is professor of Higher Mathematics, C. E. Buell instructs in Telegraphy and Motor Electricity, Miss P. S. Dalziel teaches the classes in Clay Modeling and Linear Drawing.

The morning is devoted to scholastic work and the afternoon to manual training. The result of the combination gives great satisfaction to both parents and pupils. Mr. Dalziel considers he has good reason to feel encouraged by the reception his efforts have met with, and he fully appreciates the kind remarks made about his success.

Famous Racers Coming.

There are ten thoroughbred race horses in the play "The Prodigal Daughter" which opens at Music Hall for two nights, Dec. 12-13. The horses are among the best bred racers on the English turf. Roquefort is a descendant of the famous Touchstone; Gadabout is a grandson of Newminster; Calais is a grandson of the historic Blair Athol; Bedfellow is a grandson of Scottish Chief; Hop Scotch is of the Gladiator family; Lozenge by Lowland Chief; Gazelle is a descendant of Newminster and so is Columbus. The horses have each a wonderful record on the English turf, and are the finest specimens of race horses ever brought to this country.

REMARKABLE CURES

Of Recent Date.

A Statement from Ex-Mayor John Corson, Esq., of Clinton, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

I acknowledge with the utmost pleasure the wonderful cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in my case.

I had been a sufferer from piles, which gave me constant pain and distress, during twenty long years, attended with frequent loss of blood and with great and painful protrusion of the pile tumors and rectum whenever my bowels moved.

I tried constantly to get relief from my sufferings, but to no purpose until Mr. Bryan, a friend of mine, who had been cured by Dr. Lighthill of the same trouble, recommended him to me, and he effected a complete and radical cure in my case also, and earned my lifelong gratitude.

JOHN CORSON.

THE CASE OF MR PETER G. EYCK, OF BISSELL, HUNTERDON CO., N. J.

Dr. Lighthill Effects a Complete Cure Where Ten Physicians Had Failed.

TO THE SICK, SUFFERING AND AFFLICTED:

For many years past I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. Every movement of the bowels was attended with loss of blood and with intense pain which lasted for hours and sometimes all day. My condition was aggravated by a prolapse of the rectum, which greatly increased my suffering and sometimes gave me most agonizing pains.

So great was my distress and so bad my condition that I sold my farm, not being able to work it any longer. At one time the protruding pile tumors became so highly inflamed and swollen that they could not be replaced, and I had to go to bed, applying hot poultices for three months before I could get relief.

I had been under the treatment of ten different physicians, some of New York City, Easton, Washington and elsewhere, without any benefit whatever, and had given up my case as hopeless when, luckily for me, I heard of Dr. Lighthill's skill and success in such cases, and went to him for treatment, with the happy result that he effected a radical and permanent cure in less than four weeks's time; and I am glad to say that the entire treatment gave me neither pain nor distress.

I consider my cure perfectly wonderful, and so do all my friends and neighbors. I am confident that there is no case of piles which Dr. Lighthill cannot cure.

THE TALK OF GOTHAM

A ROUSING TESTIMONIAL TO DR. PARKHURST BY PROMINENT MEN.

Flight of a Star Witness of the Lexow Committee to Europe. $25,000 Said to Have Been Furnished by the Police. Features of the $350,000 Robbery.

Mrs. Augusta Thurow, who formerly kept the establishment at 23 Second Avenue, and whose sensational testimony before the Lexow Committee resulted in the dismissal of one police captain, five sergeants and two wardmen from the force, has gone to Europe. All of these former policemen have been indicted by the Grand Jury on the strength of Mrs. Thurow's testimony, and it was on her testimony that reliance was placed to convict the indicted men. What is interesting in connection with her disappearance is the rumor that the men under indictment made up a purse of $25,000 to defeat their conviction, and that a good part of that amount went to Mrs. Thurow to insure her absence from this country for a long time.

The robbery of the Shoe and Leather Bank by a trusted bookkeeper and an accomplice continues to stir banking and police circles. There are many queer facts in connection with the theft. The officers of the bank accuse a man named Frederick Baker of stealing the sum of $354,000 by drawing it over the paying teller's desk in checks in sums of from $200 to $400 at various and frequent times during the past eight years. The fact that this man came several times a week and drew sums of from $200 to $400, it is asserted, was a matter of common note, so common that the bank employees knew him as the '$200 man.' Now, it is ridiculous to suppose that if Baker went so often to the bank to draw checks as to be known as the $200 man that other bank officers would not have noticed it. They would certainly have seen the man drawing check after check, and should have noted that he paid nothing in. This looks queer. There is only one logical way to account for the withdrawal of so large an amount, to my mind, and that is that several men drew the money on the checks, thus allaying the suspicions of the tellers and the bank officers. Then this self-confessed thief, Seely, charged it all up to Baker's account. The fact remains, however, that Baker committed suicide as soon as the robbery became publicly known.

More than five hundred men recently attended the banquet given Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst by the City Vigilance League of which he is the founder. Among them were men who are foremost among those in the city. Women came and sat in the gallery and applauded, even cheered, with the men. There was a deep-seated earnestness and enthusiasm. It was, as Dr. Parkhurst said in what was perhaps the most remarkable speech he has ever made in this city, one of the finest gatherings of men that had come together in New York for many years. When Dr. Parkhurst arose there was a mighty outburst. Cheers were given again and again. Every man was on his feet lending his voice. Bishop Potter cheered decorously. Father Ducey shouted with the enthusiasm of a boy. After bowing his acknowledgements to the cheering diners he said in part: "I cannot look upon such a throng of men, realizing that every fibre of unqualified earnestness and sincerity, and feel any particular anxiety for the future of New York city. We have to remember, however, that it is one thing to win a victory and it is quite another thing and a far more difficult thing wisely and concertedly to utilize that victory. Our future is in the hands of God and in our own. Many persons do not fully understand just what this league stands for. Some of you allied yourselves with us when it was considered neither reputable nor respectable to be associated with myself. It is funny now, but it was not funny then. You and I, young friends, are not in this business for the loaves and fishes, and let me tell you that therein lies ninety-nine-one-hundreths of our power. We do not care a rap for ourselves. But do you realize that more than 100,000 men inside this city believed on Nov. 6 in the municipal government represented by such men as Divver, Sheehan and dirty Koch? We must not forget the strength that lies in 100,000 men, and you and I must go to work to help convert them, and I believe that if our campaign had lasted three weeks longer we would have added to our majority against Tammany by 20,000. Bishop Potter followed Dr. Parkhurst. "My brother, whose services to this city and to the country have been so large, has often been challenged and criticised because he was supposed to have stepped outside his vocation," he began. "I want to say, with all my heart, from the first to the last he held himself rigidly within its dominion. No word that he has ever spoken, no act that he has ever done, is inconsistent with his office and ordination as a minister of Jesus Christ." This, coming from one of the highest dignitaries of one of the most conservative churches in the city, was greeted with a tremendous outburst of applause. "If we want justification of the course of our good brother here, we have it in the early John the Baptist, of whom he is the true successor," the Bishop went on. "Let us hope that the heroism and prophetic foresight with which God has crowned him will make us willing always to follow his lead."

Dr. Parkhurst chatted with General Horace Porter, who presided, while Charles Stewart Smith found a topic which interested Bishop Potter, who wore his clerical black waistcoat. On the end Dr. Lyman Abbott and Chancellor McCracken talked cheerfully. On the other side of General Porter was Mayor Schieren, who conversed with Mr. Choate when he wasn't talking to Father Ducey, in whom James C. Carter was also much interested. Everett P. Wheeler was at the end of the table. The gallery was filled with well-dressed women. In their centre Mrs. Parkhurst was recognized. There was a shout. Then every man stood up and turned his face towards the balcony, and they gave three good cheers for Mrs. Parkhurst, calling her name. She stood up, smiling and happy and self-possessed, and waved back her thanks with her fluttering handkerchief. ROGER LEWIS.

Such strong proofs of the cures made by Dr David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy have been brought to public notice through the various newspaper investigations, that it has become the standard medicine for the diseases for which it is prepared.

Dr. G. H. Ingraham, of Amsterdam N. Y., states where the regular prescriptions used in a case of kidney disease and gravel utterly failed, he prescribed Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and it cured the patient.

Dr. Wm. Smith, of Jewett's Heights, N. Y., prescribed Favorite Remedy for Mrs. Casper Brooks, of Athens, N.Y., who was suffering from kidney disease and ulceration of the stomach; after the second day steady improvement was noted, and final permanent recovery.

Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy acts directly upon the kidneys, liver and blood in cases of nervousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism and Bright's disease; it has made most pronounced cures, after all other treatements have failed.

Good Trotting at the Park.

At the Gentlemen's Driving Park, Thanksgiving Day, three fine races were given.

The first was a five-mile race between horses owned by John Benner and James Guttridge. Mr. Benner's horse won, time 19 minutes.

The second race was one in which Mr. Benner drove his horse five miles to beat 18 minutes. The time made was 15:30.

Ellis Campbell's gray running horse, driven by Ed Campbell, won against Mr. Hayes's trotting horse "Andy".

The attendance at the Park was good.

A MAN OF NOTE.

One of Vermont's Foremost Citizens Speaks Out.

AND HIS POWERFUL WORDS HAVE NO UNCERTAIN SOUND.

He Regrets One Thing Which You Need Not, If You Heed His Words.

Hon. R. D. Slayton has spoken out. From the most prominent man in Stowe, Vt., his powerful words are not only of great interest to all, but carry the greatest weight.

"I have been troubled," he stated, "with nervousness, indigestion and sleeplessness for several years. My food distressed me terribly and caused much gas. If I overdid a little, my stomach would throw up any food taken.

"Any sudden start would unstring my nerves and leave me fearfully unsettled. I had heard for some time of the virtues of that wonderful medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and now determined to use it.

HON. R. D. SLAYTON.

"I can truly say that I was greatly benefited by the use of two bottles. I sleep well, my food digests all right, and my nerves are strong."

This is the kind of evidence you want, and the advice of just such a prominent man is what should decide you. Take his advice and use Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It will make you well and strong.

This great medicine is the discovery and prescription of Dr. Greene, of 35 W. 14th street, New York City, the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. The doctor can be consulted free by all, personally or by letter.

THE MESSAGE IS READ

Text of the President's Address to Congress.

Little of Importance in It Relating To Either the Tariff or the Bond Issue—Against Differential Sugar Duties—The Spanish Outrages—Army and Navy Matters—Not Satisfied With the Government of Samoa—Civil Service Upheld—His Opinions on the Gold Question.

Washington, Dc. 4.—President Cleveland's message to congress was received at the senate and house at twelve o'clock. It was turned over to the clerks and read after the transaction of the usual routine business. After the usual introductory President Cleveland refers to the advantages of a consistent and firm foreign policy, and then says:

"During the past year, pursuant to a law of congress, commissioners were appointed to the Antwerp Industrial Exposition. Through the participation of American exhibitors fell far short of completely illustrating our national ingenuity and industrial achievements, yet it was creditable in view of the brief time allowed for preparation. I have endeavored to impress upon the Belgian government the needlessness and positive harmfulness of its restrictions upon the importation of certain of our food products, and have strongly urged that the rigid supervision and inspection under our laws are amply sufficient to prevent the exportation from this country of diseased cattle and unwholesome meat.

"The termination of the civil war in Brazil has been followed by the general prevalence of peace and order. It appearing at an early stage of the insurrection that its course would call for unusual watchfulness on the part of this government, our naval force in the harbor of Rio de Janeiro was strengthened. This precaution, I am satisfied, tended to restrict the issue to a simple trial of strength between the Brazilian government and the insurgents, and to avert complications which at times seemed imminent. Our firm attitude of neutrality was matained to the end. The insurgents received no encouragement of eventual asylum from our commanders, and such opposition as they encountered was for the protection of our commerce and was clearly justified by public law.

"Although the government of Brazil was duly notified that the commercial arrangement existing between the United States and that country based on the third section of the Tariff Act of 1890, was abrogated on August 28, 1894, by the taking effect of the tariff law now in force, that Government subsequently notified us of its intention to terminate such arrangement on the first day of January, 1895, in the exercise of the right reserved in the agreement between the two countries. I invite attention to the corespondence between the Secretary of State and the Brazilian minister on this subject.

OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS.

"The commission organized under the convention which we had entered into with Chili for settlement of the outstanding claims of each government against the other, adjourned at the end of the period stipulated for its continuance, leaving undetermined a number of American cases which had been duly presented. These claims are not barred and negotiations are in progress for their submission to a new tribunal.

"On the 17th of March last a new treaty with China in furthur regulation of emigration was signed at Washington, and on August 13th it received the sanction of the senate. Ratification on the part of China and formal exchange are awaited to give effect to this mutually beneficial convention.

"A gratifying recognition of the uniform impartiality of this country towards all foreign states was manifested by the coincident request of the Chinese and Japanese governments the agents of the United States government should, within proper limits, afford protection to the subjects of the other during the suspension of diplomatic relations due to a state of war. This delicate office was accepted, and a misapprehension which gave rise to the belief that in affording this kindly unofficial protection our agents would exercise the same authority which the withdrawn agents of the billigerents had exercised, was promptly corrected. Although the war between China and Japan endangers no policy of the United States it deserves our gravest consideration, by reason of its disturbance of our growing commercial interests in the two countries and the increased dangers which may result to our citizens domiciled or sojourning in the interior of Chna.

"Acting under a stipulation in our treaty with Korea (the first concluded with a western power) I felt constrained at the beginning of the controversy to tender our good offices to induce an amicable arrangement of the initial difficulty growing out of the Japanese demands for administrative reforms in Korea; but the unhappy precipitation of actual hostilities defeated this kindly purpose.

"Deploring the destructive war between the two most powerful of eastern nations and anxious that our commercial interests in those countries should be preserved and that the safety of our citizens there shall not be jeopardized, I would not hesitate to heed any intimation that our friendly aid for the honorable termination of hostilities would be acceptable to both belligerents.

THE BEHRING SEA TROUBLES.

"Acting upon the reported discovery of Texas fever in cargoes of American cattle, the German prohibition against importations of live stock and fresh meats from this country has been revived. It is hoped that Germany will soon become convinced that the inhibition is as needless as it is harmful to mutual interests.

"The German government has also protested against that provision of the customs tariff act which imposes a discriminating duty of one-tenth of one cent a pound on sugars coming from countries paying an export bounty thereon, claiming that the exaction of such duty is in contravention of articles five and nine of the treaty of 1828 with Prussia.

"Early in the present year an agreement was reached with Great Britain concerning instructions to be given to the naval commanders of the two governments in Behring sea and the contiguous North Pacific ocean, for their guidance in the execution of the award of the Paris tribunal of arbitration and the enforcement of the regulations prescribed, for the protection of seal life in the waters mentioned. An understanding has also been reached for the payment by the United States of $425,000, in full satisfaction of all claims which may be made by Great Britain for damages growing out of the controversy as to fur seals in Behring sea, or the seizure of British vessels engaged in taking seal in those waters.

THE BLUEFIELDS DIFFICULTY.

"Prominent among the questions of the year was the Bluefields incident, in what is known as the Mosquito Indian strip, bordering on the Atlantic Ocean and within the jurisdiction of Nicaragua. By the treaty of 1860 between Great Britain and Nicaragua the former government expressly recognized the sovereignty of the latter over the strip, and a limited form of self-government was guaranteed to the Mosquito Indians, to be exercised according to their customs, for themselves and other dwellers within their limits. The so-called native government, which grew to be largely made up of aliens, for many years disputed the right to maintain therein a practically independent municipal government.

"Early in the past year efforts of Nicaragua to matain sovereignty over the Mosquito territory led to serious disturbances culminating in the suppression of the native government and the attempted substitution of an impracticable composite administration, in which Nicaragua and allen residents were to participate. Failure was followed by an insurrection which for a time subverted Nicaraguan rule, expelling her officers and restoring the old organization. This, in turn, gave place to the existing local government established and upheld by Nicaragua.

"Although the allen interests arrayed against Nicaragua in these transactions have been largely American, and the commerce of that region for some time has been largely and still is chiefly controlled by our citizens, we cannot for that reason challenge the rightful sovereignty of Nicaragua over this important part of her domain.

"For some months one, and during part of the time two, of our naval ships have been stationed at Bluefields for the protection of all legitimate interests of our citizens. In September last the government at Managua expelled from its territory twelve or more foreigners, including two Americans, for alleged participation in the seditious or revolutionary movements against the republic, but through the earnest remonstrance of this government the two Americans have been permitted to return to the peaceful management of their business.

"Our naval commanders at the scene of these disturbances, by their constant exhibition of firmness and good judgement, contributed largely to the prevention of more serious consequences and to the restoration of quiet and order. I regret that in the midst of these occurrences there happened a most grave and irritating failure of Nicaraguan justice.

HOW JUSTICE MISCARRIED.

"An American citizen named Wilson, residing at Rama, in the Mosquito territory, was murdered by one Arguello, the acting governor of the town. After some delay the murderer was arrested, but so insecurely confined or guarded that he escaped, and notwithstanding our repeated demands it is claimed that his recapture has been impossible by reason of his flight beyond Nicaraguan jurisdiction."

The president then refers with sorrow to the death of Czar Alexander, and states that two American citizens were imprisoned in his country, but that both were releasd through Secretary Gresham's interference. He then speaks of and deplores the semi-weekly revolutions in South American states, and then takes up the Spanish outrages upon American vessels. He says:

TROUBLES WITH SPAIN.

"Unreasonable and unjust fines imposed by Spain on the vessels and commerce of the United States have demanded from time to time during the last twenty years earnest remonstrance on the part of our government. In the immediate past exorbitant penalties have been imposed upon our vessels and goods by customs authorities of Cuba and Porto Rico for clerical errors of the most trivial character in the manifests or bills of lading. In some cases fines amounting to thousands of dollars have been levied upon cargoes or the carrying vessels when the goods in question were entitled to free entry. Fines have been exacted even when the error had been detected and the Spanish authorities notified before the arrival of the goods in port.

"This conduct is in strange contrast with the considerate and liberal treatment extended to Spanish vessels and cargoes in our ports in like cases. No satisfactory settlement of these vexatious questions has yet been reached.

"The Mora case, referred to in my last annual message, remains unsettled. From the diplomatic correspondence on this subject, which has been laid before the senate, it will be seen that this government has offered to conclude a convention with Spain for disposal by arbitration of outstanding claims between the two countries, except the Mora claim, which, having been long ago adjusted, now only awaits payment as stipulated. I regret to say that no definite reply to this offer has yet been made and all efforts to secure payment of this unsettled claim have been unavailing."

Briefly touching upon the Samoan troubles, he says that the present joint government of the United States, Germany and Great Britain is too weak to last, and is most unsatisfactory. He says our entanglement in the affair is against the teachings of the men who laid the foundation of the country and suggests that the United States withdraw from the agreement.

REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES.

"The secretary of the treasury reports that the receipts of the government from all sources of revenue during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, amounted to $372,802,498.29, and its expenditures to $442,605,758.87, leaving a deficit of $69,803,260.58. There was a decrease of $15,952,674.66 in the ordinary expenses of the government, as compared with the fiscal year 1893.

"The value of our total dutiable imports amounted to $275,199,086, being $146,657,625 less than during the preceding year, and the importations free of duty amounted to $379,795,536, being $64,748,675 less than during the preceding year. The receipts from customs were $73,536,488.11 less, and from internal revenue $13,836,539.97 less than in 1893.

"The total tax collected from distilled spirits was $85,259,250.25; on manufactured tobacco $28,617,896.62, and fermented liquors, $31,414,788.04. Our exports of merchandise, domestic and foreign, amounted during the year to $892,140,572, being an increase over the preceding year of $44,495,378.

"The total amount of gold exported during the fiscal year was $76,898,061 as against $108,680,444 during the fiscal year 1893. The amount imported was $72,449,119, as against $21,174,381 during the previous year. The imports of silver were $12,286,552, and the exports were $50,451,265.

"The total bounty paid upon the production of sugar in the United States for the fiscal year was $12,100,208.89, being an increase over the payments made during the preceding year. The amount of bounty paid from July 1, 1894, to August 28, 1894, the time when further payments ceased by operation of law, was $966,185.84. The total expenses incurred in the payment of the bounty upon sugar during the fiscal year was $130,140.85.

BANKS AND BANKING.

"During the calendar year 1893 the production of precious metals in the United States was estimated at 1,739,323 fine ounces of gold, of he commercial and coinage value of $35,955,000, and 60,000,000 fine ounces of silver, of the bullion or market value of $46,800,000 and of the coinage value of $77,576,000. It is estimated that on the first day of July, 1894, the stock of meallic money in the United States, consisting of coin and bullion, amounted to $1,251,640,958, of which $627,923,201 was gold and $624,347,757 was silver.

"Fifty national banks were organized during the year ending October 31, 1894, with a capital of $5,285,000, and seventy-nine, with a capital of $10,475,000, went into voluntary liquadation. Twenty-one banks, with a capital of $2,770,000, were placed in the hands of receivers.

"The total number of national banks in existence on the 31st day of October last was 3,756, being 40 less than on the 31st day of October, 1893. The capital stock paid in was $672,671,365, being $9,6[illegible]291 less than at the same time in the previous year, and the surplus fund and undivided profits, less ex-$33,121,082.10, which was $16,089780 less than on October 31, 1893.

"The circulation was decreased $1,741,563. The obligations of the banks to each other were increased $117,268,334, and the individual deposits were $277,294,489 less than at the corresponding date in the previous year. Loans and discounts were $161,206,923 more than at the same time the previous year, and checks and other cash items were $90,349,963 more. The total resources of the banks at the date mentioned amounted to $3,473,922,055, as against $3,109,563,248.36 in 1893.

CHANGES IN THE ARMY.

"From the report of the secretary of war it appears that the strength of the army on September 30 1894, was 2,135 officers and 25,765 enlisted men. The abolition of all depots, it is predicted, will furthermore effect an annual reduction appoximating $250-000 in the direct expenditures, besides promoting generally the health, morals, and discipline of the troops. The execution of the policy of concentrating the army at important centres of population and transportation has resulted in the abandonment of fifteen of the smaller posts, which was effected under a plan which assembles organizations of the same regiment hitherto widely separated. This renders our small forces more readily effective for any service, besides considerably decreasing the cost of its maintenance.

"Among other things is the adoption of three-battalion formation of regiments, which for several years has been indorsed by the secretaries of war and the generals commanding the army. Compact in its self, it provides a skeleton organization, ready to be filled out in the event of war, which is peculiarly adapted to our strength and requirements; and the fact that every other nation, with a single exception, has adopted this formation to meet the conditions of modern warfare, should alone secure for the recommendation an early consideration.

THE POSTAL SERVICE.

The work of the attorney general's office is the next matter discussed by the president. He advocates the abolition of the fee system in paying federal court officers, and believes that a permanent federal court should be established in the Indian territory to deal with all Indian questions.

Referring to the post-office department, he says:

"The transactions of the postal service indicate with barometric certainty the fluctuations in the business of the country. Inasmuch, therefore, as business complications continued to exist throughout the last year to an unforseen extent it is not surprising that the deficiency of revenues to meet the expenditures of the post-office department, which was estimated in advance at about eight million dollars.

"Six hundred and ten cities and towns are provided with free delivery. Ninety-three other cities and towns entitled to this service under the law have not been accorded it on acount of insufficient funds. The expense of free delivery for the current fiscal year will be more than $12,300,000.

During the year 830 additional domestic money-order offices were established. The total number of these offices at the close of the year was 19,264. There were 14,304,041 money orders issued during the year, being an increase over the preceding year of 994,306.

WORK OF THE NAVY.

"The estimates for the increase of the Navy for the year ending June 30, 1896, are large, but they include practically the entire sum necessary to complete and equip all the new ships not now in commission, so that unless new ships are authorized the appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, should fall below the estimates for the coming year by at least $12,000,00. I recommend that provision be made for the construction of additional battleships and torpedo boats. I feel also it my imperative duty to call attention to the recommendation of the secretary in regard to the personnel of the line of the navy. The stagnation of promotion in

LIFE WAS A BURDEN.

A Pain-Racked Sufferer Tells an Interesting Story—How He Was Tortured for Years and Finally Cured by Munyon's Remedy.

Charles Wark, of 14 N. Twenty-fourth St., Philadelphia, has been a constant sufferer from rheumatism for years. He was cured by the use of Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. This is his story:

"I was afflicted with rheumatism in the righ shoulder and suffered the most excruciating agony. Sharp shooting pains darted through it so intense I could not sleep night. Even the weight of the bedclothes was more than I could bear; neither could I lie on the right side or my back. Life became a perfect burden to me. I could not raise my hand to my head, and when I attempted to put on my coat or any article of dress, the torture was enough to drive me wild. Many remedies were suggested and tried, but none did me the slightest good, and I began to despair of ever being able to obtain relief. Some time ago, however, I procured a bottle of Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. It afforded me relief after the first few doses, and by the time the little 25 cent bottle was gone I was entirely free from pain. I have had no return of my old enemy, and I feel satisfied I am permanently cured. It seems so wonderful I can hardly realize it, and can only show my appreciation of the merits of the Cure by recommending it to other sufferers."

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure is guaranteed to cure rheumatism in any part of the body. Acute or muscular rheumatism cured in from one to five days. It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. It is guaranteed to promptly cure lameness, stiff and swollen joints, stiff back, and all pains in the hips and loins. Chronic rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago or pain in the back are speedily cured.

Munyon's Homoepathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggist, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

this, the vital branch of the service, is so great as to seriously impair its efficiency. I consider it of the utmost importance that the young and middle-aged officers should, before the eve of retirement, be permittd to reach a grade entitling them to active and important duty.

"The system adopted a few years ago regulating the employment of labor at the navy yards is rigidly upheld and has fully demonstrated its usefulness and expediency. It is within the domain of civil service reform inasmuch as workmen are employed through a board of labor selected at each navy yard and are given work without reference to politics and in the order of their application, preference, however, being given to army and navy veterans and those having former navy yard experience.

DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC LANDS.

"The report of the secretary of the interior exhibits the situation of the numerous and interesting branches of the public service connected with his department. The public land disposed of during the year amounted to 10,406,100.77 acres, including 28,876.05 of Indian lands. It estimated that the public domain still remaing amounts to a little more than 600,000,000 acres, excluding, however, about 360,000,000 acres in Alaska as well as military reservations and railroad and other selections of lands yet unadjudicated. The total cash receipts from sale of lands amounted to $2,647,285.79, including $91,981.03 received from Indian lands.

"In the light of experience, and considering the uncertainty of the Indian situation and its exigencies in the future, I am not only disposed to be very cautious in making allotments, but I incline to agree with the secretary of the interior in the opinion that when allotments are made the balance of reservation land remaining after allotment, instead of being bought from the Indians by the government, and opened for settlement with such scandals and unfair practices as seem unavoidable, should remain for a time at least as common land or be sold by the government on behalf of the Indians in an orderly way and at fixed prices.

"The intelligent Indian school management of the past year has been followed by gratifying results. Five institutes of Indian teachers have been held during the year, and have proved very beneficial through the views exchanged.

HOW PENSION MATTERS STAND.

The pension question is then referred to. Mr. Cleveland says:

"At the close of the last fiscal year, on the 30th day of June, 1894, there were 969,544 persons on our pension rolls, being a net increase of 3,532 over the number reported at the end of the previous year.

"These pensioners may be classified as follows: Soldiers and sailors, survivors of all wars, 753,968; widows and relatives of deceased soldiers, 215,162; army nurses in the war of the rebellion, 414. Of these pensioners 32,039 are surviving soldiers of Indian and other wars prior to the late civil war, and the widows or relatives of such soldiers.

soldiers. The remainder, numbering 937,505, are receiving pensions on account of the war of the rebellion, and of these 469,344 are on the rolls under the authority of the act of June 27, 1890, sometimes called the dependent pension law. The total amount expended for pensions during the year was $139,804,416.05, leaving an unexpended balance from the sum appropriated of $25,205,712.65. The sum necessary to meet pension expenditures for the year ending June 30, 1896, is estimated at $140,000,000. The commissioner of pensions is of the opinion that the year 1895, being the thirtieth after the close of the war of the rebellion, must according to all sensible human calculation see the highest limit of the pension rolls. The number of certificates issued was 80,213. The names dropped from the rolls for all causes during the year numbered 37,951. Among our pensioners are nine widows and three daughters of soldiers of the revolution and forty-five survivors of the war of 1812.

"The bare-faced and extensive pension frauds exposed under the direction of the courageous and generous veteran soldier now at the head of the bureau leave no room for the claim that no purgation of our pension rolls was needed, or that continued vigilance and prompt action are not necessary to the same end."

ON AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

The census is disposed of in a few words and with the statement that it cost the government $10,365,676.81. This is followed by a review of agriculture, regarding which Mr. Cleveland says:

"A special study has been made of the demand for American farm products in all foreign markets, especially Great Britain. That country received from the United States during the nine months ending September 30, 1894, 305,910 live beef cattle, valued at $26,500,000, as against 182,611 cattle, valued at $16,634,000, during the same period for 1893. During the first six months of 1894 the United Kingdom took, also, 112,000,000 pounds of dressed beef from the United States, valued at $10,000,000. The report shows that during the nine months immediately preceding September 30, 1894, the United States exported to Great Britain 222,676,000 pounds of pork; of aples, 1,900,000 bushels, valued at $2,500,000; and of horses 2,811 at an average value of $139 per head.

"There was a falling off in American wheat exports of 13,500,000 bushels, and the secretary is inclined to believe that wheat may not, in the future, be the staple export cereal product of our country, but that corn will continue to advance in importance as an export on account of the new uses to which it is constantly being appropriated.

"The exports of agricultural products from the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, amounted to $628,363,038, and the United Kingdom of Great Britain took more than 54 per cent of all farm products finding foreign markets.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

"The advantages to the public service of an adherence to the principles of civil service reform are constantly more apparent; and nothing is so encouraging to those in official life who honestly desire good government as the increasing appreciation by our people of these advantages.

"A vast majority of the voters of the land are ready to insist that the time and attention of those they select to perform for them important public duties, should not be distracted by doing out minor offices, and they are growing to be unanimous in regarding party organization as something that should be used in establishing party principles instead of dictating the distribution of public places as rewards of partisan activity. Numerous additional offices and places have lately been brought within civil service rules and regulations, and some others will probably soon be included. The report of the commissioners will be submitted to the congress, and I invite careful attention to the recommendations it contains.

"I am entirely convinced that we ought not to be longer without a national board of health. This would involve the establishment, by such board of proper quarantine precautions, or the necessary aid and counsel to local authorities on hte subject, prompt advice and assistance to local boards of health or health officers in the suppression of contagious disease, and in cases where there are no such local boards or officers, the immediate direction by the national board or officer of measures of suppression.

COMMENTS ON THE TARIFF.

"The tariff act passed at the last session of the congress needs important amendments if it is to be executed effectively and with certainty. In addition to such necessary amendments as will not change rates of duty, I am still very decidedly in favor of putting coal and iron upon the free list.

"So far as the sugar schedule is concerned, I would be glad, under existing aggravations to see every particle of differential duty in favor of refined sugar stricken out of our tariff law. If with all the favor now accorded the sugar-refining interest in our tariff laws it still languishes to the extent of closed refineries and thousands of discharged workmen, it would seem to present a hopeless case for legislative aid.

"With the advent of a new tariff policy not only calculated to relieve the consumers of our land in the cost of their daily life, but to invite a better development of American thrift and create for us close and more profitable commercial relations with the rest of the world, it follows as a logical and imperative necessity that we should at once remove the chief if not the only obstacle which has so long prevented our participation in the foreign carrying trade of the sea.

NEW SHIPPING LAWS.

"A tariff built upon the theory that it is well to check imports and that a home market should bound the industry and effort of American producers, was fitly supplemented by a refusal to allow American registry to vessels built abroad, though owned and navigated by our people, thus exhibiting a willingness to abandon all contest for the advantages of American transoceanic carriage.

"Our new tariff policy, built upon the theory that it is well to encourage such importations as our people need, and that our products and manufactures should find markets in every part of the habitable globe, is consistently supplemented by the greatest possible liberty to our citizens in the ownership and navigation of ships in which our products and manufactures may be transported. The millions now paid to foreigners for carrying American passengers and products across the sea should be turned into American hands.

INTEREST ON BONDS.

"During the last month the gold reserved in the treasury for the purpose of redeeming the notes of the government circulating as money in the hands of the people became so reduced, and its further depletion in the near future seemed so certain that in the exercise of proper care for the public welfare it became necessary to replenish this reserve and thus maintain popular faith in the ability and determination of the government to meet, as agreed, its pecuniary obligations.

"It would be well if in this emergency authority had existed to issue the bonds of the government bearing a low rate of interest and maturing within a short period; but the congress having failed to confer such authority, resort was necesarily had to the resumption act of 1875, and pursuant to its provisions bonds were issued drawing interest at the rate of five per cenper annum and maturing ten years after their isue, that being the shortest time authorized by the act. I am glad to say, however, that on the sale of these bonds the premium received operated to reduce the rate of interest to be paid by the government to less than three per cent.

"Nothing could be worse or further removed from sensible finance than the relations existing between the currency the government has issued, the gold held for its redemption, and the means which must be resorted to for the purpose of replenishing such redemption fund when impaired. Even if ne to the obligations originally meant. their cancellation, the fund would be very small. But these obligations when received and redeemed in gold are not canceled but are reissued and may do duty many times by way of drawing gold from the treasury.

DRAINS ON THE TREASURY.

"Thus we have an endless chain in operation constantly depleting the treasury's gold and never near a final rest. As if this was not bad enough, we have, by a statutory declaration that it is the policy of the government to maintain the parity between gold and silver aided the force and momentum of this exhausting process and added largely to the currency obligations claiming this peculiar gold redemption. Our small gold reserve is thus subject to drain from every side. The demands that increase our danger also increase the necessity of protecting this reserve against depletion, and it is most unsatisfactory to know that the protection afforded is only a temporary palliation.

"It is perfectly and palpably plain that the only way under present conditions by which this reserve when dangerously depleted can be replenished is through the issue and sale of the bonds of the government for gold; and yet congress has not only thus far declined to authorize the issue of bonds best suited to such a purpose, but there seems a disposition in some quarters to deny both the necessity and power for the issue of bonds at all.

"I can not for a moment believe that any of our citizens are deliberately willing that their government should default in its pecuniary obligations or that its financial operations should be reduced to a silver basis.

"At any rate I should not feel that my duty was done if I omitted any effort I could make to avert such a calamity. As long therefore as no provision is made for the final redemption or the putting aside of the currency obligation now used to repeatedly and constantly draw from the government its gold, and as long as no better authority for bond issues is allowed than at present exists such authority will be utilized whenever and as often as it becomes necessary to maintain a sufficient gold reserve, and in abundant time to save the credit of our country and make good the financial declarations of our government.

"Questions relating to our banks and currency are closely connected with the subject just referred to and they also present some unsatisfactory features. Prominent among them are lack of elasticity in our currency circulation and its frequent concentration in financial centers when it is most needed in other parts of the country.

"The absolute divorcement of the government from the business of banking is the ideal relationship of the government to the circulation of the currency of the country.

"This condition can not be immediately reached; but as a step in that direction and as a means of securing a more elastic currency and obviating other objections to the present arrangement of bank circulation, the secretary of the treasury presents in his report a scheme modifying present banking laws and providing for the issue of circulating notes by state banks free from taxation under certain limitations.

"The secretary explains his plan so plainly and its advantages are developed by him with such remarkable clearness, that any effort on my part to present argument in its support would be superfluous. I shall, therefore, content myself with an unqualified indorsement of the secretary's proposed changes in the law and a brief and imperfect statement of their prominent features.

STATE BANK TAXES.

It is proposed to repeal all laws providing for the deposit of United States bonds as security for circulation; to permit national banksto issue circulating notes not exceeding in amount seventy-five jer cent. of teir paid-up and unimpaired capital, provided they deposit with the Goverment, as a guarantee fund, in United States legal tender notes, including Treasury notes of 1890, a sum equal in amount to thirty per cent. of the notes they desire to issue, this deposit to be maintained at alltims, but whenever and bank retires any part of its circulation a proportional part of its guarantee fund shall be returned to it; to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and keep on hand rady of issue in case an increase in circulation is desired blank national-bank notes for each bank having ciculation and to repeal the porvisions of the present law imposing limitations and restrictions upon banks desiring to reduce or increase their circulation—thus permitting such increase or reduction within the limit of seventy-five per cent. of captal to be quickly made as emrgencies arise.

"Another very important feature of this plan is the exemption of state banks from taxation by the United States in cases where it is shown to the satisfaction of the secretary of the treasury and comptroller of the currency by banks claiming such exemption that they have not had outstanding their circulating notes exceeding seventy-five per cent. of their paid-up and unimpaired capital; that their stockholders are individually liable for the redemption of their circulating notes to the full extent of their ownership of stock; that the liability of said banks upon their circulating notes constitutes under their state law a first lien upon their assets; that such banks have kept and maintained a guarantee fund in United States legal-tender notes including treasury notes of 1890 equal to thirty per cent. of their outstanding circulating notes and that such banks have promptly redeemed their circulating notes when presented at their principal or branch offices."

RED BADGE OF COURAGE.

An Episode of the American Civil War.

BY STEPHEN CRANE.

[Copyright, 1894, by the Author.]

CHAPTER VII.

The youth cringed as if discovered at a crime. By heavens, they had won after all. The imbecile line had remained and become victors. He could hear cheering.

He lifted himself upon his toes and looked in the direction of the fight. A yellow fog lay wallowing on the tree tops. From beneath it came the clatter of musketry. Hoarse cries told of an advance.

He turned away, amazed and angry. He felt that he had been wronged.

He went from the field into a thick woods as if resolved to bury himself. He wished to get out of hearing of the crackling shots which were to him like voices.

He went far, seeking dark and intricate places.

After a time the sound of musketry grew faint and the cannon boomed in the distance. The sun, suddenly apparent, blazed among the trees. A woodpecker stuck his impudent head around the side of a tree. A bird flew on light-hearted wing.

Off, was the rumble of death. It seemed now that nature had no ears.

He went again into the deep thickets. The brushed branches made a noise that drowned the sounds of cannons. He walked on, going from obscurity into promises of a greater obscurity.

At length he reached a place where the high, arching boughs made a chapel. He softly pushed the green doors aside and entered. Pine needles were a gentle brown carpet. There was a religious half-light.

Near the threshold, he stopped horror-stricken at the sight of a thing.

He was being looked at by a dead man who was seated with his back against a column-like tree. The corpse was dressed in a uniform that once had been blue, but was now faded to a melancholy shade of green. The eyes, staring at the youth, had changed to the dull hue to be seen on the side of a dead fish. The mouth was opened. Its red had changed to an appalling yellow. Over the gray skin of the face ran little ants. One was trundling some sort of a bundle along the upper lip.

HE STOPPED HORROR-STRICKEN.

The youth gave a shriek as he confronted the thing. He was, for moments, turned to stone, before it. He remained staring into the liquid-looking eyes. The dead man and the living man exchanged a long look. Then the youth cautiously put one hand behind him and brought it against a tree. Leaning upon this, he retreated, step by step, with his face still toward the thing. He feared, that if he turned his back, the body might spring up and stealthily pursue him.

The branches, pushing against him, threatened to throw him over it. His unguided feet, too, caught aggravatingly in brambles. And, with it all, he received a subtle suggestion to touch the corpse. As he thought of his hand upon it, he shuddered profoundly.

At last he burst the bounds which had fastened him to the spot and fled, unheeding the underbrush. He was pursued by a sight of the black ants swarming greedily upon the gray face and venturing near to the eyes.

After a time he paused, and, breathless and panting, listened. He imagined some strange voice would come from the dead throat and squawk after him in horrible menaces.

The trees about the portal of the chapel moved slightly in a soft wind. A sad silence was upon the little guarding edifice.

CHAPTER VIII

The trees began softly to sing a hymn of twilight. The burnished sun sank until slanted bronze rays struck the forest. There was a lull in the noises of insects as if they had bowed their beaks and were making a devotional pause. There was silence save for the chanted chorus of the trees.

Then, upon this stillness, there suddenly broke a tremendous clangor of sounds. A crimson roar came from the distance.

The youth stopped. He was transfixed by this terrific medley of all noises. It was as if worlds were being rended. There was the rippling sound of musketry and the creaking crash of the artillery.

His mind flew in all directions. He conceived the two armies to be at each other panther-fashion. He listened for a time. Then he began to run in the direction of the battle. He saw that it was an ironical thing for him to be running thus toward that which he had been at such pains to avoid. But he said, in substance, to himself that if the earth and moon were about to clash, many persons would doubtless plan to get upon roofs to witness the collision.

As he ran, he became aware that the forest had stopped its music, as if at last becoming capable of hearing the foreign sounds. The trees hushed and stood motionless. Everything seemed to be listening to the crackle and clatter and ear-shaking thunder. The chorus pealed over the still earth.

It suddenly occurred to the youth that the fight in which he had been, was, after all, but perfunctory popping. In the hearing of this present din, he was doubtful if he had seen real battle-scenes. This uproar explained a celestial battle; it was tumbling hordes a-struggle in the air. He went rapidly on. He wished to come to the edge of the forest that he might peer out.

As he hastened, there passed through his mind pictures of stupendous conflicts. His accumulated thoughts upon such subjects were used to form scenes. The noise was as the voice of an eloquent being, describing.

Presently he was where he could see long gray walls of vapor, where lay battle lines. The voices of cannon shook him. The musketry sounded in long irregular surges that played havoc with his ears. He stood regardent for a moment. His eyes had an awe-struck expression. He gawked in the direction of the fight.

Presently he proceeded again on his forward way. The battle was like the grinding of an immense and terrible machine to him. Its complexities and powers, its grim processes, fascinated him. He must go close and see it produce corpses.

He came finally to a road from which he could see in the distance dark and agitated bodies of troops, smoke-fringed. In the lane was a blood-stained crowd streaming to the rear. The wounded men were cursing, groaning and wailing. In the air, always, was a mighty swell of sound that it seemed could sway the earth. With the courageous words of the artillery and the spiteful sentences of the musketry were mingled red cheers. And from this region of noises came the steady current of the maimed.

One of the wounded men had a shoeful of blood. He hopped like a schoolboy in a game. He was laughing hysterically.

One was swearing that he had been shot in the arm through the commanding general's mismanagement of the army.

Another had the gray seal of death already upon his face. His lips were curled in hard lines and his teeth were clenched. His hands were bloody from where he had pressed them upon his wound. He seemed to be awaiting the moment when he should pitch headlong. He stalked like the specter of a soldier, his eyes burning with the power of a stare into the unknown.

There were some who proceeded sullenly, full of anger at their wounds and ready to turn upon anything as an obscure cause.

The youth joined the crowd and marched along with it. The torn bodies expressed the awful machinery in which the men had been entangled.

Orderlies and couriers occasionally broke through the throng in the roadway, scattering wounded men right and left, galloping on, followed by howls. The melancholy march was continually disturbed by the messengers and sometimes by bustling batteries that came swinging and thumping down upon them, the officers shouting orders to clear the way.

There was a tattered man, fouled with dust, blood and powder stain from hair to shoes, who trudged quietly at the youth's side. He was listening with eagerness and much humility to the lurid descriptions of a bearded sergeant. His lean features wore an expression of awe and admiration. He was like a listener in a country store to wondrous tales told among the sugar barrels. He eyed the story-teller with unspeakable wonder. His mouth was a-gap in yokel fashion.

The sergeant taking note of this gave pause to his elaborate history while he administered a sardonic comment. "Be careful, honey, you'll be catching flies," he said.

The tattered man shrank back abashed.

After a time he began to side near to the youth and in a diffident way tried to make him a friend. His voice was gentle as a girl's voice and his eyes were pleading. The youth saw with surprise that the soldier had two wounds, one in the head, bound with a blood-soaked rag and the other in the arm, making that member dangle like a broken bough.

After they had walked together for some time, the tattered man mustered sufficient courage to speak. "Was pretty good fight, wasn't it?" he timidly said. The youth, deep in thought, glanced up at the bloody and grim figure with its lamb like eyes. "What?"

"Was pretty good fight, wasn't it?"

"Yes," said the youth, shortly. He quickened his pace.

But the other hobbled industriously after him.

"Was pretty good fight, wasn't it?" he persisted, in a small voice. And then he achieved the fortitude to continue: "Dern me, if I ever see fellers fight so. Laws, how they did fight. I knew the boys would lick when they once got square at it. The boys ain't had no fair chance up to now, but, this time, they showed what they was. I knew it would turn out this way. You can't lick them boys. No sir. They're fighters, they be."

He breathed a deep breath of humble admiration.

His homely face was suffused with a light of love for the army which was to him all things beautiful and powerful.

After a time, he turned to the youth, "Where you hit, old boy?" he asked in a brotherly tone.

The youth felt instant panic at this question, although at first its full import was not borne in upon him.

"What?" he asked.

"Where you hit?" repeated the tattered man.

"Why?" began the youth. "I—I—that is—why—I—"

He turned away suddenly and slid through the crowd. His brow was heavily flushed, and his fingers were picking nervously at one of his buttons. He bended his head and fastened his eyes studiously upon the button as it it were a little problem.

The tattered man looked after him in astonishment.

CHAPTER IX.

The youth fell back in the procession until the tattered soldier was not in sight. Then he started to walk on with others.

But he was amid wounds. The mob of men was bleeding. Because of the tattered soldier's question, he now felt that his shame could be viewed. He was continually casting side-long glances to see if the men were contemplating the letters of guilt he felt burned into his brow.

At times he regarded the wounded soldiers in an envious way. He conceived persons with torn bodies to be peculiarly happy. He wished that he, too, had a wound—a little red badge of courage.

The spectral soldier was at his side like a stalking reproach. The man's eyes were still fixed in a stare into the unknown. His gray, appalling face had attracted attention in the crowd, and men, slowing to his dreary pace, were walking with him. They were discussing his plight, questioning him and giving him advice. In a dogged way he repelled them, signing to them to go on and leave him alone.

The shadows of his face were deepening and his tight lips seemed holding in check the moan of great despair. There could be seen a certain stiffness in the movements of his body, as if he were taking infinite care not to arouse the passions of his wounds. As he went on he seemed always looking for a place, like one who goes to choose a grave.

Something in the gesture of the man as he waved the bloody and pitying soldiers away made the youth start as if bitten. He yelled in horror. Tottering forward, he laid a quivering hand upon the man's arm. As the latter slowly turned his wax-like features toward him the youth screamed:

"Gawd! Jim Conklin!"

The tall soldier made a little commonplace smile. "Hello, Flem!" he said.

The youth swayed on his legs and glared strangely. He stuttered and stammered. "Oh, Jim—oh, Jim—oh, Jim."

"GAWD! JIM CONKLIN!"

The tall soldier held out his gory hand. There was a curious red and black combination of new blood and old blood upon it. "Where yeh been, Flem?" he asked. He continued in a monotonous voice. "I thought maybe you got keeled over. There's been thunder to pay to-day. I was worrying about it a good deal."

The youth still lamented. "Oh, Jim—oh, Jim—oh, Jim."

"Yeh know," said the tall soldier, "I was out there." He made a careful gesture. "An', Lord, what a circus. And, b' jiminy, I got shot—I got shot. Yes, b' jiminy—I got shot." He reiterated this fact in a bewildered way as if he did not know how it came about.

The youth put forth anxious arms to assist him, but the tall soldier went firmly on as if propelled. Since the youth's arrival as a guardian for his friend, the other wounded men had ceased to display much interest. They occupied themselves again in dragging their tragedies toward the rear.

Suddenly, as the two friends marched on, the tall soldier seemed to be overcome by a terror. His face turned to a semblance of gray paste. He clutched the youth's arm and looked all about him, as if dreading to be overheard. Then he began to speak in a shaking whisper:

"I tell yeh what I'm 'fraid of, Flem—I'll tell yeh what I'm 'fraid of. I'm 'fraid I'll fall down—an' then yeh know—them damned artillery wagons—they like as not 'll run over me. That's what I'm 'fraid of."

The youth cried out to him hysterically: "I'll take care of yeh, Jim. I'll take care of yeh. I swear to Gawd I will."

"Sure—will yeh, Flem?" the tall soldier beseeched.

"Yes, yes, I tell yeh—I'll take care of yeh, Jim," protested the youth. He could not speak accurately because of the gulping in his throat.

However, the tall soldier seemed suddenly to forget all those fears. He became again the grim, stalking specter of a soldier. He went stonily forward. The youth wished his friend to lean upon him, but the other always shook his head and strangely protested: "No—no—leave me be—leave me be—"

His look was fixed again upon the unknown. He moved with mysterious purpose. And all of the youth's offers he brushed aside. "No—no—leave me be—leave me be—"

The youth had to follow.

Presently the latter heard a voice talking softly near his shoulder. Turning, he saw that it belonged to the tattered soldier. "Ye'd better take 'im outa th' road, pardner. There's a bat'try comin' helitywhoop down th' road an' he'll git runned over. He's a goner anyhow in about five minutes—yeh kin see that. Ye'd better take 'im outa th' road. Where th' blazes does he git his stren'th from?"

"Lord knows," cried the youth. He was shaking his hands helplessly.

He ran forward, presently, and grasped the tall soldier by the arm. "Jim, Jim," he coaxed, "come with me."

The tall soldier weakly tried to wrench himself free. "Huh," he said, vacantly. He stared at the youth for a moment. At last he spoke as if dimly comprehending:

"Oh, inteh th' fields? Oh."

He started blindly through the grass.

The youth turned once to look at the lashing riders and bouncing guns of the battery. He was startled from his view by a shrill outcry from the tattered man.

"Gawd. He's runnin'."

Turning his head swiftly, the youth saw his friend running in a staggering and stumbling way toward a little clump of bushes. He and the tattered man began a pursuit. There was a singular race.

When he overtook the tall soldier, he began to plead with all the words he could find. "Jim—Jim—what are you doin'—what makes you do this way—you'll hurt yourself."

The purpose was in the tall soldier's face. He protested in a dulled way, keeping his eyes fastened on the mystic place of his intentions. "No, no—don't tech me—leave me be—leave me be."

The youth, aghast and filled with wonder at the tall soldier, began quavering to question him. "Where yeh goin', Jim? What you thinking about? Where you going? Tell me, won't you, Jim?" The tall soldier faced about as upon relentless pursuers. In his eyes there was a great appeal. "Leave me be, can't yeh? Leave me be fer a minnit."

The youth recoiled. "Why, Jim," he said, in a dazed way, "what's the matter with you?"

The tall soldier turned and, lurching dangerously, went on. The youth and the tattered soldier followed, sneaking as if whipped, feeling unable to face the stricken man if he should again confront them. They began to have thoughts of a solemn ceremony. There was something rite-like in these movements of the doomed soldier. They could not understand; they were awed and afraid. They hung back, lest he have at command a dreadful weapon.

At last, they saw him stop and stand motionless. Hastening up, they perceived that his face wore an expression telling that he had at last found the place for which he had struggled. His spare figure was erect; his bloody hands were quietly at his sides. He was waiting with patience for something that he had come to meet. He was at the rendezvous. They paused, and stood expectant.

There was a silence.

Finally the chest of the doomed soldier began to heave with a strained motion. It increased in violence until it was as if an animal was within and was kicking and tumbling furiously to be free.

This spectacle made the youth writhe. He raised his voice in a last supreme call: "Jim! Jim! Jim!"

The tall soldier opened his lips and spoke. He made a gesture. "Leave me be—don't tech me—leave me be—"

There was another silence, while he waited.

Suddenly his form stiffened and straightened. Then it was shaken by a prolonged pang. He stared into space. To the two watchers there was a curious and profound dignity in the firm lines of his awful face.

He was invaded by a creeping strangeness that slowly enveloped him.

His tall figure stretched itself to its full height. There was a slight rending sound. Then it began to swing forward, slow and straight, in the manner of a falling tree. A swift muscular contortion made the left shoulder strike the ground first.

The body seemed to bounce a little way from the earth. "God," said the tattered soldier.

The youth had watched spell-bound, this ceremony at the place of meeting. His face had been twisted into an expression of every agony he had imagined for his friend.

He now sprang to his feet and, going closer, gazed upon the paste-like face. The mouth was open and the teeth showed in a laugh.

As the flap of the blue jacket fell away from the body he could see that the side looked as if it had been chewed by wolves.

The youth turned, with sudden, livid rage, toward the battlefield. He shook his fist. He seemed about to deliver a phillipic.

"Hell—"

The red sun was pasted in the sky like a fierce wafer.

THE MOUNTAIN WHITES.

Plainfield Hears Interesting Facts Concerning a People of Few Advantages.

The King's Messengers of the First Presbyterian Church held a very interesting meeting last evening in the chapel, at which time Rev. Mr. McAfee, Superintendent of School Work of the Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church, made an address on the subject "The Mountain Whites of Our Country". He spoke of the extended and very useful work being carried on all over the United States, especially in Mexico, Southern Colorado, Arkansaw, Alabama, Tennessee, Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

In Santa Fe and Southern Colorado there are schools which are supported by the First Presbyterian Church. In Utah there are 28 schools, and this work among the schools is becoming a most important arm of Home Mission work.

Continuing the speaker said: "In the South we are doing good work among the mountaineers, who have no advantages, and have been sadly neglected. They are a Protestant race, and have shown capabilities that are remarkable. Historical research shows they took a very important part in the early development of America. Their nationality is Scotch-Irish, and they were driven into the north of Ireland, whence they came to this country in search of liberty. To the English government they were known as the worst of rebels, and when proven to be Presbyterians they were considered very dangerous. Their present condition is due to slavery during the late war. No advantages were given them. Public schools have advanced very slowly in the South since the war. At present the school tax per year is only 69 cents for each child. In some cases children walk six and seven miles to attend school."

Mr. McAfee told some very touching incidents regarding these mountain people, and won hearty words of encouragement from his hearers.

A closing hymn was sung, and the benediction pronounced, after which the meeting adjourned.

FRACTURED HIS NOSE.

A Fractious Horse Causes Injury to Driver Daly.

James Daly, driver of Gazelle Hose, will probably carry through life a souvenir of the big roan horse "Tom", which for several months past has pulled No. 2 Engine in answer to the fire gong. It was recently decided to put Tom in double harness with "George", a noble roan belonging to the Alerts. Last evening at 7:15 the experiment was made. Mr. Daly was assisting William Townley to make the hitch when Tom, who by the way has quite a record for ugliness, jumped against the pole releasing the folding crab, which flew up in Daly's face, breaking his nose. The "crab", which is the metal portion of the mechanism for holding the harness in place as it hangs over the pole, is balanced by an iron bar weighing 60 pounds, so the force of the blow must have been terrific.

Thanks to the skilful manipulation of Dr. Jenkins, who readjusted the nose, Mr. Daly hopes to be but slightly disfigured by the mishap.

To Enter the Interchange.

At the meeting of the Camera Club last evening the Fair Committee made a report of progress, and Treasurer Serrell offered a statement of the finances.

The members decided to enter a set of slides in the lantern interchange. They must be in by Dec. 15. Messrs. Freeman, Doane, Hall, Gotthelf and Coward were appointed as a committee. The secretary read a very interesting letter from Otto Ahrens, who is now in Germany. At the next meeting, Dec. 19, the annual election will take place.

David Allen Secretary.

The quarterly meeting of Warren Engine Co., No. 1, was held last evening. David Allen was elected secretary to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of James Anderson. One new member was elected. The committee on the recent entertainment reported that all the bills had been paid and their work finished. An invitation was received from the Somerville Engine Company to a ball to be given Christmas evening.

CHARTER ELECTION.

Republicans Take Everything With Little Opposition.

MOORE CARRIES THE FOURTH WARD

That Was the Only Real Fighting-Ground, and the Socialists Lost—Mayor Gilbert, Councilmen See, Ginna and Fisk, and School Trustees Probasco and Lovell, All Re-elected.

The lack of interest taken in the Plainfield city election yesterday was because the Republicans who had a regular ticket in the field felt that there was no serious opposition, and there was none. The vote in consequence was extremely light. The result of so one-sided a canvass was a foregone conclusion; and that many regarded the voting as a joke is seen in the nonsensical scattering ballots cast. Gilbert's vote for Mayor was 1 448, against Bell's 188. Despite MacDonald's withdrawal from the assessorship canvas, he got 459 votes, against Hubbard's 1,000. The straight Republican ticket was elected in every ward, except of course that Hubbard was elected assessor instead of MacDonald. The pasters spasmodically used considerably reduced the majorities of Probasco and Lovell for school trustees. The figures are: Probasco, 1112; Lovell, 1149; Smith, 365; Huntington, 350. As The Press said before election, the canvass for Smith and Huntington came too late to be of any effect, and was introduced merely to gratify the wish of Republicans who wanted to see the school trustees out below the head of the ticket.

SOCIAL PLAINFIELD.

The Trolley a Social Factor.

There is plenty to please the eye in the streets of Plainfield, but this town does not stand preeminent in the respect of solid comfort and general convenience. It covers a great deal of ground, more perhaps than many of our own people would say. From the stand-pipe to Evona's farthest inhabited bound, a distance of not less than three miles intervenes; from the First Mountain to Netherwood through Somerset street and Watchung avenue, there is another magnificent stretch of about three miles. To spend an evening with a neighbor in these great spaces is a task so beset with difficulties that a visit as a rule is foregone. The town becomes intolerably dull at night. The streets are deserted after the arrival of the evening trains.

Amusements languish, especially of the better sort. The central theatre is not yielding even running expenses. The churches feel the want of intercommunication, particularly when services are held after the lamps are lit; and the entire social life of the many is cramped and circumscribed. Plainfield is thus a straightout loser in the matter of all-around comfort.

This need not be—the rather, it need not continue to be. We cannot believe a few fortunate people will conspire to deny their numerous and less fortunate townsmen and townswomen the comforts that spring from cheap and frequent intercommunication.

We do not for a moment believe a servant of the people would selfishly scheme to lessen the sum of enjoyment here. We believe all will, as they give their better impulses and well-considered ideas play, co-operate to render life as enjoyable here as it is in other towns of similar size and character.

In a word, give us, O, City Fathers, a comprehensive trolley system, and we will proceed to transform ourselves into a homogeneous community, happy, contented and eminently social.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy has returned from his two-days trip.

Julius William of Elmwood place is expected home today after an extended business trip.

Miss Mamie Buckle of Westervelt avenue will entertain a few friends at her home this evening.

Miss Blanche Jones of Sandford avenue is entertaining two of Philadelphia's charming young women.

Lillian Kennedy and company had another large house at Music Hall last night. The engagement closes this evening.

Irwin Cooley of Westervelt avenue has returned to Swarthmore College, Philadelphia, after a short vacation at the home of his parents.

Miss Mabelle Smith of Westervelt avenue returned home yesterday, after a pleasant visit with Miss Lillian Garretson, daughter of Judge Garretson of Newtown, L. I.

Edgar Serrell of Plainfield avenue, while trying to make a high kick one day last week, struck his right foot with such force against a table that it is badly lamed. He is confined to the house.

The next tea under the auspices of the Ladies Christian Work Society of Trinity Reformed Church will be held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Harry W. Marshall, East Fifth street, Thursday evening of next week, the 13th inst.

The clerks at Edsall's commercial palace, together with a few of their friends, gave a very enjoyable dance on the second floor of the Babcock Building last evening. The affair was arranged by Clarence S. Johnson and William Wilson. Refreshments were served during the evening, and the young people left for home about midnight.

High School Notes.

Instead of the regular Wednesday singing lesson Mr. Maxson today gave his weekly talk, usually given Friday morning. His subject was "Honesty", and he spoke of it in school life and work.

Practice on the Christmas carols will be commenced immediately.

—A representative of the Gamewell Fire-Alarm Company was in the borough yesterday afternoon and remedied the "sticky" valve-pin in the alarm whistle.

WASHINGTON'S CALL TO JERSEY.

Mr. Weeks of Newark Has the Original of the Historic Document.

Five days after that memorable Christmas night in 1776 when Washington crossed the Delaware River and routed the British and Hessians encamped at Trenton he addressed a call to arms to the people of New Jersey. William E Weeks a resident of Newark, is the proud possessor of the original copy of that call. The document is a sheet of paper eight inches wide and ten inches long, and reads as follows:

To the friends of America in the State of New Jersey:

The Army of the American States, under my Command, being lately greatly reinforced, and having again entered the State of New Jersey, I most warmly request the Militia of Said State at this important Crisis to Evince their love to their Country by boldly Stepping forth and defending the Course of Freedom. The Inhabitants may be assured that by a manly and spirited Conduct they may now relieve their Distressed State from the Depredations of our enemies——I have therefore despatched Col. Neilson, Majors Taylor, VanEmburgh and Frelinghuysen, together with some other Gentlemen of your State, to call together and Embody your Militia, not doubting that Success will attend their endeavours—

GEO. WASHINGTON.

Trenton, 31 Dec. 1776.

Mr. Weeks secured the document from a friend in the South. It was found among Washington's papers after his death. It was originally folded through the centre in both directions, or in other words folded twice, so that it made a small and compact parcel. One corner, the upper left hand, is soiled as if it had been opened from the corner very frequently. The way it was folded would lead one to suspect that it was given into the care of a horseman who tucked it away in his pocket in the smallest possible compass. It may have been carried through the towns by some messenger who read it to the people as he went along. His mission over, he may have returned with it to his chief. Whatever was done with it, there is no question as to its genuineness. Mr. Weeks has shown the document to one or two of the leading autograph experts in the country, and they agree to its authenticity. It has been suggested, however, that the document was written by someone else, and that Washington simply signed it. The autograph and the document are alike in very many ways, however. The penmanship is clear cut and very legible, although it was written in some haste, apparently. At all events it was despatched as soon as it was written, for there are some slight blots still discernible, due to hasty folding.

"The Prodigal Daughter."

The patrons of Music Hall will be given a rare treat Dec. 12 and 13, when Walter Sanford's massive production of "The Prodigal Daughter" will be seen at that house. This great play is easily the best of all the racing and sporting melodramas seen on the stage, and introduces, as a special feature, the exact reproduction of the Grand National Steeplechase which is run for annually at Aintree, Liverpool, England. In this scene ten imported thoroughbred horses are seen, each ridden by an English jockey brought to this country and selected from some of the principal stables in England especially for this play.

All the details so familiar to race goers are seen in this scene, and from the moment when the noble animals, who are to compete for this great event, are seen in their preliminary canter across the stage until the instant when their riders catch the eye of the starter and that individual drops the flag to a good start and the horses are seen flashing by and in their flight taking with equal ease the high hurdles and the broad water jump, the interest is most exciting. Finally, the winner is seen on the handsome brown horse "Roquefort", the actual winner in 1885, of this classic event of the turf, the enthusiasm grows and extends until horse and rider appear and acknowledge their victory.

The story of the play is full of interest, which centres in the race scene where the villain who has tried by several ways, to prevent the favorite for the race winning, causes its rider to be arrested just before the start and his overthrow by the hero volunteering to ride in his place and ultimately to win. The characters are well drawn and as cast by Manager Sanford receive the best rendition by his very competent company of players. The scenery is the same as was seen when this play was first presented at the American Theatre, New York city, where so pronounced was the success it attained that it ran for 248 consecutive performances to a succession of the largest houses ever seen in that city. All the elaborate costumes were specially made for this production, and the stage appointments were either sent over from Drury Lane Theatre, London, or made from exact models of the same. The engagement is a notable one and should draw the largest kind of attendance to the theatre at every performance.

M'ALL MISSION WORK.

Interesting Discourse Before the Plainfield Auxiliary.

The women of the local branch of the McAll Mission listened to a forceful and earnest discourse by M. Eugene Reveillaud of Paris regarding the remarkable success attending the efforts of the McAll Mission and its branches towards the evangelization of France.

After a pleasant allusion to his inability to express himself correctly in English at all times, M. Reveillaud gave a most interesting resume of the growth of the work from its inspection by Dr. McAll twelve years ago in Bellville, up to the present time when there are 140 auxiliaries in France and a large number in Germany, Sweden and Belgium as well.

M. Reveillaud had the honor three years ago to appear before the King and Queen of Sweden and explain this noble work which he has so much at heart. He is an advance thinker and a strong believer in the unity of Christian work, and the gradual effacement of denominational lines. After describing at length the almost insurmountable efforts attending the first efforts of Dr. McAll to establish the Protestant religion in France, where up to the time of the Third Empire even the printing and distribution of Protestant literature was prohibited by law. M. Reveillaud related several individual conversions which had come under his personal observation.

Today there are missions in every city and hamlet of importance in France, and they embrace Sunday-schools, prayer meetings, Young Men's and Young Ladies Unions, and even children's societies. The speaker held his audience to the end by his fund of anecdote and his earnest Christianity.

The Plainfield auxiliary are supporting a very successful station in the south of France.

Library Trustees Again Manifest Their Enterprise.

A regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Public Library was held last night. Those present were A. C. Baldwin, William L. Larrabee, J. B. Dumont, Rowland Cox, S. Evarts Tracy and William M. Stillman. The minutes of the meeting of October 2 were read and approved, and the monthly payment of bills was made.

The Librarian's report for November was read and ordered on file.

The letter to the secretary from C. A. Reed regarding the taxed costs of the cloisonne-collection suit, was on motion referred to the committee having that matter in charge.

It was voted that the matter of painting and making other repairs to the Babcock houses be referred to Mr. Dumont with power to make such expenditures as he may deem fit for such purposes.

The salary of the assistant Librarian, Miss E. E. Davis, was fixed at $30 a month to begin Jan. 1, 1895. $500 was appropriated for the purchase of books under the direction of the Library Committee.

Edsall's Christmas Opening a Great Success.

The scene of elegant carriages in front Edsall's Commercial Palace yesterday was a repetition of the one at the Y. M. C. A. new building during the fair.

The announcement the day before in The Press of the annual Christmas opening at this popular house; a great special sale of over three thousand finely bound books at no price at all; a novel exhibition of Armour Company of Chicago famous goods, affording a dainty lunch free to all visitors; was the drawing card.

Both floors inside the magnificent store were crowded with eager buyers from the early morn till closing time. The amount aggregated very large. Many partook of the dainty lunch, and were lavish with words of praise of the fine quality of the goods exhibited. The lunch will be served every day this week between 10 a. m. and 5 p. m.

The Christmas window drew such a large crowd on the sidewalk that they were obliged to pull down the shade in the window. The "ball is rolling" and the new attractions to be added will keep it going.

Anyone who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cents bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. ABSOLUTELY PURE

QVISTGARD.

For two weeks the Plunging Petrel, a big, three-masted schooner, had plowed its way through the placid waters of the Pacific with a sameness that was exasperating. Since leaving port nothing—not even a threatened storm or a lively gale—had broken the monotony.

The ship was bound for Rio, Brazil, with a cargo of wheat, and I was her only passenger—seeking health in this manner according to my physician's urgent request. She was commanded by a sturdy old navigator, Captain Collins, a man who on first acquaintance might appear to be cold, distant and reserved, but who proved, in my case, at least, to be exactly the opposite, for I soon found him a genial, hearty good fellow. He was strict with his men, but not tyrannical, and he was a good story teller.

But monotony was not to last us all through the voyage. There was soon a singular and sinister change.

One day about noon, at the beginning of the third week, a sailor named Bates was placed in irons for striking a messmate with a marlinspike and breaking his arm. The punishment was undoubtedly deserved, but there were angry mutterings and more than one sullen face among the crew in consequence; for Bates, whose only fault was an uncontrollable temper, was a general favorite. But when the unfortunate man was found dead the next morning things began to look black for the officers.

There was no sign of wound or struggle upon the body of the dead man, but the atmosphere of the forecastle where he had been confined was odorous with the fumes of chloroform. I called the captain's attention to this, but he thought I must be mistaken and would not be convinced, even when the boatswain and one of the mates argued on my side. He declared that there was none of the drug on board and never had been. And so it happened that poor Bates was buried in the deep sea at the very hour at which he was to have been liberated.

At eight bells the following night, when the first mate went on deck to relieve his fellow officer, the latter had disappeared and could not be found. I happened to be leaning against the mizzenmast smoking when the alarm was given, and could have sworn that I had been smelling chloroform for half an hour, although I did not call the fact to mind until the dreadful cry of "Man overboard!" was sounded and all hands piped on deck. A boat containing the first mate and four men was lowered at once, the ship was brought about, and two hours were spent in a fruitless search. In the mean time every accessible nook in the ship, which was tacking back and forth in the locality, was inspected with like results. At last the searching party was taken on board, and the ship resumed its course.

The captain now took turns at the watch with the mate, and everything ran smoothly till the following night, or rather the next morning—four bells of the first watch. Then when he turned out to relieve the mate that officer could not be found.

On the afternoon following the second disappearance the captain called me into his cabin, shut and locked the door, and beckoned me to a chair at a small table. I saw nothing remarkable about this, believing that he only wished to talk over his troubles, but when he took a seat opposite me I noticed that his face was deadly pale and that his lips were tightly compressed.

"My two officers have been murdered, Mr. Vincent," he fairly gasped.

"Murdered!" I exclaimed. "I have suspected foul play from the first. Have you any evidence?"

"The best in the world. You have noticed the big Dane, Qvistgard?"

"That mild looking fellow with the red beard?"

"Yes."

"Why certainly; but you don't suspect him, I hope."

"Of course not. On the contrary, there is a mutiny on foot, and he—but here is a note he slipped into my hand a moment ago. Read it for yourself. Unless you and I and this faithful fellow can outfight or outwit fifteen hell hounds, we are doomed."

With a face that must have been as white as the one before me, and a hand that was anything but steady, I picked up a sheet of paper which the captain had thrown on the table and read the following:

Captain—I have just discovered a horrible plot. All the crew, except myself, have mutinied. The mates were knocked on the head and thrown overboard. You will share the same fate when you come on deck to relieve the watch to-night, unless you heed this warning. Meet me ten minutes before the close of the second dog watch, just aft the main hatchway, and I will tell you everything. In the meantime do not speak to me or send for me, for we are closely watched. I am supposed to side with the crew. The least mistake would be fatal. Don't tell the passenger. He may be all right, but I doubt it. For God's sake, captain, don't go near the rail.

"Don't tell the passenger," I muttered as I looked at the captain, not only horror stricken at the contents of the note, but surprised and hurt at the uncomplimentary reference to myself. But the captain, who must have divined my thoughts, relieved my mind on this point by saying:

"That's all right, my dear Vincent. The fellow is only a little over cautious. Don't mind him. I would trust you with the ship, and my life, too, for that matter. You see I have shown my confidence by allowing you to read the note. Now I want your advice. Your assistance I shall count on without the asking when the times comes."

"Thank you, captain," I answered. "To start with, I should certainly not go on deck till it is time to meet the Dane if I were you."

My companion had now regained his composure to a certain extent, and sat for a moment drumming the table with his fingers.

"Who has the watch now?" I continued presently.

Hutton, the tall seaman with the red scar on the back of his hand," was the answer. "He is acting as first mate, and I have decided to give Jones, the little Welshman, the position of second tomorrow. Both are fairly good navigators, and, by all the gods, I can't understand it! I could have sworn that these two men were as true as the dead mates ever were until I got this warning from Qvistgard. But he is right, my boy, he is right. All this comes from that unfortunate Bates affair. I wonder who is the leader? If he could be shot or placed in irons it might quell the others. Have you a pistol?"

"A small pocket affair," I answered.

"I have two large ones and a repeating rifle in my chest," continued the captain. "How would it do to batten down the hatchway of the forecastle when part of the dogs are below at supper and pump lead into the rest of them? I don't believe they are armed, unless they have a few knives. We could then make for the nearest port."

"Better wait until you see the Dane," I replied. "He may be able to give you the name of the leader."

Before sundown all our weapons had been oiled, examined and loaded, the captain and myself secreting the revolvers about our persons and leaving the rifle for the Dane.

The sky had clouded over late in the afternoon and night, gloomy and foreboding, settled down on the schooner.

"The very elements seem to be in sympathy with this cursed business," said the captain, when it began to grow so dark in the cabin that we could hardly make out each other's faces, "and I feel as if the jig was about up with me."

As soon as the last streak of day had disappeared the captain, revolver in hand, mounted the companion ladder and stole softly on deck. I followed him part way, but stopped, according to his directions, and stood with my head and shoulders above the companion way, ready in case of an emergency to lend any assistance that might lie in my power.

I never looked into a blacker night. The air was soft and warm, and fitful gusts of wind dashed a few cooling raindrops against my face as I held on to my revolver and tried to keep the receding form of the captain in view. But he disappeared almost instantly; and, owing to the whistle of the wind in the rigging, the groaning of the masts and the creaking of the yardarms, I could not hear his footsteps after he had gone half a dozen paces.

Anxiously I waited five, ten, fifteen minutes, as nearly as I could reckon time, but neither sight nor sound brought intelligence of the captain. At last I can bear the suspense no longer. I began to walk slowly toward the bow. When I thought I had reached the location of the hatchway, and was on the point of coming to a halt, I struck my foot against something and fell, the planks of the deck seeming to open and engulf me.

I gained my feet with some difficulty, and was about to step forward, when the ship gave a lurch and I was thrown lengthwise against the hull. Before I could stand up again the bent form assumed an upright posture and I recognized the big Dane. Muttering incoherently, he picked up a lantern and started toward the place where I had fallen, off to my left.

As the light drew near I discovered a rope dangling from the deck. When the Dane drew near this rope he deposited his lantern beside him, rubbed his big, hard hands together with a loud, rasping noise, and laughed a low, fiendish sort of chuckle, which fairly chilled my blood. A moment later his merriment subsided, and, taking hold of the rope with one hand, he picked up the lantern with the other. I expected to see him run his arm through the handle of the lantern and go hand over hand through the hatchway; but he was in no hurry, and began to talk in a harsh undertone.

"So far, so good, King Qvistgard," he said. "A million pounds of diamonds, sewed up in silk sacks, all my own. Oh, what a royal present for my ebony princess! Fifteen days more and I shall reign supreme. The two mates and the captain are now my loyal subjects, and to-morrow night the passenger will join them. Then comes me hearties, Hutton and the little Welshman, and so on down the list. Ha, ha, ha!"

Never until that awful moment had I heard the blood-curdling laugh of a maniac, but I recognized it as quickly as if I had passed all my days inside the walls of a madhouse. Before I knew it my strength, or courage, or both, suddenly returned, and I arose cautiously to my feet, discovering at the same time the revolver which had fallen from my hand when I stumbled on the deck. It was lying almost at the feet of the Dane. Advancing slowly, I stooped and was about to pick up the weapon, but before I could get hold of it the ship lurched again, I collided with the madman, and we both went down together.

The revolver escaped me, the light in the lantern was extinguished, and there was a scream, a piercing cry of fright and anguish, such as only a terror-stricken madman can utter. And then, with that awful shriek ringing in my ears and the strong fingers of the demented Dane clutching my throat, I became insensible.

When consciousness returned I was lying in my berth; it was daylight, and Hutton was standing beside me. As soon as I was able to talk he told me that just after dark on the previous evening a horrible cry was heard coming from the direction of the main hatchway, and that when the little Welshman and several other sailors rushed to the spot the raving Dane was seen to climb up a rope from the hold. As soon as he gained the deck he ran screaming to the rail and threw himself into the sea. I was found, more dead than alive, and taken to my cabin. Soon after the captain and the two mates were discovered, gagged and bound, near the spot where I had first seen the Dane. The captain recovered from the effects of the chloroform which had been administered to him, and was removed with the two officers, who were still alive but too weak and exhausted to stand on their feet for many hours.—From Romance.

Bearing the Market.

Occasionally it is possible to satisfy the souvenir seeker without doing any damage in particular. This is the case at the tomb of Washington in Mount Vernon. A lady had just picked up a pebble from the walk in front of the venerated spot to carry home with her when a workman came up with a wheelbarrow load of gravel, which he dumped on the spot.

"Have you—have you fixed up the place that way recently?" the lady asked in a slightly apprehensive tone.

"Bless you, miss," was the reply, "we has to do this about every two weeks so's the tourists can have something to carry away for momentums."—Puck.

FATAL TOOTHBRUSH BRISTLES.

They Made Dr. Fortiner an Easy Victim of Pneumonia.

Bristles from a toothbrush, which lodged in the throat of Dr. George R. Fortiner, of Camden, N. J., had much to do with his death.

While he was cleaning his teeth one morning in March last a bunch of bristles became detached from the brush and were drawn into his throat. Dr. Fortiner's wife, who is also a physician, and his son, Byron G., a dentist, assisted him in his efforts to dislodge the bristles.

The Doctor suffered much, and could gain little or no relief. The bristles apparently went further down into the passages of the throat. A Philadelphia specialist was finally consulted, and he succeeded in dislodging some of the bristles.

As the months wore on, however, Dr. Fortiner's friends saw that the mishap had no doubt caused an injury that was beyond repair. He was subject to a persistent cough, and was never entirely free from pain in the region of the lungs. He passed the summer in a cottage at Ocean City, but the sea air seemed to do him no good. He was at intervals seized with spasms of coughing and strangulation.

Thus weakened Dr. Fortiner became an easy victim to pneumonia, with which he was attacked. While ill he attended a patient suffering from the same disease. Forgetting his own ailment, he watched over his patient for three hours. After returning home he went to bed.

TAKING THE CZAR'S OATH.

Russians in America Swearing Fealty to Nicholas II.

Consul General Olarovsky and Father Barcscz give interesting statistics on the subject of the number of Russian residents in America who still hold allegiance to the house of the Romanoffs. Certain days are set aside for Roman Catholics, others for Lutherans, and still others for Jews. As there are only about 250 members of the Greek Church in America, it will not be necessary to fix a certain day for them.

Father Barcscz, a Slavonian priest, administers the oath to Slavs and Poles. He said that in America there were 1,000,000 Slavs who are members of the Roman Catholic Church, and the majority are Russian subjects. Of this number 300,000 live in Chicago and 45,000 in Detroit. The Slavonic branch of the Church has 175 buildings in the country.

All Roman Catholics must be sworn by a priest and Lutherans by a Lutheran minister, but the Consul General is allowed to administer the oath to the Jews. In New York State there are 300,000 Jews who come from Russia. How many are American citizens it is impossible to learn. Although some are citizens, they take an oath of allegiance to Russia as well.

One object to be gained by it is that if a Russian has left his native country without a passport he can return if he takes the oath, without being fined from $25 to $75, as he would be if he neglected his papers. No charge is made for administering the oath, nor is a passport necessary.

Consul General Olarovsky expects to administer the oath to at least 40,000 Russian subjects in this country before he is finished. Nicholas, Bishop of Alaska, administered the oath to him on Nov. 10. As it is necessary that a Bishop of the Orthodox Greek Church administer the the oath to officials, the Bishop was compelled to take a trip from San Francisco to Washington and New York for that one purpose.

YAWNED AND STAYED PUT.

Mrs. Rexler Surprises and Alarms Herself After Her Supper.

The Rexlers—Fannie, a bright-eyed little woman, 33 years old, Jacob, her husband, and their children—who live in New York, invited a number of friends to dinner with them, and although all did their best at dinner enough of the turkey and other things remained for supper. About 7 o'clock, just after the latter meal, and while all were still around the table, Mrs. Rexler yawned. It was a long yawn and they began to laugh, all except Mrs. Rexler. She sat still for a few moments with her mouth open, and then her eyes began to stare and strange sounds came from her throat. Before the others grasped the situation Mrs. Rexler, with her hands clasping her jaws, had jumped up, and was dashing about, emitting queer cries. She was soon corralled by her friends, and by signs made them understand that she could not close her mouth.

Her husband ran into the street in his shirt sleeves and raced around to Dr. Eisenberg's office in Rivington street.

In a few minutes these two hurried back to the house, when the doctor tried unsuccessfully for half an hour to get Mrs. Rexler's jaw to working. Finally the woman was removed to Gouveneur Hospital. There it was found that her lower jaw was dislocated on both sides. In a few moments, with the aid of an instrument, it was reset.

When Mrs. Rexler got home again she was about exhausted from shock and nervousness. Otherwise she was not inconvenienced by the accident, but it will probably be some time before she regains sufficient confidence in herself to yawn again.

and the adventures of a gallant Hussar in his service. Dr. Doyle considers it

The Best Story He Has Ever Written.

In view of the revival of interest in the genius and career of Napoleon Bonaparte, this story is particularly timely. Our New York representative paid 12½c a word for this remarkable piece of fiction, as the subjoined receipt will show. We also publish herewith the first page of Dr Doyle's manuscript.

The Duke of Tarentum a McDonald as his old comrades prique to call him

McDonald was, as I could perceive, in no the infest of temper. His grim Scotch face was like one of those grotesque door knockers which one sees in the Faubourg St-Germain. We heard afterwards that the Emperor had said in jest that he would have sent him against Wellington at Toulouse in the South, but that he was afraid to trust him within sound of the pipes. Major Charpentier and I could plainly see that he was smouldering with anger.

"Brigadier Gérard of the Hussars" said he, with the air of the corporal with the recruit.

I saluted.

"Major Charpentier of the Horse Grenadiers"

My companion answered to his name.

"The Emperor has a mission for you." Without more ado he flung open the door and announced us.

I have seen Napoleon ten times on horseback to once on foot, and I think that he does wisely to show himself to his troops in this fashion, for he cuts a very good figure in the saddle. As we saw him now he was the tallest man out of six by a good handsbreadth, and yet I am no very big man myself, though I ride quite heavy enough for a Hussar. A LITTLE INDISCRETION RESULTED IN A $350,000 ROBBERY.

How the Dishonest Bookkeeper of the Shoe and Leather Bank was Led Into Crime. Methods of Bookkeeping that Permitted Stealing for Years.

Press dispatches have given very fully the account of the robbery of the New York Shoe and Leather Bank of $350,000 by a trusted bookkeeper and his accomplice, and the story has caused wonderment upon every side. The time was when cashier's peculations seemed epidemic, and the methods of men handling thousands of dollars in money each day, and appropriating various amounts to their own uses, can very readily be understood. The theft by a bookkeeper who never handled a dollar of the bank's cash, however, seems more complex, but is just as simple.

Defaulter Seeley's method was to transfer to the account of Baker, his accomplice, large sums from the accounts of large depositors, which appeared in Seely's ledger. When Baker's check would come in to be cashed, an examination of the ledger would show ample funds to his credit, and his drafts were always promptly honored. When it became necessary to balance the depositors accounts which had been depleted to swell Baker's supposed deposits, Seeley would return them to their normal condition by making transfers from the accounts of other customers. As he had charge of the A to K ledger, and also the skeleton bank ledger, he was enabled to keep on transferring and balancing and swelling Baker's balances during the many years through which the fraud ran. The directors, with entire confidence in Seely, examined his books daily, as occasion required, but never doubted that they presented the exact state of the accounts they contained.

A friend of Seely's said he was drawn into this rescality by a perfectly honest mistake. He found that this man had overdrawn his account, and instead of reporting it he went to the man and told him about it, asking him to make it good. The man said that he would, but that he would have to complete a real estate deal in which he was interested first, and that he needed some more money to complete the transaction. In a weak moment Seely let him have the money. The deal was a failure, and Seely kept letting him have more and more money until the game was a hopeless one, and he was completely at his accomplice's mercy.

Two years ago the white marble bank building, at the corner of Broadway and Chambers street, which had been occupied by the Shoe and Leather for 37 years, was torn down to make room for the sixteen-story fireproof building which was completed last summer. The bank's offices are on the first floor of the new building, and they are complete and ample. The best burglar-proof vaults hold the cash and securities. The new building, which is the property of the bank, cost about $500,000. It contains a large number of offices which are let at good prices, and the annual rent roll of the building is enormous. John W. Goff, counsel for the Lexow Committee and Recorder-elect, is one of the men who have offices in the building. The bank has about 400 depositors, and employs a staff of about forty clerks.

There are few defalcations on record which equal this one of Seely's. It is the largest which has occurred in New York city since that of the Ninth National Bank by its president, John T. Hill of New Brunswick, N. J., in 1891. He was a defaulter to the amount of $450,000, which was comparatively easy for him to cover up, holding the important position which he did. His defalcation was not discovered until a day after his death, when new officers were taking hold. Mr. Hill used the money which he appropriated in luxurious living and also to speculate in Wall street, where he lost heavily, while there seems to be nothing to indicate for what Mr. Seeley used the money he aided in taking.

TELEPHONING WITHOUT A 'PHONE.

A Remarkable Discovery by a Young Buffalo Electrician.

Walter Wilhelm, of Buffalo, a young man not more than 18 or 20 years of age, is developing remarkable genius in mechanics, and has invented, among other useful things, a telephone transmitter of wonderful power, which is likely to greatly increase the efficiency of that most useful instrument and make it more than ever available for long-distance work. The great power of the instrument has been demonstrated in a curious way. By attaching his transmitter to a telegraph wire he can make his voice heard distinctly by an operator sitting beside his instrument, any ordinary sounder, many miles distant.

This is a great wonder to telegraph operators, and many of them declare, until they have heard the sounder talk, that such a thing is impossible. None of them ever knew anything like it in their experience. The discovery was made entirely by accident, as many great discoveries have been, and the process will doubtless be improved until it will be possible, by attaching a good receiver to the line in the place of a telegraph sounder, to fill a large room with the sounds of a human voice whose owner is many miles away at the time.—Buffalo Courier.

There's nothing so GOOD as Cottolene

The new vegetable shortening.
Wherever introduced, it drives lard from the kitchen, and indigestion from the household.
It has been tried by every test, and has met every requirement.
It is as much superior to lard as the electric light is to the tallow-dip.
The only question now is, will you give your family the benefits which its use bestows?

There's nothing LIKE Cottolene

in composition, in healthfulness, in flavor, or in economy.
Its success has called out a lot of imitations and counterfeits made for the sole purpose of selling in the place and on the merits of Cottolene.
Avoid them all. They are made to sell and they are a sell.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Marsh's home on North avenue was brightened this morning by the advent of a son.

Arthur Smith of Plainfield pleaded guilty in Elizabeth today to assault on Jane Tobin and Peter Collins. He will be sentenced Saturday.

LAST USE OF ARMOR.

It Was in 1799 and Was a Picturesque and Diabolical Scene.

In January, 1799, at the town of Aquilla, in the Abruzzo, then held by a garrison of four hundred French troops, the peasants broke into the town, and, though they were driven out by the French, they continued to give serious trouble. They even drove the French into the fort, and made ready to bombard them with heavy guns. The French were in an awkward position.

Boulert, the officer of artillery, ransacking his brains for the means of sending out men to spike the guns on the glacis, under the fire of the insurgents from the neighboring houses, suddenly remembered that he had seen in his magazine some suits of plate armor, and he proposed to try whether, protected by them, men could not sally out and work in security under the musketry fire. He got together twelve complete suits, and dressed out twelve gunners and grenadiers, thus selecting big men, be it remarked. At a certain hour the garrison lined the covered way, and from thence and from the fort opened a steady fire of musketry and of artillery on the lines of the insurgents.

Then out marched the twelve knights of the eighteenth century, much in David's state of mind when he complained he had not proved his armor. The men carried handspikes, hammers and spikes. Moving, naturally, slowly and awkwardly in their heavy steel mail, still they succeeded in completing their work under a hail of bullets from the insurgents. The scene is described, as we can well believe, to have been most remarkable, and to have had something picturesque and also diabolical about it.

As the mailed figures moved in silence among the guns, their handspikes looking like maces, their silence and the slowness of their actions seemed unnatural under the steady hail of bullets. The insurgents were believed to have thought hell itself had sent forth these extraordinary antagonists, ghosts of a past age; while the French on the ramparts, true to their nature, the first moment of anxiety over, burst into roars of laughter.—Phipp's "Marshals of Napoleon."

PHILADELPHIA ANGEL FOOD.

Her Epicures Like York State Snappers Better Than Terrapin.

Months before most city gunners think of getting ready their hunting traps Old Bill Dudley is raking in game by the ton. Snapping turtles are his prey, and as there is no closed season for birds of that sort, and as no one except himself makes a business of hunting them, he has things his own way. He supplies Philadelphia, which is the only real snapper market in the world.

They eat snapper some over there, says the New York Advertiser, and every one they eat comes from Dudley's hands. He catches them all in old mill dams in New York state. Sometimes he lands an old bull snapper weighing forty or fifty pounds, but the average one will not pull down more than fifteen. Ten-pounders fetch more money than larger ones. He catches them on troutlines baited with chicken entrails. They are packed in barrels and shipped to Philadelphia. He caught five hundred and sixty-one last summer. When he can't get ten cents a pound for them he holds the snappers in a marshy pen till the dealers come to him. There is no demand for snapping turtles in New York, but Philadelphia epicures consider them, when prepared with the right sort of Madeira sauce, better eating than any terrapin that was ever cooked.

This One Isn't Tough.

City Man (to hunter)—Lije, you've heard a great many tough hunting stories. Which do you think is the toughest yarn you ever heard?

Lije—I don't remember of hearin' no such tough yarn as you speak of. Tell you what really did happen down here. though, 'bout a year ago. A man shot a bear in the head, and just the minute the bear felt the ball he turned right round. He turned so quick that the ball hit the man and killed him after passing through the bear.—Philadelphia Post.

RUN DOWN BY A TRAIN.

Junkman Yumbo Thrown from His Wagon and Killed.

Elizabeth, Dec. 5—A fatal railroad accident occurred on the Central Railroad at 7:30 this morning at the Dark Lane crossing, a mile and a half west of here, when train 34 from Somerville, east, plunged into a wagon driven by Escara Yumbo, a junkman of Lombardi street, Newark.

By the driver's side sat his 12-year-old son.

The driver was thrown more than a hundred feet and was killed, as was also the horse. The boy escaped unhurt. Fragments of the wagon were thrown on top of the train and startled the passengers.

When the train was brought to a standstill the boy was found kneeling over the body of his father trying to awaken him. The body of Yumbo was taken to the Morgue.

AT REST.

Lewis E. Clark.

A large number of friends and relatives attended the funeral services of Lewis E. Clark from his late home corner of Central avenue and Fourth street this afternoon at 2:30.

Rev. Dr. Richards, pastor of the Crescent Avenue Church, conducted the services which were very impressive. His words of comfort were consoling to the bereaved ones who have lost their father and friend.

An opportunity was given all to take a lost look at the departed.

Members of the Board of Education and other prominent citizens were present.

The tokens of esteem expressed in the offerings of flowers were simple and beautiful, consisting of white and pink roses, callas, ferns and violets.

The pall bearers were J. B. Coward, R. H. Cook, W. H. Young and J. W. Murray.

Interment was in the Presbyterian Cemetery.

REMARKABLE CURES

Of Recent Date.

A Statement from Ex-Mayor John Corson, Esq., of Clinton, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

I acknowledge with the utmost pleasure the wonderful cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in my case.

I had been a sufferer from piles, which gave me constant pain and distress, during twenty long years, attended with frequent loss of blood and with great and painful protrusion of the pile tumors and rectum whenever my bowels moved.

I tried constantly to get relief from my sufferings, but to no purpose until Mr. Bryan, a friend of mine, who had been cured by Dr. Lighthill of the same trouble, recommended him to me, and he effected a complete and radical cure in my case also, and earned my lifelong gratitude.

JOHN CORSON.

THE CASE OF MR PETER G. EYCK, OF BISSELL, HUNTERDON CO., N. J.

Dr. Lighthill Effects a Complete Cure Where Ten Physicians Had Failed.

TO THE SICK, SUFFERING AND AFFLICTED:

For many years past I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. Every movement of the bowels was attended with loss of blood and with intense pain which lasted for hours and sometimes all day. My condition was aggravated by a prolapse of the rectum, which greatly increased my suffering and sometimes gave me most agonizing pains.

So great was my distress and so bad my condition that I sold my farm, not being able to work it any longer. At one time the protruding pile tumors became so highly inflamed and swollen that they could not be replaced, and I had to go to bed, applying hot poultices for three months before I could get relief.

I had been under the treatment of ten different physicians, some of New York City, Easton, Washington and elsewhere, without any benefit whatever, and had given up my case as hopeless when, luckily for me, I heard of Dr. Lighthill's skill and success in such cases, and went to him for treatment, with the happy result that he effected a radical and permanent cure in less than four weeks's time; and I am glad to say that the entire treatment gave me neither pain nor distress.

I consider my cure perfectly wonderful, and so do all my friends and neighbors. I am confident that there is no case of piles which Dr. Lighthill cannot cure.

DOANE & EDSALL.

THE J. C. DUFF OPERA COMPANY

The Artists and Repertory—What Has Been Accomplished—New Operas for Immediate Production.

It may be truly said of this lyric organization, which will appear in Music Hall Dec. 14, that no company now before the public has done so much excellent and satisfactory musical work. Mr. Duff's name, so far as English opera is concerned, is a synonym for perfection. He explores every language, and gives to the English tongue the masterworks of the greatest composers. So great is the demand for Mr. Duff's company, that during the seasons past it has appeared in nearly all the leading New York theatres, and runs of one hundred nights are usually the desirable and satisfactory results obtained. At the Broadway Theatre, the Fifth Avenue, Daley's, Palmer's and the Casino, Mr. Duff's operatic productions are always eagerly welcomed by the culture and fashion of the metropolis.

This season his company will be larger, stronger and more complete than ever. Popular, as well as grand opera will be sung in our own language. Following is a list of the soloists:

Miss Nita Carrite's appearances heretofore have been confined to European capitals, principally in London with the Carl Rosa Opera Co., also in Paris. She is a pupil of Marchesi and was by her considered one of her most competent pupils. Her voice is a pure mezzo soprano of unusual range. The parts which she will impersonate will include Carmen, to which her physical attributes are peculiarly well adapted, Santuzza in "Cavaleria Rusticana", Galatea in Von Suppe's operette, "The Beautiful Galatea", The Princess in the "Basoche" and other parts in new operas to be produced later on. This young lady in personal appearance is remarkably beautiful, of a pure brunette type, and though she was born in Halifax, Nova Scotia, of English and French parents, most of her life has been spent in Europe, and she makes her first appearance in this country with Mr. Duff's Company.

Miss Margaret Lemon is a native of Indianapolis, Ind., and came to this city a year ago. Her appearances hitherto have been confined to the concert and oratorio stage though she has made opera a study for some years past. Her voice is a rich, dramatic soprano and she evinces every indication of possessing unusual dramatic ability. She is petite in size and is the possessor of an extraordinary attractive face.

Miss Terecita Zalss, this young lady will make her first apperrance on the operatic strge in the character of Micaela in "Carmen". She is a pure soprano, sings with great expression.

Miss Drew Donaldson, this lady is a mezzo-soprano contralto who will be heard in the Queen of "The Bohemian Girl", Mercedes in "Carmen". Lola in "Cavaleria Rusticana", and other characters. Her experience has been quite extensive, having been a member of the Casino Company, Miss Lillian Russell's Opera Company, and other organizations prior to joining Mr. Duff's forces.

Miss Minnie Dereu; this lady is a pure soprano, who has heretofore been known favorably in connection with many opera companies, and will get her best opportunities to shine in Offenbach's operetta "Marriage by Lanterns."

Charles Bassett, this excellent young American tenor, has long since won his laurels in the operatic field to the successes he attained first with the American Opera Company and later with Mr. Duff's organization. His voice, which is of unusually beautiful quality, is rich and full and of a most extensive range. His best parts are Don Jose in "Carmen", Tirridu in "Cavaleria Rusticana", which he played for one hundred nights at the Casino, New York, Thadeus in "The Bohemian Girl", the Student King in "The Besoche."

Alcula Blum is a baritone, who until recently, has been appearing in Berlin at the Opera House, in a complete repertoire of grand operas, during which time he has acquired an experience which has fitted him to hold a position in any operatic organization, as prima baritone, Jupiter in "Cavaleria Rusticana" and the Count in "The Bohemian Girl" are among his principal characters.

H. Minano is the basso contante of the company who has appeared successfully here in opera and concert, prior to which time he was a popular favorite in Europe and Australia.

Joseph Fay is the basso. H. W. Dodd, comedy tenor. Miss Amelia Kelly, soprano, complete the list of artists. There will be a complete and well trained chorus, and a full orchestra.

The musical director is John McGhie.

The repertoire will include "Carmen" by Bizet, "Cavaleria Rusticana" by Pietro Mascagni, "Il Pagliacci" by Leoncarvallo, "Philemon and Baucis" by Gounod, "The Beautiful Galatea" by Von Suppe, "The Bohemian Girl" by Balfe, "The Basoche" by Massager, "Mignon" by Ambroise Thomas, and later it is the intention to produce two distinct novelties which were the sensations of the past seasons in both London and Paris, "La Navarraish" by Massanet, "Le Attaque du Moulon" ("The Attack on the Mill") by Bruneau.

With such a splendid repertoire of operas and novelties Mr. Duff may be sure of success.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. V. The prompt relief it affords is alone worth many times the cost, 50 cents. Its continued use will effect a permanent cure. For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

RETIRE LEGAL TENDERS

Secretary Carlisle Explains His Currency Scheme.

His Report to Congress Advocates the Retirement of All Greenbacks in Circulation—To Be Replaced by National and State Banks Alone—Details of the Plan.

Washington, Dec. 5.—The annual report of Secretary Carlisle, containing the famous financial plan of President Cleveland, has been submitted to congress. One important feature is his discussion of the currency. He says:

"On the first day of July last the the total cash in the treasury, excluding current liabilities, but including a gold reserve of $64,873,024, was $116,626,734, and on the first day of November the total cash, excluding current liabilities, but including $61,361,826 in gold, was $106,9992,734, showing a decrease of $9,633,487.

"The excess of expenditures over receipts during the first five months of the present fiscal year is $21,737,367.92. It is not believed, however, that this difference between the receipts and expenditures will continue in the same proportion until the close of the year and, accordingly I have estimated a deficiency of $20,000,000 at that time.

"Owing to the large importation of raw sugar in anticipation of the passage of the tariff act of August 28, 1894, the duties collected upon that article up to Dec. 1 amounted to only $3,022,000, and, of course, nothing has yet been realized from the tax on incomes, as its payment cannot be legally enforced until after July 1, 1895."

He gives the details of the drain upon the gold reserve, and the reasons, as already published for the issue of the $50,000,000 bonds. He then takes up the plan for the reorganization of the paper currency. He advocates the retirement of all national legal tenders and the extension of the state and national banking system. To better facilitate this he says, repeal all laws requiring banks to deposit United States bonds as security for circulation; permit banks to issue notes to an amount equal to seventy-five per cent. of their capital, secured by a cash fund, and provide that circulating notes shall constitute a first lien upon bank assets.

Mr. Carlisle also says that the notes should not be of less than $10 in value, uniform in appearance, and obtainable only from the secretary of the treasury. A safety fund should be provided to redeem notes in case of failure, to be obtained by an annual tax of one per cent. upon all circulating notes. All laws requiring a bank to keep a reserve on account of deposits should be repealed. That the secretary may use any surplus of the United States' revenues to redeem such notes as he thinks necessary, up to seventy per cent. State bank notes are exempted from taxation. Paper for state bank notes to be obtained from the secretary of the treasury, but the designs printed thereon must be different from national bank notes. The notes now in circulation are to be gradually retired. Mr. Carlisle then says:

"If all the national and state banks now in existence should take out circulation to the full amount proposed, the guarantee fund would absorb about $225,000,000 of legal-tender notes, and the national bank safety fund, when raised to its full amount of five per cent. upon outstanding circulation, might be made to absorb about $3,500,000 more.

"As the plan suggested proposes to exempt the government of the United States from all liability for the redemption of national bank notes and place the sole responsibility upon the banks themselves, a guarantee fund of not less than 30 per cent. upon the outstanding circulation is regarded as a very proper and necessary feature of the system.

"A safety fund, consisting of only five per cent. upon the circulation, together with governmental liability for redemption in case the fund should at any time be insufficient, as proposed in one of the plans recently made public, would, of course, secure the noteholder, but it would pledge the faith and credit of the United States in a business in which they have no pecuniary interest whatever, and for that reason alone, if there were no others, such a system would be quite objectionable, and, in my opinion, not attainable.

"One beneficial effect of requiring each bank to redeem its own notes will be the promotion of more careful and conservative management of its affairs, thus avoiding to a large extent the causes which have produced a majority of the failures heretofore. Governmental responsibility for the redemption of any part of the obligations of the banks has a strong tendency to encourage speculative adventures and careless methods, which would not otherwise be permitted by the directing officials, and is, besides, inconsistent with the policy that the banking business, like all others, should be conducted upon the credit and at the risk of the parties most directly interested in its success."

The secretary then adds that all bills below $10 should be retired and gold and silver coin circulated in their place. Continuing he says:

"Great Britain, with $550,000,000 in gold and only $112,000,000 in silver, none of which is full legal tender, authorizes the issue of no note of a less denomination than 5 pounds, equal to $24.33; France, Belgium, and Italy, with $976,000,000 in gold and $518,300,000 in legal tender silver, issue no notes of a less denomination than 20 francs, or $3.86; Holland, with $27,600,000 in gold and $53,400,000 in legal tender silver, issues no paper below 25 florins, equal to $10.05; Spain, with $40,000,000 in gold and $126,000,000 in legal tender silver, issues nothing below 25 pezetas, or $4.72; Denmark, Sweden and Norway, with $28,000,000 in gold and $12,100,000 in limited legal tender silver, have no paper under 10 crowns, or $2.68, and Austria-Hungary, with $130,000,000 in gold and $81,000,000 in legal tender silver, is gradually retiring all notes under 10 crowns, or $4.04. None of these countries has any paper based exclusively upon silver, as we have, and consequently all payments made in sums less than the denominations of notes mentioned must be made in actual coin, which would not be the case here if the recommendation now made should be complied with.

"Our stock of full legal tender silver coins is larger in proportion to the stock of gold than in any of the countries named except Holland, Belgium and Spain, and yet we continue to obstruct their circulation by the issue of small United States notes and bank notes, which serve the purposes of the people in their daily transactions no better than coins or certificates based upon them."

Mr. Carlisle concluded his report with the tariff, of which he says:

"For many years our tariff laws have been framed upon the theory that the wealth of the country could be increased by imposing taxes upon the people, and that the prosperity of our industries could be promoted by increasing the cost of production, and the result has been that the net profits of labor and capital constantly diminished until they reached a point which made further development of our resources almost impossible.

"A change was demanded by every consideration of public duty and private interest, and, although the recent legislation did not accomplish all that was expected or desired, it inaugurated a policy which it is hoped and believed will ultimately result in a great improvement in our industrial condition and a corresponding enlargement of our internal and international commerce.

"In the prosecution of this policy no temporary check or apparent diversion of the public mind to other subjects should be permitted to diminish our confidence in its final success or weaken our determination to maintain a consistent advocacy of its claims to the favorable consideration of the people. On the contrary, reverses should stimulate increased effort, and every movement hereafter made should be a step forward in the direction of freer trade and a more equal distribution of the rewards of industry.

"The raw materials used in the production of commodities for the use of the people in their homes and in their various industrial pursuits should be free from taxation, in order that the burdens of labor may be lightened, and the necessaries of life made more abundant and less expensive."

GOLD DRAIN LIGHT.

Only Five Million Dollars Went Out on the Recent Bond Sale.

Washington, Dec. 5.—Since the Stewart syndicate was awarded the entire bond issue of $50,000,000, only $2,100,000 in gold have been withdrawn from the treasury by exchange for legal tender notes.

In the ten days preceding the acceptance of that bid and when it was under consideration the withdrawal of gold in exchange for treasury notes amounted to only $5,000,000.

The aggregate amount of gold withdrawals from the treasury in connection with the previous fifty million bond issue were in the neighborhood of $20,000,000.

FIVE WERE KILLED.

Dynamite Explodes with Terrific Effect Near Ottawa.

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—A dynamite explosion occurred in Hull, near Ottawa. Four men and a boy were killed. Several persons were wounded.

The explosion occurred about 10 o'clock. It shook the town of Hull and in the vicinity of Wall and Dume streets a number of houses were wrecked. The dynamite was to have been used, a little at a time, in blasting for the laying of water pipes.

What caused the explosion is not known. It is supposed the cabin where the dynamite and cartridges were kept caught fire. It is not known how many are wounded.

How W. A. Bruce of New York Expects To Make a Lot of Money.

Newark, N. J., Dec. 5.—W. A. Bruce, of New York, proprietor of a collection agency, has brought suit in the second district court under an old law against several hundred prominent business corporations. The latter have failed to file with the secretary of state a list of their officers and directors, as the old law requires. They are, in consequence, liable to a $200 fine each, half of which goes to the informer.

Should he win Bruce will receive about $10,000 as his share.

Slept to Death in Church.

Reading, Pa., Dec. 5.—Daniel Koill, one of the wealthiest citizens of Berks county, fell asleep in the Oley Reformed church, near his home in Oley township, while attending the funeral services of a neighbor and never awoke. Heart disease is thought to have been the cause of his death. He was about 70 years of age, and an eccentric character hereabouts.

MURDERED BY A NOBLE

An English Aristocrat Like Jack the Ripper.

Reginald Saunderson, While Insane, Butchers an Unfortunate Woman Named Dawes in London—Betrayed by His Knife and Cane—Escaped But Was Recaptured.

London, Dec. 5.—One of England's nobility, and a young man who has royal relatives is under arrest for butchering a low class disreputable woman in this city. The prisoner is Reginald Saunderson.

The body of a comely woman of the unfortunate class, about thirty years of age, was found in a frequented thoroughfare, Holland Villas Road, Kensington, with her throat cut from ear to ear. Some of the London newspapers claimed that this murder seemed to be a crime of the class committed by "Jack the Ripper."

Now it is announced that Saunderson, son of Mr. Llewellyn Saunderson, a prominent gentleman of the county of Dublin, has been arrested and charged with the crime.

Reginald Traherne Llewellyn Saunderson, is the second son of Llewellyn Traherne Basset Saunderson, esq., a justice of the peace of Dublin county who married Lady Rachael Mary Scott, third sister of the Earl of Clonmell. The family resides at De Vesci Terrace, Kingston, near Dublin, the queen of watering places in Ireland.

The prisoner's uncle is the famous Col. Saunderson, member of parliament from North Armagh, and more generally known as the leader of the Orangemen of the north of Ireland. Reginald is also related through his mother to many titled families. One of his aunts is Lady Monck, and another is the wife of the Hon. George Fitz Clarence, grandson of William IV. It is said that the prisoner's mind is unbalanced.

Saunderson was arrested at Killeshandra, near Armagh. He is only twenty-one years of age, and his mental condition has long caused anxiety to his friends. Recently Saunderson has been taking a morbid interest in the Southend murder case, the crime for which James Canham Read, was executed at Chelmsford.

Read killed Florence Dennis, at Southend, and the case attracted considerable interest owing to the wide publicity given to the trial in the newspapers.

Everything published on the subject was read by Saunderson, and, being naturally weak-minded, it is supposed that it drove him insane. The prisoner, previous to the murder of the woman found in Holland Villas road had been staying with relatives in the vicinity of London, and he left home to pay them another visit on Sunday, Nov. 25, the day previous to the murder.

He went to Kensington, where it is believed he met the unfortunate woman whose death he is now charged with causing. Saunderson is understood to have spent the evening with the woman, who was named Dawes, and to have afterwards murdered her. In any case, the prisoner did not return to the house of his relatives that night, but started for his father's home near Armagh.

The police had their suspicions directed towards Saunderson about a week ago, and further inquiries led to his arrest. A knife and a cherry-wood stick which were found near the dead woman have been identified as belonging to Saunderson. Further developments show that Saunderson was first arrested in Belfast, and that he was conveyed to Dublin, on his way to London. But the prisoner succeeded in escaping, and was rearrested.

The prisoner is a tall, handsome, pleasant-speaking young man, an expert at football, rowing and swimming. He was arraigned to-day and was formally remanded.

Farmers Steal a Fort.

Grand Forks, N. D., Dec. 5.—Russian farmers from Emmons county have been indicted for stealing the buildings at Fort Lincoln. One hundred Russians appeared at the fort with forty-five teams and driving away Major Gooding, who was in charge, demolished the fort and the old Custer house, which the residents have tried to preserve, and carried them away. Deputy United States marshals made a raid and eight of the offenders were captured. The names of forty others were secured.

Fatal Railroad Collision.

Flemington, N. J., Dec. 5.—Brakeman Francis Steckelt was killed and twenty cars and a locomotive were wrecked by one coal train running into the rear of another on the Lehigh Valley railroad at Neshantic. The first train stopped at a tank for water and a brakeman was not sent to the rear.

Postponed Their Meeting.

Albany, Dec. 5.—The session of the state board of claims which was to have been held in Utica, about Dec. 18, has been indefinitely postponed.

FIGHTING FOR LIFE.

A Suffering Woman Testifies.

Mrs. Henrietta Burton, of Janvier, N. J., writes: For a long time I suffered from a disordered stomach. My appetite was gone and what little I ate distressed me terribly. My health failed rapidly. I became very weak and feared I should never be well. After reading your "Guide to Health," I was encouraged to try Munyon's Dyspepsia Cure. Its action was so prompt that I soon felt like a new woman, and am now completely cured."

MUNYON'S STOMACH AND DYSPEPSIA CURE cures all forms of indigestion and stomach troubles such as constipation, rising of food, distress after eating, bloating of the stomach, palpitation of the heart, shortness of breath, and all affections of the heart caused by indigestion. It soothes, heals and invigorates stomachs that have been weakened by over-eating, or where the lining of the stomach has been impaired by physic and injurious medicines. Price 25 cents.

Munyon's Homœopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

ABBETT'S RECORD ENDS

New Jersey's Ex-Governor Expires From Diabetes.

Taken Sick Ten Days Ago He Sank Gradually Until the Close Came at His Jersey City Home—Review of His Life and Political Defeats and Victories.

Jersey City, Dec. 5.—Ex-Gov. Leon Abbett is dead at his home at Jersey avenue and Montgomery street. He had been sinking for the past ten days with diabetes. Early this afternoon Dr. McGill, his physician, said the end was near. Word was sent to his immediate relatives, and they were soon at the dying man's bedside. Dr. McGill was also present. The ex-governor passed away quietly and without pain.

Leon Abbett, jr., said that his father had been suffering for the last two weeks from nervous exhaustion, but that there was nothing alarming about the symptoms until two days ago, when he grew suddenly worse. On Sunday the ex-governor became unconscious. Since that day he has, at intervals only, recognized members of his family.

Leon Abbett was born in Philadelphia Oct. 8, 1836. He was educated in the public schools of the Quaker city and adopted law as a profession. He came to New Jersey in 1862, and for the last twenty-five years has been identified with the politics of that state.

For more than a quarter of a century Leon Abbett had been one of the most distinguished leaders of the democratic party in New Jersey. He held the office of governor twice. In 1883 he was a candidate for governor against Jonathan Dixon, and was elected by 6,809 majority. In 1889 he ran for governor against Gen. E. Burd Grubb and was again elected.

The only other man who was twice elected governor of New Jersey was Joel A. Parker. Besides being chief magistrate of the state, Mr. Abbett held many minor offices.

In 1863, a year after his marriage to Miss Mary Briggs, of Philadelphia, Leon Abbett was appointed corporation attorney of Hoboken, and in the fall of 1864 he was elected to represent the district in the legislature.

He was re-elected the following year. His ability at once brought him into prominence, and he became chairman of the democratic assembly caucus. Mr. Abbett soon afterward moved to Jersey City. In 1868 he represented the First District of Jersey City in the assembly, and was chosen speaker of the house. He was re-elected the following fall and was again chosen speaker.

In 1874 he was elected state senator from Hudson county. He became corporation counsel of Jersey City in 1876, and held that office until he was elected governor in 1883.

He was a delegate to the national democratic convention in Baltimore in 1872, and was chosen one of its secretaries. He cast his vote for Thomas F. Bayard, for nominee for president.

Gov. Abbett attended every democratic national convention since then except the one that nominated Gen. Hancock. At the convention in 1884 Gov. Abbett was mentioned as a presidential possibility. In 1876 he tried hard to get Joel Parker nominated for president. In 1877 Gov. Abbett was president of the state senate. He aspired to become a United States senator.

In 1887 the office was almost within his reach, but an anti-Abbett combination was formed, and Rufus Blodgett was chosen, with the aid of the republicans' minority. In 1892 Abbett was again a prominent candidate for United States senator, but at the last moment James Smith, jr., got the office.

Gov. Abbett was about the same time appointed supreme court justice, and held it until his death. The ex-governor was also a member of the Jersey City board of education, and in 1869 he was chosen its presiding officer. He was one of the leading members of the New Jersey bar.

The funeral services will be held at the family residence, Montgomery street and Jersey avenue, to-morrow night at 8 o'clock. They will be conducted by Rev. George S. Bennett, rector of Grace Episcopal church. The interment will be in Greenwood Friday morning.

An Ovation to McKinley.

New York, Dec. 5.—The Ohio society last night gave a dinner to Mayor-elect Strong. Gov. McKinley was present and was given an ovation. He complimented the society upon the great political victory in this city last November and spoke highly of the mayor-elect. Ohio, he said, is justly proud of the distinction that has been given to one of her early citizens.

German Cattle Embargo.

Berlin, Dec. 5.—The foreign office has forwarded to Baron A. von Saurma-Jeltsch, the German ambassador at Washington, a statement regarding the prohibition against the landing of American cattle and fresh meat at German ports. The statement is not favorable to the American side of the question.

Naugatuck Constables Acquitted.

Waterbury, Conn., Dec. 5.—Constables William Brophy and James Furin, of Naugatuck, arrested for refusing to move on when ordered by Policeman Grant, and convicted of disorderly conduct were acquitted here in the district court.

Killed by a Premature Blast.

Pottsville, Pa., Dec. 5.—Ewyllyn Evans, once a noted leader of Welsh Eisteddfod choirs, was killed in Central colliery by the premature explosion of a blast.

Republican Ticket Elected.

Plainfield, N. Y., Dec. 5.—In the city election the entire republican ticket was elected on a very light vote.

Gone with County Money.

Chicago, Dec. 5.—S. W. Riderburg, county clerk, has disappeared. His accounts are $4,800 short.

JAPAN'S FINAL ANSWER.

She Will Receive No One But an Accredited Peace Ambassador.

Tokio, Dec. 5.—Japan has notified China that no further peace proposals will be considered unless made by a regularly accredited ambassador from the Chinese court.

At the same time Japan reminds China that it is not Japan but China that is suing for peace. Japan is dissatisfied with China's temporizing policy and claims that China is seeking concessions in advance of a formal conference looking to a settlement.

London, Dec. 5.—A correspondent says that China has been offered all the money that the treaty powers are likely to allow Japan to claim as indemnity on the basis of a four and a half per cent. gold loan secured by the uncharged revenues of the treaty ports.

The British steamer Guy Mannering is landing at Shanghai from Hamburg war material valued at £175,000.

A despatch from Chee-Foo says that Colonel Hanneken the commander-in-chief of the Chinese forces, is raising one hundred thousand soldiers to be officered entirely by Europeans, mostly Germans. Some of these officers have already arrived and others are on the way. Seven thousand soldiers have been ordered to reinforce Tung-Chow, fifty miles west of Chee-Foo, and are being supplied from Wei-Hai-Wei. A combined force of Japanese and Coreans was conveyed by steamer to Asan, and marched thence to Kongji to attack the Tonghaks. The force routed thousands of Tonghaks and killed a large number.

RE-ARRESTED THE DOCTOR.

J. Edward Lee Locked Up Again for Alleged Murder.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 5.—Dr. J. Edward Lee was arrested on a bench warrant charging him with murder in the second degree in causing the death of Margaret Schloss, of Derby, in this city, on Aug. 21, 1893, by a criminal operation.

Dr. Lee was tried and acquitted in the city court in October of last year, of this offense. In his motion for a new trial State Attorney Doolittle alleges that Dr. Lee's acquittal was brought about by "rascality in the city court." The nature of this "rascality" he refuses to divulge. Dr. Lee has now two murder charges hanging over him, the second being the death of Mrs. Isabel Miller.

On this second case he was acquitted also, but State Attorney Doolittle took advantage of a seldom used law permitting the state to appeal, and a new trial has been ordered by the supreme court. Lee was held in $5,000 bail.

THREE MAYORS ELECTED.

Results of the Contests in Massachusetts Towns.

Springfield, Mass., Dec. 5.—Springfield has elected Charles L. Long, republican, mayor by $08 plurality over S. D. Sherwood, democrat, and eight republican aldermen. The city voted for license by over 1,500.

Holyoke, Mass., Dec. 5.—The city has elected H. A. Chase, republican, mayor by a plurality of 18 votes, over J. J. Curran, democrat, the vote standing 2,649 to 2,631. The city voted for license and all but one of the aldermen are democratic.

Chicopee, Mass., Dec. 5.—Mayor Mellen, democrat, has been re-elected by ten votes over Andrew Gale, republican. The lic vote was 1,264 yes, 597 no.

CHARGED WITH TREASON.

Blackwell May Be Shot for Selling Cherokee Land.

Wichita, Kan., Dec. 5.—An urgent plea for help has been received here from A. J. Blackwell, the squaw man who was lately arrested in the Cherokee nation for high treason.

It appears that Blackwell laid out a town named Davis in the nation and sold part of it, and this is counted treason under the laws of the Cherokees. Treason is punishable by death.

Blackwell is now incarcerated in the jail at Claremore, Cherokee nation, and he writes that he is chained in his cell, is treated as a dangerous criminal and will undoubtedly be shot unless some powerful influence is brought to bear on his captors.

MUST NOW VACCINATE.

The Compulsory Law Declared Legal in Connecticut.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 5.—The supreme court of Connecticut has rendered a decision sustaining the new law giving school boards in Connecticut towns power to order vaccination of pupils in public schools.

It was contended by a New Britain plaintiff that the law was unconstitutional, and the the anti-vaccination society there made so strong a fight on the matter that the local school board yielded so far as to allow pupils not vaccinated to go to school until the law was tested.

Extended Civil Service Rules.

Washington, Dec. 5. — President Cleveland, in compliance with a request from the secretary of the interior, will probably issue to-day an order including the scientific and technical force of the geological survey within the classified civil service.

Three Burglars Sentenced.

Winsted, Conn., Dec. 5.—In the superior court here Patrick Brennan and George and Frank Ray of Chicago, pleaded guilty to committing burglary in a store in Canaan, Nov. 11. Each was sentenced to three years and six months in prison.

Eight Houses Burned.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Dec. 5.—Eight houses belonging to the Keystone Coal company at Mill Creek, were destroyed by fire. They were occupied by miners and their families. The loss is estimated at $7,000, covered by insurance. The origin is unknown.

Carnegie's Plant May Move.

Pittsburg, Dec. 5.—A report here says Carnegie's immense mills will be moved to Huron, Ohio. Secretary Lovejoy refused to confirm or deny the story.

Hat Factory Burned.

Newark, N. J., Dec. 5.—Hogan's hat factory and Dewitt's wire works were totally destroyed by fire. The loss is about $35,000.

THEIR SESSIONS SHORT

The House and Senate Did But Little Business.

The Higher Chamber Adjourned Out of Respect to the Late Congressman Wright's Memory After Thirty-five Minutes, While Four Hours Were Consumed in the House.

Washington, Dec. 5.—Both the sessions of the senate and house were unusually brief, the former lasting only thirty five minutes and the latter four hours. Senator Peffer monopolized most of the senate's time introducing populistic resolutions which were promptly sent away to die in committee pigeon holes. A number of bills were introduced in the house. The first business of the senate after prayer and organization was to pass one rather queer pension bill, pensioning a woman whose husband left home twenty years ago, and who may be still living; but the bill contains the unique provision that the pension is to cease "if the soldier returns."

Mr. Peffer's projects of legislation, including the proper disposition of the bodies of senators and members who die at the capitol, the repeal of that part of the resumption act which relates to the sale of bonds, and the government control of freight railroads.

A resolution was offered by Mr. Blanchard (dem., La.), which went over, looking to the payment of the bounty on the sugar crop of 1894 under the terms of the McKinley act. A cloture resolution was offered by Mr. Vest (dem., Mo.), who gave notice that he would ask action on it immediately. And two resolutions were offered by Mr. Lodge (rep., Mass.), calling for information as to affairs at Bluefields in Nicaragua, and for Rear Admiral Walker's report in relation to the Sandwich Islands. The early adjourment was out of respect to the memory of the late Representative Wright of Pennsylvania.

In the house bills were passed, appropriating $20,000 for the dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga national military parks, on the 19th and 20th of November, 1895, and appropriating $75,000 with which to purchase three thousand acres of land on which the battle of Shiloh was fought, and to begin the construction of a national park thereon.

Mr. Bingham (rep., Pa.) offered a bill granting an American register to the foreign built steamer Empress, owned by John D. Hart, of Philadelphia.

The first free coinage bill of the session was introduced by Mr. Hartman (rep., Mont.) The bill provides for a silver dollar of 412 1-2 grains of standard silver and authorizes the holders of silver bullion to the amount of $100 or more to have the same coined at any United States mint.

The dollars coined are to be a legal tender for all debts, public and private.

Mr. McRae (dem., Ark.), from the committee on public lands, reported, with the recommendation that it pass, a bill for opening to settlement and entry all lands included within the limits of any Indian reservation or in the Indian territory. The bill is considered one of the most important before congress.

Mr. Mallory, (of Fla.) chairman of the Nicaragua canal committee conferred with Speaker Crisp and the latter agreed to bring the canal matter before the committee on rules. A strong opposition is certain.

Mr. Geissenheimer (of N. J.) resigned the chairmanship of the committee on immigration and naturalization to accept that of the committee on naval affairs.

RAISED THE DRAFT.

Mr. Brown of New York, Did It, and Fooled an Altoona Bank.

Altoona, Pa., Dec. 5.—The Second National bank of Altoona has been cleverly swindled out of $1,200 by a man giving the name "Henry Brown, of New York." Brown asked Cashier Hastings what interest the bank would allow on the deposit of a New York draft for $1,200 for one year.

The bank would allow no interest, but Brown left it receiving a certificate of deposit. The Altoona bank then offered Brown three per cent. interest for the deposit.

Brown went to the Second National, received $1,200 in bills, ostensibly to deposit it in the Altoona bank and disappeared. Word was received from New York that the draft had been good for $12, and had been raised to the amount for which the Second National had cashed it.

The Reading Railroad Suit.

Philadelphia, Dec. 5.—The original application of Isaac L. Rice to compel the restitution to the Reading Railroad company of the money lost by the New York & New England venture, and the money paid to the Lehigh Valley Railroad company, was postponed until sometime next week by reason of the absence of Mr. Rice's attorney.

Tramps Turn Burglars.

Lyons, N. Y., Dec. 5.—Tramps are terrorizing Wayne county. A gang of ten men broke into Gregg & Adams' general store at Savannah, stealing merchandise valued at $500. They boarded a freight train and escaped. Sheriff Ford, at the head of a large posse of deputies, is scouring the country in search of the gang.

Bismarck in Good Health.

Berlin, Dec. 5.—Prince Bismarck is expected to reach Friedrichsruh on the 10th, instant, accompanied by Doctors Schweninger and Chrysander and his family. He sleeps well and appears to be in good health.

Ex-Congressman Connelly Dead.

Scranton, Pa., Dec. 5.—Ex-Congressman Daniel W. Connelly died here after a brief illness. He was postmaster of this city during President Cleveland's first administration.

Dead in His Office.

Boston, Dec. 5.—William H. Morrow, a well-known insurance agent, of 45 Kilby street, was found dead in his office, asphyxiated by gas.

. . . THE . . .

RED BADGE OF COURAGE.

An Episode of the American Civil War.

BY STEPHEN CRANE.

[Copyright, 1894, by the Author.]

The tattered man stood musing.

"Well, he was reg'lar jim-dandy for nerve, wan't he," said he finally in a little awe-struck voice. A reg'lar jim-dandy." He thoughtfully poked one of the docile hands with his foot. "I wonner where he got 'is stren'th from? I never seen a man do like that before. It was a funny thing. Well, he was a reg'lar jim-dandy."

The youth desired to screech out his grief. He was stabbed. But his tongue lay dead in the tomb of his mouth. He threw himself again upon the ground and began to brood.

The tattered man stood musing.

"Look a here, pardner," he said, after a time. He regarded the corpse as he spoke. "He's up an' gone, aint 'e, an' we might as well begin t' look out fer ol' number one."

The youth, awakened by the tattered soldier's tone, looked quickly up. He saw that he was swinging uncertainly on his legs and that his face had turned to a shade of blue.

"Good Lord," he cried, in fear, "you ain't going to—not you too."

The tattered man waved his hand. "Nary die," he said. "All I want is some pea-soup an' a good bed. Some pea-soup," he repeated dreamfully.

The youth arose from the ground. "I wonder where he came from. I left him over there!" He pointed. "And now I find 'im here. And he was coming from over there, too." He indicated a new direction. They both turned toward the body as if to interrogate it.

"Well," at length spoke the tattered man, "there ain't no use in our stayin' here an' tryin' t' ask him anything."

The youth nodded an assent, wearily. They both turned to gaze for a moment at the corpse.

The youth murmured something.

"Well, he was a jim-dandy, wan't 'e?" said the tattered man as if in response.

They turned their backs upon it and started away. For a time, they stole softly, treading with their toes. It remained laughing there in the grass.

"I'm commencin' t' feel pretty bad," said the tattered man suddenly breaking one of his little silences. "I'm commencin' t' feel pretty damn bad."

The youth groaned. "Oh, Lord." Was he to be the witness of another encounter?

But his companion waved his hand reassuringly. "Oh, I'm not goin' t' die yit."

As they plodded on the tattered soldier continued to talk. "Besides, if I died, I wouldn't die th' way that feller did. That was th' funniest thing. I'd jest flop down, I would. I never seen a feller die th' way that feller did."

Then he made a calm announcement: "There's two of 'em, little ones, but they're beginnin' to have fun with me now. I don't believe I kin walk much furder."

They went slowly on in silence. "Yeh look pretty peeked yerself," said the tattered man, at last. "I bet yeh've got a worser one than yeh think. Where is it located?" But he continued to harangue vaguely without waiting for a reply.

The youth had been wriggling since the other had begun to speak of wounds. He now gave a cry of exasperation and made a furious motion with his hand. "Oh, don't bother me," he said. "Now, don't bother me," he repeated, with desperate menace.

"Well, Lord knows I don't wanta bother anybody," said the tattered man. There was a little accent of despair in his voice as he replied. "Lord knows I've gota 'nough m' own t' 'tend to."

The youth, who had been holding a bitter debate with himself and casting glances of hate and contempt at the tattered man, here spoke in a hard voice. "Good-by," he said.

The tattered man looked at him in gaping amazement. "Why—why, pardner, where yeh goin'?" he asked, unsteadily. The youth looked at him, could see that he, too, like the other one, was beginning to act dumb and animal-like. His thoughts seemed to be floundering about in his head. "Now—now—look—here you—now. I won't have this—this here won't do. Where—where yeh goin'?"

The youth pointed vaguely. "Over there," he replied.

"Well, now, look-a-here—now," said the tattered man, rambling on in idiot fashion. His head was hanging forward and his words were slurred. "This thing won't do, now. Yeh wanta go trompin' off with a bad hurt. It ain't right—now—it ain't. Yeh wanta leave me take keer of yeh. It ain't right—it ain't."

HE COULD HEAR THE TATTERED MAN BLEATING.

In reply the youth climbed a fence and started away. He could hear the tattered man bleating plaintively.

Once he faced about angrily. "What?"

"Look-a-here, now—now—it ain't—"

The youth went on. Turning at a distance he saw the tattered man wandering about helplessly in the fields.

CHAPTER X.

He became aware that the furnace-roar of the battle was growing louder. Great brown clouds had floated to the still heights of air before him. The noise, too, was approaching. The woods filtered men and the fields became dotted.

As he rounded a hillock he perceived that the roadway was now a crying mass of wagons, teams and men. From the heaving tangle issued exhortations, commands, imprecations. Fear was sweeping it all along. The cracking whips bit and horses plunged and tugged. The white-topped wagons strained and stumbled in their exertions like fat sheep.

Presently the calm head of a forward-going column of infantry appeared in the road. It came swiftly on. Avoiding the obstructions gave it the sinuous movement of a serpent. The men at the head butted mules with their musket stocks. They prodded teamsters, indifferent to all howls. The men forced their way through parts of the dense mass by strength. The blunt head of the column pushed. The raving teamsters swore many strange oaths.

As the youth looked at the regiments, the black weight of his woe returned to him. He felt that he was regarding a procession of chosen beings. The separation was as great to him as if they had marched with weapons of flame and banners of sunlight. He could never be like them. He could have wept in his longings.

He discovered that he had a scorching thirst. His face was so dry and grimy that he thought he could feel his skin crackle. Each bone of his body had an ache in it and seemingly threatened to break with each moment. His feet were like two sores. Also, his body was calling for food. It was more powerful than a direct hunger. There was a dull, weight-like feeling in his stomach, and when he tried to walk his head swayed and he tottered. He could not see with distinctness. Small patches of crimson mist floated before his vision. While he had been tossed by many emotions he had not been aware of ailments. Now they beset him and made clamor.

A certain moth-like quality within him kept him in the vicinity of the battles. He had a great desire to see, and to get news. He wished to know who was winning.

The column that had butted stoutly at the obstacles in the roadway was barely out of the youth's sight before he saw dark waves of men come sweeping out of the woods and down through the fields. He knew at once that the steel fibers had been washed from their hearts. They were bursting from their coats and their equipments as from entanglements. They charged down upon him like terrified buffaloes.

Behind them blue smoke curled and clouded above the tree-tops and through the thickets he could sometimes see a distant pink glare. The voices of the cannon were clamoring in interminable chorus.

The youth was horror-stricken. He stared in agony and amazement.

The fight was lost. The dragons were coming with invincible strides. The army, helpless in the matted thickets, and blinded by the overhanging night, was going to be swallowed. War, the red animal, war, the blood-swollen god, would have bloated fill.

Within him, something bade to cry out. He had the impulse to make a rallying speech, to sing a battle hymn but he could only get his tongue to call into the air: 'Why—why—what—what's th' matter?"

Soon he was in the midst of them. They were leaping and scampering all about him. Their blanched faces shone in the dusk.

The youth turned from one to another of them as they galloped along. His incoherent questions were lost. They were heedless of his appeals. They did not seem to see him. They sometimes gabbled insanely. One huge man was asking of the sky: "Say, where de plank road? Where de plank road?" It was as if he had lost a child. He wept in his pain and dismay.

Presently, men were running hither and thither in all ways. The artillery booming, forward, rearward, and on the flanks made jumble of ideas of direction. Landmarks had vanished into the gathered gloom. The youth began to imagine that he had gotten into the center of the tremendous quarrel and he could perceive no way out of it From the mouths of the fleeing men came a thousand wild questions, but no one made answers.

The youth after rushing about and throwing interrogations at the heedless bands of retreating infantry, finally clutched a man by the arm. They swung around face to face.

"Why—why—" stammered the youth, struggling with his balky tongue.

The man screamed: "Let go me! Let go me." His face was livid and his eyes were rolling uncontrolled. He was heaving and panting. He still grasped his rifle, perhaps having forgotten to release his hold upon it. He tugged frantically and the youth being compelled to lean forward was dragged several paces.

"Let go me! Let go me."

"Why—why—" stuttered the youth.

"Well, then—" bawled the man in a lurid rage. He adroitly and fiercely swung his rifle. It crushed upon the youth's head. The man ran on.

The youth's fingers had turned to paste upon the other's arm. The energy was smitten from his muscles. He saw the flaming wings of lightning flash before his vision. There was a deafening rumble of thunder within his head.

IT CRUSHED UPON THE YOUTH'S HEAD.

Suddenly his legs seemed to die. He sank withering to the ground. He tried to arise. In his efforts against the numbing pain he was like a man wrestling with a creature of the air.

There was a sinister struggle.

Sometimes, he would achieve a position half erect, battle with the air for a moment, and then fall again, grabbing at the grass. His face was of a clammy pallor. Deep groans were wrenched from him.

CHAPTER XI.

At last, with a twisting movement, he got upon his hands and knees and from thence, like a babe trying to walk, to his feet. Pressing his hands to his temples, he went lurching over the grass.

He fought an intense battle with his body. His dulled senses wished him to swoon and he opposed them stubbornly, his mind portraying unknown dangers and mutilations if he should fall upon the field. He went in tall-soldier fashion. He imagined secluded spots where he could fall and be unmolested. To reach one, he strove against the tide of his pain.

Once, he put his hand to the top of his head and timidly touched the wound. The scratching pain of the contact made him draw a long breath through his clenched teeth. His fingers were dabbled with blood. He regarded them with a fixed stare.

Around him, he could hear the grumble of jolted cannon as the scurrying horses were lashed toward the front. Once, a young officer on a be-splashed charger nearly ran him down. He turned and watched the mass of guns, men and horses sweeping in a wide curve toward a gap in a fence. The officer was making excited motions with a gauntleted hand. The guns followed the teams with an air of unwillingness, of being dragged by the heels.

Some officers of the scattered infantry were cursing and railing like fish-wives. Their scolding voices could be heard above the din. Into the unspeakable jumble in the roadway, rode a squadron of cavalry. The faded yellow of their facings shone bravely. There was amighty altercation.

The artillery were assembling as if for a conference.

The blue haze of evening was upon the fields. The lines of forest were long purple shadows. One cloud lay along the western sky partly smothering the red.

As the youth left the scene behind him, he heard the guns suddenly roar out. He imagined them shaking in black rage. They belched and roared like brass devils guarding a gate. The soft air was filled with the tremendous remonstrance. With it came the shattering peal of opposing infantry. Turning to look behind him, he could see sheets of orange light illumine the shadowy distance. There were subtle and sudden lightnings in the far air. At times he thought he could see heaving masses of men.

He hurried on in the dusk. The day had faded until he could barely distinguish places for his feet. The purple darkness was filled with men who lectured and jabbered. Sometimes he could see them gesticulating against the somber sky. There seemed to be a great ruck of men and munitions spread about in the forests and in the fields. The little, narrow roadway now lay lifeless. There were overturned wagons like sun-dried bowlders. The bed of the former torrent was choked with the bodies of horses and splintered parts of war machines.

It had come to pass that his wound pained him but little. He was afraid to move rapidly, however, for a dread of disturbing it. He held his head very still and took many precautions against stumbling. He was filled with anxiety, and his face was pinched and drawn in anticipation of the pain of any sudden mistake of his feet in the gloom.

His thoughts, as he walked, fixed intently upon his hurt. There was a cool, liquid feeling about it and he imagined blood moving slowly down under his hair. His head seemed swollen to a size that made him think his neck to be inadequate.

The new silence of his wound made much worriment. The little, blistering voices of pain, that had called out from his scalp, were, he thought, definite in their expression of danger. By them, he believed he could measure his plight. But when they remained ominously silent, he became frightened and imagined terrible fingers that clutched into his brain.

He held continuous arguments as to whether he should lie down and sleep at some near spot, or force himself on until he reached a certain haven. He often tried to dismiss the question, but his body persisted in rebellion and his senses nagged at him like pampered babies.

At last he heard a cheery voice near his shoulder: "Yeh seem t' be in a pretty bad way, boy?"

The youth did not look up, but he assented, with thick tongue: "Uh."

The owner of the cheery voice took him firmly by the arm. "Well," he said, with a round laugh, "I'm goin' your way. Th' hull gang is goin' your way. An' I guess I kin give yeh a lift." They began to walk like a drunken man and his friend.

As they went along, the man questioned the youth and assisted him with the replies like one manipulating the mind of a child.

In the search which followed he seemed to possess a wand of a magic kind. He threaded the mazes of the tangled forests with a strange fortune. In encounters with guards and patrols he displayed the keenness of a detective and the valor of a gamin. Obstacles fell before him and became of assistance. The youth, with his chin still on his breast, stood woodenly near while his companion beat ways and means out of sullen things.

The forest seemed a vast hive of men buzzing about in frantic circles, but the cheery man conducted the youth without mistakes until at last he began to chuckle with glee and self-satisfaction. "Ah, ther yeh are. See that fire?"

The youth nodded stupidly.

"Well, there's where your reg'ment is. An' now good-by, ol' boy, good luck t' yeh."

A warm and strong hand clasped the youth's languid fingers for an instant, and then he heard a cheerful and audacious whistling as the man strode away. As he who had so befriended him was thus passing out of his life, it suddenly occurred to the youth that he had not once seen his face.

He went slowly toward the fire indicated by his departed friend. As he reeled, he bethought him of the welcome his comrades would give him. He had a conviction that he would soon feel in his sore heart the barbed missiles of ridicule. He had no strength to invent a tale: he would be a soft target.

He made vague plans to go off into the deeper darkness and hide, but they were all destroyed by the voices of exhaustion and pain from his body. His ailments clamoring, forced him to seek the place of food and rest at whatever cost.

He swung unsteadily toward the fire. He could see the forms of men throwing black shadows in the red light; and as he went nearer it became known to him in some way that the ground was strewn with sleeping men.

Of a sudden he confronted a dark and monstrous figure. A rifle barrel caught some glinting beams. "Halt, halt." He was dismayed for a moment, but he presently thought that he recognized the nervous voice. As he stood tottering before the rifle barrel he called out: "Why, hello, Wilson, you—you—here?"

A PALM WEDDING.

GRACE CHURCH THE SCENE OF CHARMING NUPTIALS.

The Junior Member of the Firm of Vanderbeek & Sattels Takes a Charming Bride for Life Partner.

A notable wedding took place in Grace P. E. Church yesterday afternoon at 4:30, when Miss Fay Mathilde Young, daughter of the late Major Young, was married to Joseph Sattels, the popular junior member of the piano firm of Vanderbeek & Sattels.

Long before the bridal party arrived, the church was filled with friends and relatives, who listened to the playing of William E. MacClymont, whose selections were intermezzo from Cavalier, sanctus from Gounod, and from Black Prophet overture.

At the appointed hour the familiar strains of the wedding march from Lohengrin were heard, and the ushers proceeded up the centre aisle, followed by the maid of honor, Miss Bessie Horn, sister of the bride, carrying a large bouquet of white and pink roses. The bride then entered leaning on the arm of her brother, Lieutenant Tieman Horn. She was gowned in white satin, with veil.

At the altar, which was adorned with large palms, the party were met by the groom and best man, Augustus Behning of New York. All remarked the handsome physique of the Sandow-statured form, and the loveliness of his bride.

The service was that of the Episcopal Church, and was performed by Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman. The bride was given away by her brother. The responses were very clear and distinct.

At the conclusion of the ceremony Organist MacClymont played Mendelssohn's wedding march while the bride and groom were leaving the church

A reception was held immediately afterward, at the home of the bride's mother on Central avenue, from 5 to 6.

Mr. and Mrs. Sattels left town early in the evening, and will be gone about a week.

The ushers were Dr. Marc Clawson, O. T. Peck, of Roselle; E. A. Horn, of Mt. Vernon, N. Y.; and Frank L. Eckerson, of New York city. Their favors from the groom were forget-me-not stickpins.

And That's So.

(From The Trenton True American.)

In selecting a successor to Justice Abbett, Governor Werts will have an opportunity to demonstrate with great accuracy on what phase of public esteem he chooses to vest the reputation of his administration.

The elements of the Democratic party which have hitherto, with rare exceptions, dictated important appointments, received a tremendous setback at the last two elections, and demonstrated the fact that while they lead the followers are lessening in numbers.

A radical departure from past methods, and one that would give promise of the rehabilitation of the Democracy of New Jersey on a sound basis, would be the appointment of ex-Governor George C. Ludlow to the Supreme Court. He is a man whom every good citizen thoroughly respects, not only for his ability, his good record as Senator and as Governor, but "for the enemies that he has made". It is a patent and admitted fact that Mr. Ludlow has been delegated to the rear rank of the Democracy because his official acts did not accord with the desires and purposes of some of the politicians whose leadership has brought defeat on the Democratic party.

Governor Werts has the opportunity to note his recognition of these facts and also his appreciation of the popular sentiment on the subject, and we imagine that he can do his party and the State no better service than by correctly reading the lesson of the election and showing that he understands it.

A Keen Eye and a True Arm.

Some boys playing in the field back of Gideon Allen's home on Somerset street, yesterday, scared up a rabbit which they tried to capture. Mr. Allen, seeing the cotton-tail from his bedroom window, thought he might as well have it. Getting his gun, he sighted the rabbit and succeeded in getting in a death wound. Those who have felt that Mr. Allen was growing old will appreciate this evidence of renewal of his youth.

Royal Arcanum.

Next Monday evening the annual election of officers will be held. Among the out-of-town guests expected are Dr. Seymour Marsh and Thomas Bartindale of Brooklyn, formerly of this city.

Mr. Ira P. Wetmore, a prominent real estate agent of San Angelo, Texas, has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in his family for several years as occasion required, and always with perfect success. He says: "I find it a perfect cure for our baby when troubled with colic or dysentery. I now feel that my outfit is not complete without a bottle of this Remedy at home or on a trip away from home. BRILLIANT BOWLING.

Alcyones Come to Plainfield and Meet Their First Defeat.

The Alcyones of Elizabethport met their first defeat of the season on the Board of Trade alleys last evening, at the hands of the Plainfield Bowling Club. Both team were well matched, and during the game first one team would forge ahead, then the other. When it came to the windup the home team made a garrison finish, and completely surprised their guests, as strike after strike was made. Among the heroes of the evening was Charles Vail, who did nobly, and his friends surrounded him and almost carried him on their shoulder, the excitement was so intense. The score:

PARKS LOST.

But They Had Almost as Good a Time as Though They Had Won.

The many friends of the Park Club were attracted to the club-house last evening to witness the game between the home team and Newark Bay Boat Club. It was an excellent game, and plenty of excitement was furnished the spectators. An encouraging feature was the representation of the gentler sex, who cheered the Parks so well that they ought to have won. The score:

The Christmas Topics.

The Christmas number of Town Topics appears Saturday in particularly attractive guise, its handsome colored cover attracting the eye as readily as the excellence of the contents appeals to the mind of the reader. In its 48 pages of choicest reading matter are to be found stories and poems, tragic, sentimental and humorous, by the clever contemporary authors, including Bret Harte, Walter Besant, Bliss Carman, etc., as well as a series of ably-prepared reviews of the doings of the year 1894 in the realms of society, music, the drama, literature and the fine arts. There is also a goodly collection of the bright verses and witticisms that have earned the paper its high reputation, most of the latter being turned on the customs and traditions of the time. One may safely say that a glance through the pages of this number will be certain to add to one's enjoyment of the holiday period of mirth and rejoicing. Discussing the War.

The Temple Builders, a missionary society of the First Baptist Church, had charge of the meeting in that church last evening, and it proved to be an unusually interesting one. The subject was China and the Chinese and the war in Japan. Well-written papers were presented and read by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, G. H. Batchelor, Frank Jones, Norman Probasco, G. F. Brown, R. W. Barnes and John McLaughlin. The paper read by Dr. Yerkes treated of Japan and the recent war.

The attendance was much larger than usual, and all were thoroughly pleased with the programme.

THE TOWNSHIP TERRORS.

SHELLY, SHAY AND ADAMS CONVICTED OF ROBBERY.

The Jurors Find They Stole from Mrs. Furey, and They Will Be Sentenced Saturday.

On the reconvening of the Court of General Quarter Sessions yesterday before Judges McCormick, Hyer and Crane, Prosecutor Marsh at once proceeded to sum up for the State, in the case of Shelly, Shay and Adams, whose trial took place yesterday afternoon, on a charge of robbing Mrs. Elizabeth Furey of Fanwood of $11.

Mr. Marsh insisted that the evidence produced showed that the defendants were guilty of the offense charged, and that a verdict of guilty should be speedily returned. It was shown that Adams, Shelly and Shay were boon companions and members of a gang, which, for a long time, has caused general consternation in that neighborhood.

According to the evidence the defendants visited the home of Mrs. Furey. Shay assaulted the plaintiff while Adams and Shelly robbed her of $11, which she had concealed in the bosom of her dress. After this they took their departure, a day or two afterwards leaving for the West in hopes of escaping arrest and punishment. They afterward returned and surrendered themselves to County Detective Keron. The judge's charge to the jury was brief and impartial.

The jury at noon rendered a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment. The trio will be sentenced Saturday. The conviction was solely on Mrs. Furey's evidence, showing that the jury believed her implicitly.

EVEN FROM FAR-OFF JAPAN.

Leading Men of the World to Flock to Plainfield Soon.

Already some of the speakers have been secured for the State Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations to be held here February 14 to 17. Among them are Rev. Dr. Theodore T. Cuyler, the celebrated Brooklyn pastor; Rev. J. H. Elliott, the well-known evangelist and Bible student of Minneapolis; Elkanah T. Drake, of Newark; W. A. Venter, General Secretary of the Association in Trenton; John T. Swift, Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of Japan; and Robert T. Speer, of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church.

Plainfield has two resident members of the New Jersey State Committee, Wm. D. Murray and Curtis M. Thorpe.

Latest Novelties in Ladies' Materials.

Velvet is one of the most popular materials this Winter. It is extensively introduced as trimming to give an additional artistic effect to the toilette. Cloaks and wraps are made of this fabric. One of the newest variety is moire velvet, which is chosen for carriage cloaks and those worn over evening dresses. Even richly repped silks have the sleeve of velvet, both in lengthwise and crosswise repe. Then come in the new bright colors: ponceau red, turquoise blue, mauve, cerise and from light to orange yellow.

A novelty in woolen fabrics is woven in open squares in imitation of the perforated cloths and velvets. It is usually in large plaids, and the small open spaces are in the corners of the squares. The fabric is of solid color, so that it may be effectively used above a contrasting color, as pale tan with open squares showing pink silk beneath; dark blue with cerise showing through, or black over green lining. No fashion magazines can furnish better and more reliable information on this subject than the popular McDowell Journals, coming as they do from the Fashion centre of the world. In price they range as follows: Both "La Mode de Paris" and "Paris Album of Fashion", $3.50 each for a year's subscription, or 35 cents a copy; "The French Dressmaker", $3 per annum, or 30 cents a copy. As for "La Mode", a family paper of unusual merit, it costs only $1 50 a year, or 15 cents a copy. If you are unable to procure either of these journals from your newsdealer do not take any substitute from him, but apply by mail directly to Messrs. McDowell & Co., 4 West Fourteenth street, New York.

Merchants, Consider.

Well-bred people do not go where they are not invited.

How often do you invite the general public to your place of business?

DREW THINGS AND GUESSED.

Novel Features of the Hospitable Seventh-Day Gathering.

A supper and sociable was held in the church parlors of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church last evening under the auspices of the Women's Society for Christian Work. Refreshments, in the shape of coffee, cake and sandwiches, were served to all under the able direction of Mrs. VanSickle, and plenty of mental entertainment was provided in another room.

"An Evening with Holmes" was the title of the first part of the programme. A piano solo, perfectly rendered by Miss Elizabeth Titsworth, was followed by Hale's essay on the life of Holmes, read by Miss Myra Clark.

"The Chambered Nautilus" and "The Last Leaf", two of the ever-charming poems of Holmes, were read by Miss Ernestine Smith, and Miss Lulu Lewis entertained her audience with that famous poem "The Wonderful One-Horse Shay" and "Contentment".

These ended the first part of the programme, and for the last half an unique and very amusing game was played. Slips of paper were passed to some of those present with the name of some common animal on them. Then each was expected to illustrate his animal on the blackboard in a limited time, and the rest were to guess the name from the picture. This game caused much fun, and was heartily enjoyed by everyone.

Among those who showed their artistic powers were Dr. Lewis, who drew a wonderful cat, Frank Clawson, whose artistic dog caused great laughter, Mrs. J. Y. Miller, whose was a whale, J. A. Hubbard, elephant, Harold Tomlinson, monkey, W. M. Stillman, camel, J. D Spicer, toad, Mrs. Lewis, swan, J. M. Titsworth, whose sketch of a toad completely captivated his audience, Mrs. Gorton, an owl.

The programme was arranged by Miss Mabel Potter, and J. M. Titsworth announced the different parts of the programme.

There was a large attendance, and all thoroughly enjoyed this very successful sociable.

A Deal in Denver.

The always fascinating atmosphere of stock speculation forms the subject of Gilmer McKendree's strong story, "A Deal in Denver", which is the leading feature of the December number of that sprightly publication, "Tales from Town Topics". The picture of a high-class New York physician who neglects his patients and his practice to plunge into the maelstrom of Wall street is graphically drawn, and the story possesses other elements, both tragic and pathetic, that are sure to interest the reader from start to finish. The case of a murder so ingeniously contrived and skilfully executed as to utterly baffle the police is sufficiently thrilling to enchain the attention of the reader, even without the other strong elements that "A Deal in Denver" contains. "A Deal in Denver" is accompanied by a collection of short stories, sketches, poems and witticisms taken from the back numbers of Town Topics. The whole makes a bright volume, especially suited for an acceptable holiday gift. Town Topics Publishing Company, 208 Fifth avenue, New York city.

said: "Too much of a good thing is good for nothing", and, acting on this idea some are compelled to deny themselves the pleasure of eating buckwheat cakes as often as they would like, as buckwheat is very hearty. They need not go cakeless, however, for the new scientific blend of wheat, corn and rice flours, known as "Hecker's Self-Raising Old Homestead Flap-Jack Flour" makes cakes that delight everyone. Try it.

Munsey's Leads Everywhere.

A very significant advertisement Munsey's Magazine gives its readers in its December number. It compares the net sales of the progressive Munsey's with those of The Century, Harper's, Scribner's and The Cosmopolitan, and the figures certainly show into what popularity it is growing. This month's number is beautifully illustrated. Its most interesting article is one on Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, with pen-sketches and photographs.

New Bowling Club.

At the meeting of the C. Y. M. L. bowling team after the game last evening J. J. Lynch resigned as captain, and John Hibbits was elected to take his place.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTEBOOK.

The Grammar School held their regular Thursday morning singing lesson and commenced practicing the Christmas carols.

The Class of '96 held a class meeting this afternoon.

Mr. Travell will speak to the Kappa Delta Phi at the regular meeting tomorrow afternoon on our national currency, its present condition and its future.

The Kappa Delta Phi and a few of its friends will occupy their regular boxes at the last Ragan leeture Saturday evening. The boxes will be decorated with orange and white, the colors of the society.

The following subjects have been announced as subjects for the December essays of the Senior Class: Thoughts Suggested by a Study of More's Utopia; The Past and Future of College Football; Doctor Samuel Johnson and His Friends; King Alfred; The Literary Friendship of Addison and Steele; The Education of Abraham Lincoln. The members of the Astronomy class will write on subjects assigned by Mr. Allen. The Fourth class have the following list of subjects from which to choose their regular December essay: Farm Life in Winter, a New England Barn, An Old-fashioned Winter, A Wood Fire, An Old-fashioned Fire-place, A Husking Bee, Telling Stories by the Fire, Witchcraft, A Charming Old Maid, Amanacs, a Country Doctor, The Schoolmaster, Breaking the Roads, The Village Newspaper, A Kind Neighbor, Influence of a Woman, Description of a New England Kitchen. NINETY-FIVE.

RED MEN'S NOVELTY.

Lots of Amusement Afforded by Paugh-Caugh-Haugh-Sinque Tribe, No. 193.

The novelty entertainment given by the Red Men last evening was a decided success. A very large number was present to witness the "prize trail" for corn and venison, which was given in full Indian costume.

The members present were kept in constant roars of laughter by the amusing antics and comical sayings of the trailers. Humorous recitations, vocal and instrumental music played no small part in the success of the evening's entertainment.

The entertainers included Ely M. Odam, E. H. Neal, H. C. Runyon, C. M. Ulrich, A. C. Pope, Brother Fred. Bach, Brother Roberts, and John H. Carney. The prize was won by Charles Stephens. Arrangements were made to organize a Degree of Haymakers.

The tribe intend holding monthly socials, and will introduce original and novel features from time to time. The committee deserve great credit for the success which attended the first of this series of social Indian stags.

Iona Council.

At the regular meeting of Iona Council last evening the following officers were nominated for the ensuing term:

Prophetess—Mrs. Lighthauser.
Pocohontas—Mrs. Stiglitz.
Winona—Mrs. Reading.
Powhattan—Joe. E. Wyckoff
Chief of Records—Mrs. Canfield, Mrs. Holstein, Mrs. Cox.
Keeper of Wampum—Mrs. Allen.
Collector of Wampum—Mrs. J. Wm. Klein.

The anniversary committee reported that visitors from Rahway, Elizabeth and New Brunswick, as well as the two Plainfield tribes, had been invited. The affair which takes place Dec. 17 bids fair to prove a great success.

Two palefaces were adopted and three propositions were submitted last evening.

Protecting the Cemetery.

The trustees of the Presbyterian Cemetery on Chatham street, North Plainfield, are building a high board fence across the entire rear end of the property, the top of which contains a strip of barbed wire to prevent the colored people, who live adjoining, from climbing over and using the cemetery as a near cut to the city. This is a much needed improvement, and The Press sincerely hopes that the first person caught trespassing will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. It is high time that the cemetery should be protected and kept sacred.

Passed Them Along.

Three Swedish renegades from the army of the late lamented "Gen". Coxey approached Officer Cooney last evening and asked to be escorted to the station house and lodged for the night. A caucus of the financial resources of the party developed the fact that they had a joint capital of four cents. The officer sadly but firmly informed them that the city could not accommodate them at those figures.

—Jed Smalley opened his new meat market this morning. He says he intends selling only the best meats at low cash prices.

—David T. Kenney of 193 North avenue has the contract for the plumbing and hot-water heating of Andrew Wilson's new house on Mountain avenue, in which the celebrated "Perfect" water heater and "Perfect" range will be used.

NIPPED IN THE BUD.

Boisterous Italian Sewer Workers Quickly Subdued.

What might have been a free fight attended with serious results was stopped in the nick of time by the prompt interference of Officer Frederickson. A number of Italians in the employ of Cook & Co., the sewer contractors, angered by the fact that the "ghost" refused to walk when they wished it to, corraled their paymaster last night in front of Tier's candy store and a very lively dispute arose, which would have been highly entertaining to the student of the language and gesture of "Sunny Italy". Officer Frederickson dispersed the crowd with little difficulty.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Mrs. Albert Simmonds of Watchung avenue has just returned from a visit to her son in New Orleans.

The Misses Madge and Victoria Martin of New York have returned home after visiting Miss Gertrude Tier of Bank place.

Mr. and Mrs. James Blair of 147 East Fifth street are spending a two-weeks vacation with relatives in Newton, Sussex County.

James R. Shotwell of Albany, a brother of the late Freeman Shotwell, is visiting his nephew, Wm. H. Shotwell, on Emily street.

J. Hervey Doane and Walter Freeman will exhibit the pictures to be shown in connection with Dr. McAllister's lecture in Grace P. E. Church this evening.

The Razores, one of the oldest of Plainfield literary societies, better known as the Tuesday Morning Club, met this week with Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson of Ea. Grande avenue.

Miss Susan Higgins, professional trained nurse of Plainfield, has been engaged to take care of Abner Bartlett's mother, who is in a very precarious condition at the Hotel Waldorf, New York city.

Monte Scott and his manager, Clarence Teel, left for Philadelphia today to take part in the race meet at that place, which is held three days this week and all next week. Monte will give a good account of himself.

George Graves of Liberty street was pleasantly surprised at his home last evening by his school classemates. The surprise was complete in every respect, and the evening passed very quickly in games and singing, after which refreshments were served.

The marriage of Miss Lena Rockfellow, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Rockfellow of Orange, to David Valentine of New York, took place at the palatial home of the bride's parents this afternoon at 4. Miss Rockfellow is a niece of Plainfield's popular grocer, George W. Rockfellow.

The second of a series of "Poverty Luncheons" was given today by Miss Edith VanBoskerck. The novel feature of these functions, wich are given weekly by a small coterie of society rosebuds, is the fact that no luncheon shall exceed two dollars in cost, and the friendly rivalry by which each one tries to outvie all previous efforts has many interesting results from a culinary standpoint.

The outlook for the masquerade ball of Thursday, Dec. 27, in the Casino, is that it will be the greatest social success of the season. The committees are now announced as follows: Floor Committee—Lewis G. Timpson, A. D. Shepard, Jr., O. G. Waring, Harry V. Borden, Edward Van Buren, Fred W. Walz. Reception Committee—Howard O. Fleming, Marion S. Ackerman, William J. Boome, James T. Scott, Peter B. Matthews, Howard Huntington. The reception committee will be at the door, and all guests must momentarily unmask and pass their scrutiny.

Cards are out for a grand reception to be given by Mrs. Alexander Gilbert, assisted by her sister Mrs. Randolph, Saturday, December 15, from 3 to 6 p. m, at the beautiful residence 318 West Eighth street. Many out-of-town guests will be present, and the occasion will doubtless result in an ovation to Mayor Gilbert in honor of his recent election to the third term. His Honor's administration has commended itself to all, irrespective of party, and when The Daily Press made the exclusive announcement of his acceptance for the third time, it met with universal approval. Mrs. Gilbert announces Wednesdays "at home" for December 26 and January 2.

Anyone who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cents bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

A STOLEN UMBRELLA.

When Henry Carroll arrived at his office on the seventh floor he was much perturbed. He tugged violently at his new mustache and grumbled audibly as he marched up and down his room.

The gold letters on the door told the passers by that the occupant of this particular room was Henry Carroll, attorney and counsellor-at-law, and that he was a notary public.

Carroll had not been a lawyer long, for it was only three months ago that, on his twenty-fifth birthday, he had graduated from the law school with high honors. Almost immediately he engaged the office room, hung out his shingle and took his seat to wait for clients.

His trouble began when, one bright morning, as he raised the window which opened on the court, he saw a young woman engaged in a similar operation on the other side of the court.

She stood by the open window just long enough to allow him to see that she was very pretty, and then she turned away.

He went to his home that evening and told Dick Lyle, his roommate, that he had seen the prettiest girl on earth, and that life to him would be a dull and aching void until he knew more of the young women of the seventh floor opposite.

Lyle listened to the story of his friend with undisguised contempt, and when he got through assured Carroll that he knew the young woman in question quite well.

Her name was O'Shaughnessey and her mother was a washerwoman in Brooklyn.

Henry rose up in his wrath at this point, and called Lyle an idiot, and said that he was undoubtedly mistaken.

It was his intention to camp upon her trail on rainy days until he caught her without an umbrella, and then he would insist upon her taking his, and the acquaintance would be brought about "as easily," he had told Lyle, "as falling off a log."

This plan, however, failed because the young woman did not do her share toward it. She neglected to forget to bring her umbrella, and so Mr. Carroll's plan came to naught.

"Do you know what is the matter with me?" asked Carroll of Lyle one day as he came into the office.

"Were I an ordinary mortal," said Lyle, "I should answer no; but possessing the detective instinct which I have mentioned to you before, I should say that you were suffering from a disappointment which was caused by the thoughtfulness of a young lady, who shall be nameless. My boy, she brought her umbrella, and your plot fell through. Am I not right?"

"You are," answered Carroll, dejectedly. "How did you know she had her umbrella?"

"Why, I saw her, of course. Here I get out of bed at half past 7 and stand for one hour in City Hall Park to see you escort that girl from the Bridge to the office, and instead of that she comes over alone and with an umbrella which would make two of yours. I consider, sir, that I have been buncoed, badly buncoed.

"Now, then," he continued, "what is your next move to be?"

"Oh! I don't know what I shall do," replied Carroll in a discontented tone. "I might jump out of the window and I might go home and go to bed, but I don't care which it is."

"If you are determined," said Lyle, with a grin, "to do either one of the desperate things you have named, I should suggest the latter as the lesser of the two evils, but if you take my advice you'll stay right here and watch the girl go home. There may be a chance yet. 'There's a divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them though we may,'" and with this quotation Richard Lyle walked out and slammed the door, leaving Henry Carroll to his none too pleasant reflections.

At 5 o'clock Carroll stood at the Broadway entrance of the building and watched the men and women as they hurried along through the dismal rain. He was about to give up his watch for Miss Moore, when he saw her leave the elevator and walk toward him. Then he could hardly keep from shouting when he saw that she had no umbrella.

He was at her side in a moment and had offered his services as an escort, and she, after a moment's hesitation, had accepted, with many thanks, and the pair started toward the Bridge. It happened, very strangely, that Henry had been intending to go over to Brooklyn for some weeks, and he decided that to-night was the very one for the trip.

They did not talk much, but Henry was happy and did not care to talk. She told him, however, that her umbrella had been stolen that day, and also that she lived some blocks from the elevated station. Henry knew that he could not convince her that he was going in her direction, and so he gave her his umbrella, swore that he was only going one block from the bridge, and after escorting her to the train, left her and returned to New York on the next train as happy as if he had just been made a Justice of the Supreme Court.

The next day they met again.

She called at his office to return the umbrella and to repeat her thanks, and shortly after this Henry was a frequent visitor at Mrs. Moore's house and he was well liked by the widow and her other daughter.

Henry had accumulated three clients by the following May, but all of his cases were still undecided. He had money of his own, however, and so this did not bother him, and on one bright, spring morning he made up his mind to propose to Nellie that evening.

He made the proposal as they walked across the Bridge, and she didn't say anything about its being so sudden and about speaking to her mamma, but told him "Yes" without a moment's delay.

Henry, even in his happiness, cursed the Bridge for being such a crowded place and thus preventing him from doing the thing which always characterizes the successful termination of a love suit. The marriage occurred in June.

Henry and his best man, Dick Lyle, sat in the ante room waiting for the organist to give them their cue to enter, and the groom said:

"Dick, old man, you were right on that rainy November day when you quoted, 'There is a divinity that shapes our ends.'"

Dick did not answer, but after the ceremony, when the happy pair had said goodby and driven away to the Grand Central, he stood in the doorway and muttered.

"Well, this is the first time that I've been called a divinity. I stole her umbrella that he might meet her. I damaged my immortal soul. He got a bride by the theft and the umbrella is my reward. I've still got that and I'll hang on to it."

BEN BOLT.

Oh! don't you remember sweet Alice Ben Bolt,
Sweet Alice whose hair was so brown,
Who wept with delight when you gave her a smile
And trembled with fear at your frown?
In the old churchyard in the valley, Ben Bolt,
In a corner obscure and alone,
They have fitted a slab of the granite so gray
And sweet Alice lies under the stone.

Under the hickory tree, Ben Bolt,
Which stood at the foot of the hill,
Together we've lain in the noonday shade
And listened to Appleton's mill.
The mill wheel has fallen to pieces, Ben Bolt,
The rafters have tumbled in,
And a quiet that crawls round the walls as you gaze
Has followed the olden din.

And don't you remember the school, Ben Bolt,
With the master so cruel and grim,
And the shaded nook in the running brook,
Where the children went to swim?
Grass grows on the master's grave, Ben Bolt;
The spring of the brook is dry.
And of all the boys who were schoolmates then
There are only you and I.

There is change in the things I loved, Ben Bolt;
They have changed from the old to the new.
But I feel in the depths of my spirit the truth—
There never was change in you.
Twelve months, twenty, have passed, Ben Bolt,
Since first we were friends—yet I hail
Thy presence a blessing, thy presence a truth,
Ben Bolt of the salt sea gale.

—Thomas Dunn English.

SAVED BY A PET BEAR.

A Catamount Was Killing Berger When His Wife's Favorite Appeared.

The surveyors stood spellbound. They could not grasp the situations. The bear to all appearances was as savage as any in the mountains, and was covered with blood. One of the party finally broke the ice by shouting at the top of his voice and attracted the attention of both the man and the bear. The man signalled to the surveyors to come to him. The party crossed the stream and found that the man was Jacob Berger, and that he was severely wounded about the head and body. One arm was broken and his back was badly sprained. He could not rise. The bear in the meantime watched the strangers closely, but offered no objection, to their advances after being cautioned by Berger. After the surveyor had taken Berger to his home, to which they had been followed by the bear, he told his story:

Berger first explained that Davy, the bear, was perfectly domesticated and was his wife's particular pet. She had a peculiar fondness for mountain animals, and in a stockade near the cabin she has a sort of domestic menagerie. Davy has long been her favorite, and also that of her daughters. This is accounted for by the fact that the bear has acted as sentinel at the house and stood guard in the absence of the woodsman. He had never been very familiar with Berger himself, and how he happened to accompany him that morning could not be explained. Berger left home that morning to inspect some timber land. He had gone some distance into the woods when he noticed that the bear was following him. The bear kept a respectable distance in the rear and evinced no desire to cultivate terms of intimacy. In this way the pair pushed through the woods until the bank of the creek was reached. Berger stopped here for a moment, partly to find a safe place to ford the stream, and partly to view the timber. He was so engrossed that he did not hear or notice a large catamount creeping along the limb or a tree above his head. He was about to move away when suddenly the catamount leaped upon him. The animal struck Berger squarely between the shoulders, and knocked him violently to the ground. The teeth and the claws of the catamount tore his flesh; his arm was broken by the fall, and he was unable to offer any resistance. Just when he had made up his mind that he was done for, he heard a low grunt, the brush was swept aside, and old Davy came upon the scene. The bear leaped savagely upon the catamount and a terrible battle between the two beasts followed.

The cat was a large one, and fought viciously, and tore bruin badly in his efforts to release himself. It was without avail, however. Davy had suffered several severe scratches, and he was greatly aroused. He tore the cat into pieces, and chewed the carcass into fragments. He was still engaged tearing at the remains of the catamount when the surveyors came along.

ALLIGATORS AT HOME.

Clumsy on Land, but Able Adversaries in the Water.

A Florida correspondent of the Denver Republican says: If an alligator meets you on land he is at your mercy. If you meet him on the water the conditions are reversed. On land he is an awkward fellow. His flippers are not made for walking, and he gets along through perseverance and endurance. In moving on land he lifts his body up, but drags his tail on the ground, making a trail as though with a stick. An alligator's tail is his weapon of defence, and it is a good one. If the 'gator is an old one, from 10 to 16 feet, his tail will be from 5 to 8 feet. It is nearly as large as the body back of the hind legs and gradually tapering to a point. This he can bring around with such force as to break a man's legs. He will lie by the side of a lake, apparently asleep, but if a calf ventures too near the 'gator will switch around his tail and break the animal's legs and dine on veal at his pleasure.

One singular thing about an alligator's trailing on land is that no matter at what point of the compass the next lake is located, when he starts he takes the shortest cut; a surveyor could not make a more direct air line. One night my dog barked for two hours, and at times he was very ferocious. The next morning, on an investigation, I found the trail of a large alligator through my orange grove. He had stopped half a dozen times and had some sort of discussion with the dog. When he got to the front fence the boards were so close together he could not get through, so he climbed over, using his big tail as a sort of boost.

In April and May the males make a great noise, bellowing like a bull. In the latter part of May they make a nest, selecting a quiet place on the banks of a lake or river. It will be two or three feet long, built of sticks, grass and sand. The female lays from 26 to 32 eggs. They are as big around as a hen's egg and nearly twice as long. Boys hunt the eggs and sell them to the curio stores, where they are either hatched or blown out.

While the alligator is clumsy and awkward on land, he is very graceful and swift in the water. He is monarch of the inland waters. My house is about 200 feet from the lake and 20 feet above it. From my gallery with a field glass I can watch their every movement, and it is very interesting to see how gracefully they rise, sink, turn or swim at full speed after a trout.

I had a colored boy about 12 years old, what we call "yard boy." He did all kinds of chores. He would, at times go down to the boat house when there was not a sign of an alligator on the lake, and with a hoe splashed the water and bark like a dog. Presently two or three pairs of eyes would be seen just above the water. Their eyes are very prominent, sitting, or perhaps I should say jutting, out from their heads. As the boy barked and splashed the water they would come nearer and nearer, and show more of their bodies. When they got within fifteen or twenty feet, the boy would drop the hoe and run up hill, as though a tribe of Indians were after him. The negroes have an idea that an alligator prefers a black man to a white one, and they say that a 'gator will swim all around white men if there is a negro in the crowd The negroes look upon the 'gator as a natural enemy.

The alligator is not only a graceful swimmer, but he is a powerful and wicked assailant in the water. The greatest danger is from their capsizing the boat, when they will grasp a person by the log and sink immediately, leaving no escape from drowning. Within a radius of four miles from Keuka, Fla., there are forty-one lakes, and this vicinity has afforded rare sport for those who delight to get a crack at such game. They are pretty well thinned out now, and there are not so many making a business of hunting them for their hides. There was a time when a good-sized hide would fetch $10 to $14, but now they do not bring more than $1 and $2. But some hunters make good wages.

PRINCESS BISMARCK.

The Iron Chancellor Had Given Her the Credit of His Advancement in Life.

Princess Bismarck's maiden name was Johanna von Puttkammer. Her parents were stanch Conservatives and inveterate "pietists." As such they were strongly averse to her marrying the avowed representative of other opinions and forbade their daughter to accept his advances. But one night when the Puttkammers gave a party young Otto von Bismarck, though not invited, stalked in among the guests, linked arms with the not unwilling Johanna and announced that they were engaged. Her parents, stunned by this audacity, had not the presence of mind to deny the engagement on the spot. Afterwards they agreed to give their formal consent to the match rather than brave what would have been a public scandal involving their daughter.

Princess Bismarck never took a conspicuous part in German social life. She was eminently domestic, devoted to her home and children. She was tall and somewhat angular, and her hair in later years was snowy white. She was a fluent and rapid talker, with a large fund of anecdotes and reminiscences she was fond of relating.

Her most intimate friend was the Baroness Wilhelm de Rothschild. The two used to meet at Homburg every year.

The Princess had three children. Her only daughter married Count Rantzau. Her elder son, Herbert, married the Countess Marie Hoyos, of Vienna. The younger son, Wilhelm, Landrath at Hanover, strongly resembles his father.

No finer tribute was ever paid to woman than is contained in a letter written by Bismarck to his sister, several years after his marriage:

"I say to you, as I never tire of saying to all my friends, that you cannot imagine even a little bit what my wife has made of me. To her is due all the credit. In the midst of my most serious troubles she has always maintained the dignity of her position, and encouraged me where I know otherwise I should have faltered. She is ever the Princess, true and devoted. All I have to worry me are these trifling political affairs. The domestic concerns go on smoothly, and everything is so delightful in my home, that I feel I am the most fortunate of men."

Lodger—You had a terrible fight with your husband last night, Mrs. Pinchen. I must go; I can't stand the noise.

Landlady—You are a strange kind of man, Mr. Flatten; you said you wanted all the comforts of a home, and I'm sure you got 'em.—Boston Gazette.

DR. DOYLE'S creation of "Sherlock Holmes" has caused the greatest literary sensation since the publication of "David Copperfield" or "Vanity Fair."

On December 10 We Shall Begin

publication of a new and remarkable story by this well-known writer, entitled

THE MEDAL OF BRIGADIER GERARD

It deals with the

GREAT NAPOLEON

and the adventures of a gallant Hussar in his service. Dr. Doyle considers it

The Best Story He Has Ever Written.

In view of the revival of interest in the genius and career of Napoleon Bonaparte, this story is particularly timely. Our New York representative paid 12½c a word for this remarkable piece of fiction, as the subjoined receipt will show. We also publish herewith the first page of Dr. Doyle's manuscript.

The Medal Brigadier Gérard

The Duke of Tarentum a McDonald as his old comrades prefer to call him

McDonald was, as I could perceive, in no the richest of temper. His grim Scotch face was like one of those grotesque door knockers which one sees in the Faubourg St-Germain. We heard afterwards that the Emperor had said in jest that he would have sent him against Wellington at Toulouse in the South, but that he was afraid to trust him within sound of the pipes. Major Charpentier and I could plainly see that he was smouldering with anger.

"Brigadier Gérard of the Hussars" said he, with the air of the corporal with the recruit.

I bowed & saluted.

"Major Charpentier of the Horse Grenadiers"

My companion answered to his name.

"The Emperor has a mission for you." Without more ado he flung open the door and announced us.

I have seen Napoleon ten times on horseback to once on foot, and I think that he does wisely to show himself to his troops in this fashion, for he cuts a very good figure in the saddle. As we saw him now he was the shortest man out of six by a good handsbreadth, and yet I am no very big man myself, though I ride quite heavy enough for a Hussar. His evident ten that his body is too long for his Apply a particle of the Balm well up into the nostrils. After a moment draw a strong breath through the nose. Use three times a day, after meals preferred, and before retiring.

ELY'S CREAM BALM opens and cleanses the nasal passages, allays pain and inflammation, heals the sores, protects the membrane from colds, restores the senses of taste and smell. The Balm is quickly absorbed and gives relief at once. Price 50c at druggists or by mail. ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren street, New York.

CATARRH

DIDN'T PUSH IT OVER.

A Crank Resists Temptation at the Washington Monument.

Washington is the Mecca of cranks, and the monument seems to be their principal shrine. Even the White House is not so attractive to them as the great white shaft. It can be seen for miles around, and seems to attract cranks as a candle does moths. The watchmen have become accustomed to the gentry, and as long as they appear to be quiet and well disposed, usually deal gently with them, however wild their ideas. One man they tell of declared that the monument was built of human skulls and bones and persisted in pointing out the faces of friends in the stones; but perhaps the oddest specimen on record happened down there the other day.

When the watchman first observed him he was leaning heavily against the shaft, apparently pushing with all his might—at least he would push for awhile, and then he would walk around to the other side, apparently to see if there were any people there. The watchman watched this proceeding for awhile, and then accosted him:

"Beg pardon; you aren't going to push it over, are you?"

"I could if I wanted to," responded the man; then, with immense dignity, "My name is Samson."

"Oh, the strong man?" ventured the watchman, sizing up the man, who was about five feet five, and not apparently very muscular. "Let me see, you were down at Kernan's Theatre a few weeks ago, weren't you?"

"No, sir!" replied the man sternly. "I am the reincarnated Samson of Biblical times; the one who overthrew the Philistines, slaying thousands with the jaw bone of an ass, and afterward pulling down the pillars of the Temple. Why, it would be mere child's play for me to upset this puny monument."

"Well, I wouldn't do it if I were you," expostulated the watchman, mildly. "You see, this is in memory of Washington; probably you have never heard of him, as he was a little after your time; but we moderns think a good deal of him. Then it cost the government a good deal of money and took a good many years to build this monument, and a good many people would consider it unkind of you to destroy it. Take me, for instance: I am hired to watch it, and, of course, you would throw me out of a job. Besides, you might hurt some one near."

"No; I was very careful to look on the other side first," said the man. "But perhaps you think I can't do it? Now, you just look up and see me shake it."

The watchman was agreeable. Now, it is a fact that when one stands directly at the base of the monument it appears to be toppling over. This is, of course, an optical illusion, caused by the clouds moving overhead; but it impressed the crank with his power.

"Did you see me shake it?" he inquired, triumphantly.

"Yes," responded the watchman solemnly, "but I wouldn't do so any more. You might weaken the foundations, even if you didn't push it over. Besides, here comes a crowd of people, and not knowing who you are, they might laugh at you. Then you would have to push it over to prove it to them."

"That's so," said the crank, and, bidding the watchman "Good-day," he departed, and has not been seen about the monument since.—Washington Post.

Down to a Business Basis.

He stepped out of a doorway on Monroe avenue the other night and confronted a pedestrian to say:

"Time is money and I will detain you but a moment."

"That's right—what is it?" was the query.

"You have no money for such as me?"

"No, sir—no, sir!"

"Because I would make for the nearest saloon and spend it for drink?"

"That's it, exactly."

"But, on the other hand, you are a humane man and would not see me want for food?"

"I might be willing to fill you up at a restaurant, but I'm not buying beer for tramps."

"Certainly not. We now come to business. To fill me up at the cheapest restaurant in this town would cost you from $6 to $8, as I have eaten nothing for a week. On the other hand, you can buy me off for fifteen cents in cash. Sentiment does not enter into the question. You either pay out at least six dollars or only fifteen cents. It is for you to say which. Owing to the hard times you"—

"Here's your fifteen," said the pedestrian as he jingled two coins in his palm.

"Thanks—that's business."

"But as you have consumed thirty cents' worth of my valuable time time I'll replace it in my pocket and send you a bill for the balance! Straight business—no sentiment—good night!"

And the tramp watched him out of sight and heaved a long sigh and whispered to himself:

"That's a horse on me, and I guess I'd better look around for a saddle or harness!"—Detroit Free Press.

Mrs. Conklin of East Front street is entertaining her son Mr. Mulford, a western banker.

A delightful musical was given by Miss Schipper yesterday in honor of guests from Germany.

The Lenox Social Club will give a reception and dance next Tuesday evening at "The Van", Scotch Plains.

Miss M. L Austin of 5 Grove street has been called by telegram to Ceres, New York, by the death of her father.

Among the newcomers at Netherwood who did not vote, may be mentioned a son to Mr. and Mrs Jacob Vandeventer of Woodlawn avenue.

A bright eight-pound girl arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Ross of Carleton avenue Wednesday morning. Mother and daughter are doing well.

C. P. Ralli, manager for the large house of Brown Bros & Co., of Wall street, New York, has been confined to his residence on Belvidere avenue, but is recovering.

The funeral took place this afternoon at the home of Miss C. E. Clarke; Cornwall, Conn., of Miss Olive L. Rogers, formerly of this city, who died Tuesday.

Much sympathy is expressed for Mr. and Mrs. James Walsh of 903 West Fourth street in the loss by diphtheria of their only son, Thomas, in his sixth year.

A very enjoyable occasion was the regular weekly meeting of the Netherwood Bowling Club last night. Tea was served by the ladies during the evening.

Thomas Taylor, a New York advertising manager, has bought Paul Ackerly's share of the Elizabeth Herald, and is seeking to induce Mr. Ackerly to continue in charge as editor.

The Ladies Class in Theosophy met this afternoon with Mrs. Draper of Putnam avenue. This class will hold regular weekly meetings throughout the Winter. After an interesting discussion tea was served by the president, Mrs. Draper.

The editorial in the New York Evening Post of Dec. 5, on the death of ex-Governor Abbett, is a most unwarranted attack on the career of a distinguished citizen of New Jersey. Like all, he may have had his faults, but the citizens of this State will ever remember him with gratitude.

The Coroner's Inquest.

The inquest and hearing in the case of Michael Evans who was shot Thanksgiving morning by P. Kane and James Walsh was called this afternoon at 2 by Coroner Geo. Horing. Prosecutor Fred March was present for the State. Witnesses Drs. Mravlag, E. W. Hedges, Maxwell S. Simpson and Policeman McCue all testified that the decedent met his death by a bullet wound coming from a gun.

Charge of Forgery.

Yesterday Wm. E Conway was charged before Judge Moore with forgery in having drawn money from the pay car of the Central Railroad and signed the name of Edward Lynch for it.

Conway was arrested at Plainfield today by Constable Mattox and after examination before Judge Moore was committed to await the action of the Grand Jury.

A Polish Jew to Tell Us.

Hermann Warszawiak, a Polish Jew, will give an interesting account of the grand work which is being accomplished at the Jewish Mission, on Rivington street, New York, at the Crescent Avenue Church next Sunday evening. This man was driven from his home and family in Warsaw because he embraced the Christian religion.

—R. Henri Strange, "America's greatest colored elocutionist and tragedian", will appear in Bethel Chapel the evening of Thursday, Dec. 27, at 8.

Greeting New Members.

The Ladies Christian Work Society of the Trinity Reformed Church have adopted an exceedingly novel plan for promoting sociability among its members. Every three months succeeding the Communion service the women of the society extend to all new members a cordial invitation to meet the society in the church parlors, where a social hour is enjoyed.

The plan was inaugurated yesterday afternoon. It was a decided success, and is worthy of emulation by other church societies.

REMARKABLE CURES

Of Recent Date.

A Statement from Ex-Mayor John Corson, Esq., of Clinton, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

I acknowledge with the utmost pleasure the wonderful cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in my case.

I had been a sufferer from piles, which gave me constant pain and distress, during twenty long years, attended with frequent loss of blood and with great and painful protrusion of the pile tumors and rectum whenever my bowels moved.

I tried constantly to get relief from my sufferings, but to no purpose until Mr. Bryan, a friend of mine, who had been cured by Dr. Lighthill of the same trouble, recommended him to me, and he effected a complete and radical cure in my case also, and earned my lifelong gratitude.

JOHN CORSON.

THE CASE OF MR PETER G. EYCK, OF BISSELL, HUNTERDON CO., N. J.

Dr. Lighthill Effects a Complete Cure Where Ten Physicians Had Failed.

TO THE SICK, SUFFERING AND AFFLICTED:

For many years past I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. Every movement of the bowels was attended with loss of blood and with intense pain which lasted for hours and sometimes all day. My condition was aggravated by a prolapse of the rectum, which greatly increased my suffering and sometimes gave me most agonizing pains.

So great was my distress and so bad my condition that I sold my farm, not being able to work it any longer. At one time the protruding pile tumors became so highly inflamed and swollen that they could not be replaced, and I had to go to bed, applying hot poultices for three months before I could get relief.

I had been under the treatment of ten different physicians, some of New York City, Easton, Washington and elsewhere, without any benefit whatever, and had given up my case as hopeless when, luckily for me, I heard of Dr. Lighthill's skill and success in such cases, and went to him for treatment, with the happy result that he effected a radical and permanent cure in less than four weeks's time; and I am glad to say that the entire treatment gave me neither pain nor distress.

I consider my cure perfectly wonderful, and so do all my friends and neighbors. I am confident that there is no case of piles which Dr. Lighthill cannot cure.

DOANE & EDSALL.

BY THE WAY.

—A horse belonging to Nicholas Van-Winkle of Coddington avenue died this morning.

—It is untrue that James E. Martine is a justice of the peace. There was no vacancy to fill.

—The Two Vans say a lot in their big ad today, but their store says more, and that's where you want to go.

—A. E. Dupell is canvassing among the business men for an advertising novelty for which he guarantees large circulation.

—One of the most delightful entertainments ever seen in Plainfield will be the Brownies presented by the W. C. T. U. in Music Hall next week.

—Mrs. Martha Avery of Boston will lecture in Plainfield on Socialism some time this month. She is considered one of the ablest speakers the party has.

—The Plainfield team who will go to Elizabeth next Monday evening is made up as follows: Watters, Wilbur, Meeker, Doane, Petrie, VanAlstyne, Emmons, Barnes, Wilson, VanEmburgh. They will take the 6:04 train.

—At the meeting of Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., tomorrow evening the Grand Lodge officers will be elected. The district meeting of the Knights to nominate a district deputy will be held in this city Dec. 14.

—The new sidewalk ordinance is already bearing good fruit, and a much needed stone walk is being laid on the south side of Park avenue, between Second street and North avenue. The curb is also being re-set to the street lines. To Street Commissioner Meeker is due the credit of enforcing the ordinance.

Mrs. Mary A. Tupper has been released, at Wilton, Me., from the custody of extreme Female Weakness, which kept her a prisoner in bed unable to walk. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made the change. She advises all sick women to take this valuable medicine, and be thankful for their lives, as she is for hers. It costs only a dollar at any druggists, and the result is worth millions.

A Four-Course Dinner to be Carried in Your Vest Pocket.

Wonderful things are going to be done by the development of synthetic chemistry between now and the year 2,000, if Prof. Berthelot, the French savant, is to be believed. The food and drink producing animals and vegetables will not then be encouraged to exist for human life, but food and drink will be manufactured direct and to order, by man himself, and served in highly concentrated tablets, vest-pocket size.

A person may then carry about him two or three table d'hote dinners complete, from Blue Point oysters or Little Neck clams to crackers, cheese, coffee and tobacco, and with all his wine and Cognac included.

This change will be brought about, the Boston Globe reports, by the remarkable progress being made in compounding food and drink from their constituent elements—carbon, hydrogen, oxygen and nitrogen. It has advanced so far already that the preparation of beefsteak from its elements is assured, and nicotine, the essential principle of tobacco, has been produced from coal tar.

Life, indeed, would not be worth the living should the Professor have his way. The ready made tablets of food and drink would be horribly alike to the eye, the taste and the understanding; eating and drinking would be purely mechanical; good fellowship and wit and imagination would depart, and existence would be utterly material and dull.

FIRST NAVAL ENGAGEMENT.

Under Commission of Gen. Washington the Lee Took British Guns.

The first battle in which a regularly commissioned American war vessel took part was fought 119 years ago. It was the action between the Massachusetts State cruiser Lee and the British armed transport Nancy.

In the war of the Revolution some of the States fitted out cruisers at their own expense, and, though entirely distinct from the war vessels commissioned by the Continental Congress, they frequently performed service of great benefit to all the colonies.

The Lee had a commission from Gen. Washington permitting her to cruise in the vicinity of Boston for the purpose of intercepting supplies for the British army. One of the greatest difficulties that confronted the American army at the outbreak of the Revolution was the lack of arms, ammunition and clothing.

With a view of securing these indispensable supplies, Washington commissioned a number of cruisers and sent them out for the express purpose of capturing some of the many British transports filled with warlike stores that were expected to arrive on the American coast about that time.

The Lee, commanded by John Manly, was the first to make one of these captures. On November 29, 1775, she captured, after a brief struggle, the British transport Nancy and carried her into Cape Ann Roads.

The Nancy was loaded with just the supplies the American army most needed at that time. In her cargo were 2,000 muskets and bayonets, besides 8,000 fuses, 31 tons of musket shot, 3,000 round shot for 12-pounders, a 13-inch mortar, two 6 pounders, several barrels of powder, and fifty carcasses, or great frames for combustibles, to set buildings on fire.

For this valuable capture Manly received a captain's commission in the regular navy and the new 32 gun frigate Hancock was placed under his command.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. V. The prompt relief it affords is alone worth many times the cost, 50 cents. Its continued use will effect a permanent cure. For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Doll carriages, rocking horses, etc., at Harper's.

—A gas main is being laid through Manning avenue.

—The heaviest frost of the season was observed this morning.

—What to give the man for Christmas is told today in Hatter Hallock's ad.

—The inspection of Major Anderson Post, No. 109, will take place this evening.

—A substantial stone flagging is being laid on Park avenue at the corner of Second street.

—The old electric light pole at the corner of Central avenue and Second street was replaced by a new one yesterday.

—The subject of Rev. Cornelius Schenck's discourse Sunday morning will be "Another View of the Hidden Treasure".

—The Board of Governors of the Crescent Wheelmen were unable to hold a meeting last evening on account of the game on the Trade alleys.

—The Plainfield Bowling Club will go to Elizabeth next Monday evening and bowl the Arthur Kulls. A large delegation of friends will accompany them.

—Work was commenced this morning to erect large scales in front of C. Frank French's feed store on Somerset street. Seaman Williams is doing the mason work.

—Putnam & DeGraw of 210 West Front street are offering an elegant line of useful and ornamental goods for the holiday trade. They are all new goods. Go and see for yourself.

—Borough Street Commissioner Stout is extending Myrtle avenue from Giraud avenue to the Cadmus property, for George White. Owing to some difficulty he is unable to get through the Cadmus property to West End avenue.

—In Justice Newcorn's Court the case of Bissert against Bowman, which came up yesterday, judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for amount claimed and costs. The case of Hannigan against Townsend was adjourned for one week.

—Nelson Brothers of New York have rented the store at the corner of Somerset street and Manning avenue, and will open a first-class grocery, the first of next week. G. H. VanNest, who is well-known in North Plainfield and Plainfield, will be their efficient manager.

One Boy Stabs Another.

Robert Clark, a boy living at Elizabethport, was nearly murdered last night at the hands of another boy, Thomas Sternberg, 18 years of age, of 105 Bond street.

THE PARIS AGROUND.

She Struck in the Dense Fog Off Her Southampton Docks.

Southampton, Dec. 6.—The American liner, Paris, Capt. Watkins, ran aground off the company's dock during a dense fog last night.

It is expected that she will be floated at high tide today.

There was great excitement on board, the fog being so dense that the passengers had no idea of the proximity to the shore. Capt. Watkins reassured them and they were all safely landed in tenders, together with the mails.

The Paris sailed from New York Nov. 28 and reached this port at 9:05 last night.

FINE "MILLER" LAMPS with Exquisite Shades for Gifts.

ARE BEAUTIFUL, USEFUL, APPROPRIATE.

Cut out and save this card.

The "Miller" is made in all styles of Banquet, Boudoir, Piano, Vase, Study, Bracket, Hall, Library, Chandelier, so everybody can find designs to please in our assortment, which is the best in New York. Our "Miller" Oil Heater will warm a room. We also make Brass Tables with Onyx Tops, The "Rochester" lamp, etc. Established 1844. We make only the best.

The "Miller" gives bright, steady light, flame does not "climb" to smoke ceiling; lighted without removing chimney; a simple turn of a button (which a child can do safely), adjusts the wick so the flame is always even (a great improvement over the old way of pulling up the wick); to put in new wick is no trouble. An Indicator tells when lamp is full of oil; the draft is so controlled that chimneys are not broken by the flame. THE "MILLER" A WONDERFUL LAMP; EVERYBODY SHOULD BUY IT. If your dealer will not supply come to us. Catalogues sent on application.

THEIR RULES IN DANGER

Senatorial Courtesy Is Attacked by Mr. Vest.

The Gentleman from Missouri Apologizes for Past Conduct and Delivers a Strong Speech Against the Reading of Novels and Other Literature in the Senate During Debates.

Washington, Dec. 6.—The important feature of the senate proceedings was Mr. Vest's (dem., Mo.) speech on a cloture resolution, by the use of which the majority in the senate can force a vote at any time. In the house railroads and timber lands were under consideration, and important action was taken. In his address Mr. Vest confessed to a change of opinion on the subject of unlimited debate, and appealed to the senate to establish a cloture rule if it wished to avoid public contempt, and to keep abreast of the aggressive and progressive principles of the American people.

His allusions to the tariff fight of last session, to parliamentary blackmailing by some senators, and to the waste of time by others in reading or having read census reports, last years almanacs, and biographical sketches, were very pointed and somewhat amusing.

As his time limit expired while he was still speaking his resolution went to the calendar; but he gave notice that he would move to take it from the calendar and have it adopted.

The resolution offered by Mr. Lodge (rep., Mass.), calling on the president for information as to the surrender by the United States consul at Shanghai of two Japanese citizens, and as to their subsequent torture and death at the hands of the Chinese authorities, was again discussed.

Mr. Morgan (dem., Ala.), chairman of the committee on foreign relations, opposed the motion on the ground that any interference of the United States would prejudice this country with either China or Japan. Mr. Hoar (rep., Mass.) suggested that the resolution contain the clause "if not incompatible with public interest." The resolution was then referred to the committee on foreign relations.

The resolution introduced by Senator Peffer (pop., Kan.), asking the president to show cause why United States troops were needed in Chicago during the strike last July, was referred to the judiciary committee. Mr. Vest then made another speech on the waste of time in the senate. He said:

"The present rules facilitate parliamentary blackmailing. Under the rules now senators are able to stop the progress of the measure unless their amendments are acceded to, or a compromise effected which meets their views. I assert it as a fact that amendments have been put upon important measures in this body under the threat that otherwise debate would be indefinite or almost interminable.

"I use the word "debate" but it is not debate. Census reports, last year's almanacs, biographical sketches, and books of travel can be brought into this chamber; and when one senator is physically exhausted, another senator steps forward and takes his place.

"This is called freedom of speech and liberty of debate in the senate of the United States. The result is that under this parliamentary compulsion amendments are put on bills that never should be put on them.

"Is that proper legislation? Is that the dignified and orderly conduct of the business of the senate of which we have heard so much for so many years?

"But again my serious objection to these rules is the fact that they have brought the senate into disrepute and have destroyed its influence. The impression prevails throughout the United States that this is an obstructive body and that it is an obstacle to the aggressive and progressive spirit of our civilization.

"If a half dozen or a dozen senators are able, by delay and procrastination in debate, to defeat the will of the majority and to keep a measure lagging in this hall until public patience is exhausted and the measure together with this body, is brought into general opprobrium, that is a defeat of the fundamental doctrine on which our institutions rest."

Mr. Chandler (rep., N. H.) made Mr. Vest's speech and resolution the text of some satirical remarks as to the conversion wrought by means of the recent election.

Mr. Vest then gave notice that he would this afternoon take the resolution from the calendar and compel the senate to vote upon it. The senate then adjourned.

The first bill called up for consideration in the house was one reported from the committee on public lands, not to permit the free use of timber on the public land and to revoke all permits heretofore granted in certain states, for that purpose. After considerable discussion the bill was passed without a division.

The bill provides that hereafter it shall not be lawful to issue or grant permission to any person, firm, or corporation to cut any timber on the public lands of the United States free of charge.

A resolution was introduced calling on Secretary Carlisle for the names of the soldiers of the late war dismissed from the treasury or its bureaus since March 4, 1893, together with the cause of removal in each case.

Mr. English (dem., N. J.) asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill appropriating $250,000 for additional ground for the custom house at Newark, N. J. The motion was opposed and lost.

Just before the house adjourned, Mr. W. L. Wilson (dem., Va.), chairman of the committee on ways and means, asked unanimous consent for immediate consideration of a resolution discharging the committee of the whole house on the state of the union from further consideration of the president's message, and referring the various paragraphs of that document to the appropriate committees having in charge the subject matters discussed.

He stated that it was the usual formal resolution, and it was not expected that it would meet with any objection.

But ex-Speaker Grow, congressman-at-large from Pennsylvania, interposed an inquiry to the speaker. "If this resolution is agreed to," he asked, "will it remove from the committee of the whole the president's message as a subject of discussion?"

Upon being informed by Speaker Crisp that it would, he objected and the matter went over.

Several unimportant measures were then discussed and the house adjourned.

WILL GO TO ENGLAND.

Pennsy's Crew Is To Take Part in the Henley Regatta.

Philadelphia, Dec. 6.—Dr. J. William White, of the University of Pennsylvania is authority for the statement that the university will send an eight-oarded crew to England next spring to compete in the Henley regatta, which is scheduled for July 9 and 11.

As Cornell's best crew will take part in the regatta and as neither Harvard nor Yale will agree to meet Pennsylvania on the water, the university is forced to take such a step.

The rowing authorities at the institution will not consent to meet any crew but the best that Cornell can put out, so the management are confronted with the question of sending a crew to England to meet Cornell and the English crews or dropping rowing entirely at the university for a year.

MASONS IN SESSION.

The Pennsylvania Grand Lodge Meets in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Dec. 6.—The Pennsylvania Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, began its quarterly communication in the Masonic temple. Right Worthy Grand Master Michael Arnold, of Philadelphia, presided.

The attendance of members and representatives is the largest in the history of the jurisdiction and the total vote cast for grand officers, who were elected will probably reach 7,000.

Deputy Grand Master M. H. Henderson, of Sharon, was chosen to succeed Grand Master Arnold. A number of amendments to the book of law will be considered, the most important being one doing away with the election of trustees of the grand lodge charity fund, and trustees of the Girard bequest and making them appointive by the grand master.

SHOT FOR HIS "BABY."

Jack Howerton Kills a Man While a Crowd Jeers His Negro Bride.

Paris, Ky., Dec. 6.—An exciting scene occurred in this city at the Kentucky Central railroad passenger depot, in front of an incoming train.

While Jack Howerton and his negro bride were being guyed by a crowd of bystanders, Howerton pulled a revolver and fired at the leader of the crowd, Gene Huston. The bullet struck an innocent spectator killing him.

Howerton was arrested and jailed. He is closely related to prominent Kentucky families. He was married in Cincinnati, O., yesterday to his "Baby," as he fondly calls her.

Marriage between blacks and whites is forbidden by Kentucky statutes.

WILL OWN THEIR MILLS.

Glass Workers Plan a Great Co-operative Factory Scheme.

Pittsburg, Dec. 6.—The striking flint glass workers, associated with south side business men, propose to erect or purchase table-ware glass plants, which will be operated against the United States Glass company.

A capital stock of from $200,000 to $250,000 is being subscribed, of which amount $50,000 will be taken from the treasury of the American Flint Glass Workers' union.

The factories will be operated on the co-operative plan. Negotiations are in progress for the purchase of the McKee plant on the south side, as well as several other sites.

MAY ALL GET OUT.

New York Police Will Probably Not Wait for the Legislature.

New York, Dec. 6.—A list, which probably indicates the early retirement of Superintendent Byrnes, Inspectors McLaughlin, Williams, Conlin and McAvoy, twenty-eight captains, ninety sergeants, fifteen detective sergeants and three hundred and seventy-four patrolmen, has been prepared at police headquarters.

They are eligible to retirement Jan. 1, and will probably not wait to be legislated out of office, as they expect, by the republican legislature, when the report of the Lexow committee is made.

Saunderson Tries Suicide.

Dublin, Dec. 6.—It is reported that Col. Saunderson has visited his son, Reginald Saunderson, who, on the charge of murdering the Kensington unfortunate, is confined in jail at Armagh awaiting his transfer to London, where he will have to answer a charge of murder. It is said that the prisoner has tried to commit suicide since his arrest, but the jail officials refuse to give any information. It is stated that Saunderson has confessed to the governor of the prison that he committed the murder.

Killed His Baby Brother.

Hazleton, Pa., Dec. 6.—Three-year-old Willie Lebbo was shot dead by his six-year-old brother, Edward, at their home in Honeybrook. The children were playing with a bulldog revolver, when it accidentally exploded in the elder boy's hands.

Pays a Big Dividend.

New York, Dec. 6.—The sugar trust has declared a quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent. on preferred stock, and 3 per cent. on common stock, making 12 per cent. a year on the latter.

Will Make Anti-Toxine.

New York, Dec. 6.—The New York city health board has begun the manufacture of anti-toxine, the new diphtheria remedy. It will be supplied to physicians all over the country.

Suicide at Twenty Years.

Troy, N. Y., Dec. 6.—Twenty year old William Woods of Crown Point has committed suicide by taking Paris green.

Dunraven Has Challenged.

London, Dec. 6.—Lord Dunraven has officially announced that he has challenged for the America's cup.

WITH WORDS AND POMP

Emperor William Opened the New Reichstag.

In His Speech He Declared That the Weak Must Be Protected, and Made Demands for More Stringent Laws. Advocates a Fresh Tax on Tobacco. Laid a Corner Stone.

Berlin, Dec. 6.—The new Reichstag building was opened with imposing ceremonies. Religious services were held, according to the rites of the Catholic church in the Hedwig cathedral, and under Protestant forms in the castle chapel.

The attendants upon these services repaired to the Rittersaal of the castle where the emperor entered. Chancellor von Hohenlohe handed to the kaiser the speech from the throne opening the session of the reichstag, which was read by his majesty. The emperor said:

"In the name of my high confederates I welcome you to the beginning of your constitutional work, which you transfer to a place which the activity of ten years has completed as a monument to our home industry. May God's blessing rest upon the house and upon the empire's welfare and grandeur, toward which aim all should faithfully strive.

"I consider it to be the noblest task of the state to protect the weaker classes of society and to aid them to higher economic and moral developments.

"This duty becomes more pressing as the struggle for existence of the several groups of the nation becomes more serious, and the harder we should strive to emolliate and smooth away the antagonism to economic and social growth and to preserve and increase the feeling of content and the feeling of belonging together.

"The experience gathered since the introduction of the justiciary laws discloses faults in those laws, and you will receive a bill amending these defects, providing, among other things for the payment of damages to persons who have been convicted of and sentenced for offences of which they were innocent.

"The financial condition of the single states and of the empire has shifted seriously for the states. While the states for ten years received the surpluses from the empire, now the empire is forced to demand from the states money to cover its deficit. This oppressive condition must be remedied by the opening of new sources of revenue; therefore, you will receive a bill providing for a tax on tobacco.

"With a view of soon affecting such reforms it will be necessary for the federate states to relinquish last year's claim to the surplus in the empire's payments to the states. I hope you are in full accord with the bill."

After the ceremony in the Rittersaal, at which the empress and the young German princes were also present, the emperor and empress drove to the new Reichstag building. The empress' carriage was escorted by the Queen Victoria Dragoons, and that of the emperor by the Garde de Corps.

The Koenigplatz was decorated with flowers, and the temporary gangway at the west main entrance, by which the imperial party arrived, was carpeted in purple. On reaching the cupola room of the grand lobby the emperor and empress found awaiting them the high personages who had been invited to the ceremonies.

The Bavarian minister handed a trowel to the emperor and spoke of the emperor's powerful protection, briefly, expressing the hope that under wisdom and strength the union would prevail. The president of the Bundesrath then handed a mallet to the emperor, remarking that it was the same one used by the Emperor William I ten years ago. Continuing, he said:

"May the kaiser's firm faith, wide foresight and high thought be with whatever is debated and decided in this house. A great time has brought what many generations have dreamed and hoped for. The empire's new Rathhaus is a sign of Germany united which may God guard."

The emperor, wearing the uniform of the Garde de Corps, with covered head, struck the stone three times with the hammer, saying "Pro Gloria et Patria." The empress, who was dressed in mourning and wore the insignia of the Black Eagle, performed the same action and was followed by the princes.

After three cheers for the emperor had been called for by the Bavarian minister and given with a will, the formal assemblage was dispersed.

Will Attack Apia.

Apia, Samoa, Dec. 6.—The rebels have been very active recently and have just given noticee of their intention to attack Apia. The Australian cruiser Wallaroo is here.

PAIN BANISHED SLEEP.

A RHEUMATIC TELLS A WONDERFUL STORY.

Less Than Half a Bottle of Munyon's New Remedy Restored Him to Health.

James Buckley, 215 Washington street, Newark, N. J., says: "I have been suffering from rheumatism for a number of years. The pains were exceedingly severe and I could not sleep nights. The remedies I obtained did me little or no good, nor did the doctors whom I consulted. This had gone on, each recurring attack being more painful and prolonged than the previous one. I could not get relief until I commenced taking Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. Less than one-half a bottle drove all the rheumatism out of my system and I am as well and strong as I ever was in my life. I consider the remedy a wonderful one and take pleasure in recommending it."

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure is guaranteed to cure rheumatism in any part of the body. Acute or muscular rheumatism cured in from one to five days. It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides, back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. It is guaranteed to promptly cure lameness, stiff and swollen joints, stiff back and all pains in the hips and loins. Chronic rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago or pain in the back are speedily cured.

Munyon's Homoeopathic Home Remedy Co. of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25c. a bottle.

DROWNED IN THE SOUND

Schooner Simpson Sunk by the Steamer Dorian.

Three Seamen, Who Were Knocked Overboard by a Falling Mast, Went Down Off Eaton's Neck—The Survivors Sent to the Marine Hospital at New London.

New London, Conn., Dec. 6.—The British steamer Dorian, Captain Henry Bermpohl, bound from New York to Halifax, ran into and sunk instantly the schooner Clara E. Simpson, of Portsmouth, Captain John C. Hontvet, off Eaton's Neck. Three men were drowned and the others were all seriously injured.

The Simpson was bound from Maine, for New York, with paving stone. She came through from Dutch Island harbor and proceeded up the sound as far as Eaton's Neck, where the wind died out. After sundown the wind increased and Captain Hontvet made sail. The Simpson went out by Eaton's Neck when a big steamer showed up, approaching at a speed of about 12 knots. Captain Hontvet saw a collision was inevitable and yelled to those of the crew near enough to hear him, "take to the fore rigging."

This course he and two sailors pursued and their lives were saved; but the mate, steward and one sailor had not time to obey the command and went down with the vessel.

The Dorian crashed into the schooner nearly amidships on the starboard side, striking her a glancing blow that opened up the side of the vessel and sent the mizzenmast upon deck and into the water. Captain Hontvet says: "The steamer's short jibboom struck the mizzenmast of the Simpson, preventing the steamer from hitting the schooner with full force. Else it would have sent the steamer to the bottom also, as the shock would have been like hitting a rock.

"When the crash came everything seemed to be going to pieces and in two minutes the Simpson had gone down. I ran across the deck to the rigging, but had only got to the shear pole when the deck of the vessel was under water. I climbed up the rigging as did two sailors, Thomas Laurell and Alfred Hingrem, to the foretopmast, where we clung to the banks, the vessel settling in the water all the time until finally we were afloat."

A terrific sea was running and the water was exceedingly rough so the men could not hold on and finally let go, clinging to drift stuff to keep afloat. Captain Hontvet's brother Hans, of Portsmouth, Steward W. Williams of East Boston, and John Aikland, of Bridgeport, made an effort to get the boat from the davits, but before they could do it, they went down with the vessel or were struck by the falling mizzenmast and were drowned. Their bodies were seen after the vessels collided.

Mate Hontvet leaves a wife and seven children; Steward Williams, a wife and one child in East Boston, and Aikland was single.

As soon as possible after the vessels struck, the Dorian was stopped and a boat put out to pick up the crew of the Simpson. The vessel waited about the scene of the collision nearly four hours before she started to this port.

Captain Hontvet, the first of the survivors picked up, had been carried a mile from where the vessel went down. His head and ear were badly cut when his body was thrown against the sharp bow of the Dorian. Laurell was next found clinging to pieces of timber held under his arms, grem, the last man picked up, mangren, the last man picked up, managed to keep on top of the water by means of a box on one side and a cabin door on the other. He was not rescued for an hour after his companions and was almost exhausted.

All the men were burdened by their clothing and heavy boots while in the water. On board the Dorian all possible was done for the survivors. Captain Bermphol, was at the wheel when the collision occurred. The pilot had been below and just came up before the vessels came together. The captain said he saw the lights on the schooner but supposed he could cross her bow all right, but she was too near and the disaster came.

The men suffered a great deal from the intense cold after being chilled through in the water and stimulants were necessary to revive them. The Dorian brought them into this port.

The Simpson's topmasts were above the surface of the water a couple of fathoms and her topsails were floating on the water. This is the second disaster of a similar nature since Saturday night when propeller Pequot collided with schooner Julia A. Warr.

AGAINST OUR PRODUCTS.

Germany Finding Excuses To Keep Out Everything from Here.

Washington, Dec. 6.—Indications of a determined purpose on the part of Germany, openly or by indirection, to interpose obstacles in the way of the importation of American products into Germany seem to multiply, so long as the discriminating duty against German beet sugar imposed by the existing new tariff law is maintained. First on a pretext of the transmission of Texas fever (proved to be impossible) the importation of live cattle from the United States into Germany was prohibited. Next restrictions were placed upon American canned goods. Then a commission was appointed to investigate whether American cotton could not be supplanted by other kinds for German manufactures. Now the department of state has been notified through its consular representative at Bremen of a proposed change in the German customs tariff by which the duty on cotton seed oil will be increased 250 per cent. over present rates. Among the many additions to existing duties this seems to be the most important and it is said to meet the wishes not only of the protectionist oil manufacturers of Germany, but of the agrarians as well. The present duty on American cotton seed oil is four marks (one dollar) and it is to be raised to ten marks. If, however, the imported cotton seed oil is to be used for soap it may be officially drugged until unfit for food when it is to be admitted at the rate of 85 cents.

SHOT BY A THIEF.

Two Coachmen Wounded in Boston's Back Bay District.

Boston, Dec. 6.—John T. Lorden and James Slamin, coachmen, were shot and seriously wounded by a thief of whom they were in pursuit, on Newbury street in one of the most fashionable parts of the back bay district. Slamin is not expected to recover.

The thief and a companion suddenly jumped out of a passage way on Berkeley street, near Commonwealth avenue, and accosted Mrs. LeBrun, of Marlboro street, who was passing, and one of them snatched her handbag. Then both fled. Mrs. LeBrun called to Lorden and Slamin who happened to be near, and they started in pursuit, and were shot down.

The thief then made his escape, his companion having already disappeared. The wounded men were taken to the Massachusetts general hospital, and the police were at once put at work on the case.

LABOR LEADERS DEPART.

John Burns, Samuel Gompers and Others Off for Denver.

New York, Dec. 6.—Fifteen delegates to the convention of the American Federation of Labor, which will begin its proceedings in Denver next Monday, started for that city, leaving by the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western railroad.

Among them were John Burns, David Holmes and J. William Benn, delegates from the British Trades Union congress; Samuel Gompers, president, and Christopher Evans, secretary, of the federation; Henry Lloyd, of the Central Labor union, of Boston; T. F. Tracy, of Hartford, and Henry Weissman, secretary of the International Baker's union.

Mr. Gompers predicts that the convention will mark the beginning of a great revival of interest and action among trades unions.

THROWN TO HIS DEATH.

Escaro Yumbo Is Killed by a Train at Elizabeth.

Elizabeth, N. J., Dec. 6.—A fatal railroad accident occurred on the Central railroad at the Dark lane crossing, a mile and a half west of here, when train 34 from Somerville, east, plunged into a wagon driven by Escaro Yumbo, a junkman of Lombardi street, Newark. By the driver's side sat his 12 year old son.

The driver was thrown more than a hundred feet and was killed, as was also the horse. The boy escaped unhurt. Fragments of the wagon were thrown on top of the train and startled the passengers.

When the train was brought to a standstill the boy was found kneeling over the body of his father trying to awaken him.

MILLIONS ARE MISSING.

Hints of a Great Theft in the New York Comptroller's Office.

New York, Dec. 6.—Application was made before Justice Andrews in the supreme court, by the citizens' committee for an order directing an examination into the affairs of the comptroller's office, and particularly into the official actions of Deputy Comptroller Richard A. Storrs.

It is charged that bonds to the value of millions of dollars, are missing. Justice Andrews took the petition and turned it over to Justice Patterson, who will give it his attention without delay.

Turkish Officials' Reply to the Armenian Stories.

Cables Received from Constantinople Rewritten at the Turkish Legation in Washington and Sent Out To Deny the Truth of the Outrages—Denied by Lord Kimberly.

Washington, Dec. 6.—The Turkish legation has received the report prepared by the Pashas who "investigated" the slaughter of two or three thousand Armenians in the Sassoun district. It is the document which the Armenians have protested against, and claim was prepared simply to shield the men guilty of the massacre. The British consul and Lord Kimberly's commissioner have also denied the truth of the "report."

The document is as follows:

"Towards the end of July last, and under the instigation of an Armenian, named Hampartzoum, the men of the Armenian villages, near Moush formed separate bands and, armed with guns, daggers, hatchets and other instruments, attacked the tribe of Delikan, killed a few men of that tribe and afterwards fell on the tribes of Bekirah and Badikan.

"These bands burned alive Hadji, nephew of Emmar Agha, one of the chiefs of the Bekirah tribe, and not only outraged Musulmen women of the village of Kulli-Guzat, but also put them to death in an atrocious manner. Men were also tortured in a more ferocious way. Not satisfied with all these lawless and criminal proceedings, the same bands burned also a few villages inhabited by Mussulmans.

"Thanks, however, to the measures taken by the lawful authorities, the bands in question were dispersed and the insurgent chief Hampartzoum, as well as the priest Mighirditich of Kizil-Killisse and other guilty persons, were arrested and brought before justice.

"The statement often published in some of the European newspapers to the effect that regular troops fired on defenceless men and women, is utterly untrue. No individual carrying no arms was killed. Twenty insurgents, having surrendered, were treated with all possible consideration and after their depositions before the legal authorities of Moush, were taken, they were left free. It was these 20 insurgents who indicated the place where the chief, Hampartzoum and his accomplices were hiding themselves.

"The above facts show that among the insurgents only 20 surrendered and that, with the exception of the brigands who broke in revolt, no one else was ill-treated."

The "report" as given above, was received by cable from Constantinople and written out at the legation here.

EASTERN LEAGUE CHANGES.

Yonkers Dropped and Applications Received at Its Meeting.

New York, Dec. 6.—At the meeting of the Eastern League baseball magnates here the Yonkers club was dropped from the organization. There being one, with a possibility of two more vacancies, applications were received from Scranton, Rochester, Paterson, Bridgeport, Reading, Fall River and Toronto.

It is expected that a representative from Newark, N. J., will be present at the next meeting to argue in favor of that city being admitted to the league.

There is a disposition on the part of the league to purchase the Erie club and allow the club to retire. If this move is carried through it will make three vacancies, the other two being Scranton and Yonkers.

The championship for last season was awarded to Providence, the other clubs standing in the order named: Syracuse, Erie, Springfield, Buffalo, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, and Yonkers.

STRANGLED HER CHILD.

Mrs. Ellen Binz Deliberately Murders Her Baby While Insane.

Belle Center, Pa., Dec. 6.—Mrs. Ellen Binz, the wife of W. F. Binz, a local dry goods merchant, while temporarily insane, killed her fifteen months old baby this morning by strangling it.

She would have killed her other child, a girl of four years, had not its cries been heard by a man living next door, who rescued the girl.

Mrs. Binz some time ago sustained a severe injury to her head, which is thought to have caused derangement.

Orders for New Engines.

Hartford, Conn., Dec. 6.—The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad company has placed an order with the Rhode Island Locomotive works for twenty-five new locomotives, to cost $250,000, the largest order ever placed by the company,

Mrs. Barry Burned to Death.

Nyack, N. Y., Dec. 6.—Mrs. John Barry, a well-known woman of Haverstraw, was burned to death by the explosion of a lamp in her room. She ran all in flames into the street and fell unconscious to the sidewalk, dying soon after.

New Jersey Poultry Association.

Trenton, N. J., Dec. 6.—The State Poultry association of New Jersey has elected the following officers: President, A. A. Parker, of Jersey City; secretary, C. W. Johnson, of Cranford, and treasurer, C. T. Haines, of Crosswicks.

Scarlet Fever Epidemic.

Flemington, N. J., Dec. 6.—Scarlet fever is epidemic at High Bridge. Fifteen children have died from the disease in a few days. All schools are closed.

. . . THE . . .

RED BADGE OF COURAGE.

An Episode of the American Civil War.

BY STEPHEN CRANE.

[Copyright, 1894, by the Author.]

CHAPTER XII.

The rifle was lowered to a position of caution and his loud friend came slowly forward. He peered into the youth's face. "That you, Flem?"

"Yes, it's me."

"Well, well, Flem, ol' boy," said the loud one, "by ginger, I'm glad t' see yeh. I give yeh up fer a goner. I thought yeh was dead sure enough." There was husky emotion in his voice.

The youth found that now he could barely stand upon his feet. There was a sudden sinking of his forces. He thought he must hasten to produce his tale to protect him from the missiles already at the lips of his redoubtable comrade. So staggering before him he began: "Yes, yes. I've—I've had an awful time. I've been all over. 'Way over on th' right. Ter'ble fightin' over there. I had an awful time. I got separated from th' reg'ment. Over on th' right, I got shot. In th' head. I never see sech fightin'."

The loud private had stepped forward quickly. "What? Got shot? Why didn't yeh say so at first. Poor ol' boy."

Another figure at that moment loomed in the gloom. They could see it was the corporal. "Who yeh talkin' to, Wilson?" he demanded. His voice was anger-toned. "Who yeh talkin' to? You're the derndest sentinel—why—hello, Flem, you here? Why, I thought you was dead four hours ago. Great Jerusalem! they keep turnin' up every ten minutes or so."

"Over on th' right. I got separated"—began the youth with considerable glibness.

But his loud friend interrupted hastily. "Yes, an' he got shot in the head an' he's in a fix an' we must see to him right away." He rested his rifle in the hollow of his left arm and put his right around the youth's shoulder.

"Gee! it must hurt like thunder," he said.

The youth leaned heavily upon his friend. "Yes, it hurts—hurts a good deal," he replied. There was a faltering in his voice.

"Oh!" said the corporal. He linked his arm in the youth's and drew him forward. "Come on, Flem, I'll take keer a' yeh."

As they went on together, the loud private called out after them: "Put 'im to sleep in my blanket, Simpson. An'—hold on a minnit—here's my canteen. It's full of coffee."

The youth's senses were so deadened that his friend's voice sounded from afar and he could scarcely feel the pressure of the corporal's arm. He submitted passively to the latter's directing strength. His head was in the old manner hanging forward upon his breast. His knees wobbled.

The corporal led him into the glare of the fire. "Now, Flem," he said, "let's have look at yer ol' head."

The youth sat, obediently, and the corporal, laying down his rifle, began to fumble in the bushy hair of his comrade. He was obliged to turn the other's head so that the full flush of the firelight would beam upon it. He puckered his mouth with a critical air. He drew back his lips and whistled through his teeth when his fingers came in contact with the splashed blood and the rare wound.

"Ah, here we are," he said. He awkwardly made further investigations. "Jest as I thought," he added, presently. "Yeh've been grazed by a ball."

The corporal went away. The youth remained on the ground like a parcel. He stared with a vacant look into the fire.

After a time, he aroused, for some part, and the things about him began to take form. He saw that the ground in the deep shadows was cluttered with men, sprawling in every conceivable posture. Glancing narrowly in the more distant darkness, he caught occasional glimpses of visages that loomed pallid and ghostly, lit with a phosphorescent glow. These faces expressed in their lines the deep stupor of the tired soldiers. They made them appear like men drunk with wine. This bit of forest might have appeared to an ethereal wanderer as a scene of the result of some frightful debauch.

"YEH'VE BEEN GRAZED BY A BALL."

The fire crackled musically. From it swelled light smoke. Overhead the foliage moved softly. The leaves with their faces turned toward the blaze, were colored shifting hues of silver, often edged with red. Far off to the right, through a window in the forest, could be seen a handful of stars lying, like glittering pebbles, on the black level of the night.

The youth sat in a forlorn heap until his friend, the loud young soldier, came swinging two canteens by their light strings. "Well, now, Fleming, ol' boy," said the latter, "we'll have yeh fixed up in just about a minnit."

He had the bustling ways of an amateur nurse. He fussed around the fire and stirred the sticks to brilliant exertions. He made his patient drink largely from the canteen that contained the coffee. It was to the youth a delicious draught. He tilted his head afar back and held the canteen long to his lips. The cool mixture went caressingly down his blistered throat. Having finished, he sighed with comfortable delight.

The loud young soldier watched his comrade with an air of satisfaction. He later produced an extensive handkerchief from his pocket. He folded it into a manner of bandage and soused water from the other canteen upon the middle of it. This crude arrangement he bound over the youth's head, tying the ends in a queer knot at the back of the neck.

"There," he said, moving off and surveying the deed, "yeh look like the devil, but I bet yeh feel better."

The youth looked at his friend with grateful eyes. Upon his aching and swelling head the cool cloth was like a tender woman's hand.

"Well, come now," continued his friend, "come on. I must put yeh t' bed an' see that yeh get a good night's rest."

The other got carefully erect and the loud young soldier led him among the sleeping forms lying in groups and rows. Presently he stopped and picked up his blankets. He spread the rubber one upon the ground and placed the woolen one about the youth's shoulders.

"There now," he said, "lie down an' git some sleep."

The youth with his manner of doglike obedience got carefully down like a crone stooping. He stretched out with a murmur of relief and comfort. The ground felt like the softest couch.

An exquisite drowsiness spread through him. The warm comfort of the blanket enveloped him and made a gentle languor. His head fell forward on his crooked arm and his weighted lids went down softly over his eyes. Hearing a splatter of musketry from the distance, he wondered indifferently if those men ever slept. He gave a long sigh, snuggled down into his blanket and in a moment was like his comrades.

CHAPTER XIII.

When the youth awoke, it seemed to him that he had been asleep for a thousand years and he felt sure that he opened his eyes upon an unexpected world. Gray mists were slowly shifting before the first efforts of the sunrays. An impending splendor could be seen in the eastern sky. An icy dew had chilled his face and immediately upon arousing he curled further down into his blanket. He stared for awhile at the leaves overhead, moving in a heraldic wind of the day.

The distance was splintering and blaring with the voices of fighting. There was in the sound an expression of a deadly persistency as if it had not begun and was not to cease.

About him were the rows and groups of men that he had dimly seen the previous night. They were getting a last draught of sleep before awakening. The gaunt, careworn faces and dusty figures were made plain by this quaint light at the dawning, but it dressed the skin of the men in corpse-like hues and made the tangled limbs appear pulseless and dead.

He heard the noise of a fire crackling briskly in the cold air, and, turning his head, he saw the loud soldier pottering busily about a small blaze. A few other figures moved in the fog, and he heard the hard cracking of ax blows.

Suddenly there was a hollow rumble of drums. A distant bugle sang faintly. Similar sounds, varying in strength, came from near and far over the forest. The bugles called to each other like brazen gamecocks. The near thunder of the regimental drums rolled.

The body of men in the woods rustled. There was a general uplifting of heads. A murmuring of voices broke upon the air. In it there was much bass of grumbling oaths. Strange gods were addressed in condemnation of the early hours necessary to correct war. An officer's peremptory tenor rang out and quickened the stiffened movement of the men. The tangled limbs unraveled. The corpse-hued faces were hidden behind fists that twisted slowly in the eye-sockets.

The youth sat up and gave vent to an enormous yawn. "Thunder!" he remarked, petulantly. He rubbed his eyes, and then putting up his hand felt carefully of the bandage over his wound. His friend, perceiving him to be awake, came from the fire. "Well, Flem, ol' man, how do yeh feel this mornin'," he demanded.

The youth yawned again. Then he puckered his mouth to a bitter pucker. His head in truth felt precisely like a melon, and there was an unpleasant sensation at his stomach.

"Oh, Lord, I feel pretty bad," he said.

At the fireside, the loud young soldier watched over his comrade's wants with tenderness and care. He was very busy marshaling the little black vagabonds of tin-cups and pouring into them the steaming, iron-colored mixture from a small and sooty tin-pail. He had some fresh meat which he roasted hurriedly upon a stick. He sat down then and contemplated the youth's appetite with glee.

"Th' reg'ment lost over half th' men yesterday," he remarked, eventually: "I thought a course they was all dead, but laws, they keep a-comin' back last night until it seems, after all, we didn't lose but a few. They'd been scattered all over, wanderin' around in the woods, fightin' with other reg'ments an' everything. Jest like you done."

A sputtering of musketry was always to be heard. Later, the cannon had entered the dispute. In the fog-filled air, their voices made a thudding sound.

The youth's regiment was marched to relieve a command that had lain long in some damp trenches. The men took positions behind a curving line of rifle-pits that had been turned up, like a large furrow, along the line of woods. Before them was a level stretch, peopled with short, deformed stumps. From the woods beyond came the dull popping of the skirmishers and pickets, firing in the fog. From the right came the noise of a terrific fracas.

The men cuddled behind the small embankment and sat in easy attitudes awaiting their turn. Many had their backs to the firing.

The youth leaned his breast against the brown dirt and peered over at the woods and up and down the line. Curtains of trees interfered with his ways of vision. He could see the low line of trenches but for a short distance. A few idle flags were perched on the dirt-hills. Behind them were rows of dark bodies with a few heads sticking curiously over the top.

Always the noise of skirmishers came from the woods on the front and left, and the din on the right had grown to frightful proportions. The guns were roaring without an instant's pause for breath. It seemed that the cannon had come from all parts and were engaged in a stupendous wrangle. It became almost impossible to make a sentence heard. Among the men in the rifle pits, rumors again flew like birds. However, they were now, for the most part, croaking creatures who flapped their wings drearily near to the ground and refused to rise on any wings of hope. The men's faces grew doleful from the interpreting of many omens. Tales of hesitation and uncertainty on the part of those high in place, and responsibility, came to their ears. Stories of disaster were borne in to their minds with many proofs. This din of musketry on the right, growing like a released genie of sound, expressed and emphasized the army's plight.

Before the gray mists had been totally obliterated by the sunrays, the regiment was marching in a spread column that was retiring carefully through the woods. The disordered, hurrying lines of the enemy could sometimes be seen down through the groves and little fields. They were yelling, shrill and exultant.

The youth's friend had a geographical illusion concerning a stream, and he obtained permission to go for some water. Immediately canteens were showered upon him. "Fill mine, will yeh?" "Bring me some, too." "And me, too." He departed, ladened. The youth went with his friend. Upon their return they looked over their own troops, and saw mixed masses slowly getting into regular form. The sunlight made twinkling points of the bright steel. To the rear there was a glimpse of a distant roadway as it curved over a slope. It was crowded with retreating infantry. From all the interwoven forest arose the smoke and bluster of the battle. The air was always occupied by a blaring.

Near where they stood, shells were flip-flopping and hooting. Occasional bullets buzzed in the air and spanged into tree-trunks. Wounded men and other stragglers were slinking through the woods.

Looking down an aisle of the grove, the youth and his companion saw a jangling general and his staff almost ride upon a wounded man who was crawling on his hands and knees. The general reined strongly at his charger's opened and foamy mouth and guided it with dexterous horsemanship past the man. The latter scrambled in wild and torturing haste. His strength evidently failed him as he reached a place of safety. One of his arms suddenly weakened, and he fell, sliding over upon his back. He lay stretched out, breathing gently.

A moment later, the small, creaking cavalcade was directly in front of the two soldiers. Another officer, riding with the skillful abandon of a cowboy, galloped his horse to a position directly before the general. The two unnoticed foot soldiers made a little show of going on, but they lingered in the desire to overhear the conversation. Perhaps, they thought, some great inner historical things would be said.

The general, who the boys knew as the commander of the division, looked at the officer and spoke coolly, as if he were criticising his clothes. "The enemy's formin' over there for another charge," he said. "It'll be directed against Winterside, an' I'm afraid they'll break through there unless we work like thunder to stop them."

Then he began to talk rapidly and in a lower tone. He frequently illustrated his words with a pointing finger. The two infantrymen could hear nothing until finally he asked: "What troops can you spare?"

The officer who rode like a cowboy reflected for an instant. "Well," he said, "I had to order in the Twelfth to help th' Seventy-sixth an' I haven't really got any. Troops are scarce with me. But there's the Three Hundred and Fourth. They fight like a lot of mule drivers. I can spare them best of any."

The youth and his friend exchanged glances of astonishment.

The general spoke sharply. "Get 'em ready then. I'll watch developments from here and send you word when to start them. It'll happen in five minutes."

As the other officer tossed his fingers toward his cap and, wheeling his horse, started away, the general called out to him in a sober voice: "I don't believe many of your mule drivers will get back."

The other shouted something in reply. He smiled.

With scared faces, the youth and his companion hurried back to the line.

As they approached, the young lieutenant, who commanded the company, perceived them and swelled with wrath. "Fleming—Wilson—how long does it take yeh t' git water, anyhow—where yeh been—"

But his oration ceased as he saw their eyes which were large with great tales. "We're goin' to charge," cried the youth's friend, hastening with his news.

"Charge?" said the lieutenant. "Charge? Well, b'Gawd." Over his countenance there went a boastful smile. "Charge? Well, b'Gawd."

A little group of soldiers surrounded the two youths. "Are we, sure 'nough? Well, I'll be derned. Charge? What fer? What at? Wilson, you're lyin'."

"CHARGE? CHARGE?"

"I hope to die," said the youth, pitching his tones to the key of angry remonstrance. "Sure as shooting, I tell you." And his friend spoke in reinforcement. "Not by a blame sight, he ain't lyin'. We heard 'em talkin'."

They caught sight of two mounted figures a short distance from them. One was the colonel of the regiment and the other was the officer who had received orders from the commander of the division. They were gesticulating at each other. The youth, pointing at them, interpreted the scene.

The men settled back, then, in reposeful attitudes with airs of having accepted the matter. And they mused upon it, with a hundred varieties of expression. It was an engrossing thing to think about. Many tightened their belts carefully and hitched at their trousers.

A moment later, the officers began to bustle among the men, pushing them into a more compact mass and into a better alignment. They chased those that straggled and fumed at a few men who seemed to show by their attitudes that they had decided to remain at that spot.

Presently the regiment seemed to draw itself up and heave a deep breath. None of the men's faces were mirrors of large thoughts. The soldiers were bended and stooped like springers before a signal. Many pairs of glinting eyes peered from the grimy faces toward the curtains of the deeper woods. They seemed to be engaged in deep calculation of time and distance.

They were surrounded by the noises of the monstrous altercation between the two armies. The world was fully interested in other matters. Apparently, the regiment had its small affair to itself.

The youth, turning, shot a quick, inquiring glance at his friend. It was as if he had been stunned. The latter returned to him the same manner of look. They were the only ones who possessed an inner knowledge. "Mule-drivers—don't believe many will get back." It was an ironical secret. Still, they saw no hesitation in each other's faces and they nodded a mute and unprotesting assent when a shaggy man near them said in a meek voice: "We'll git swallered."

THE DAILY PRESS

ESTABLISHED MAY 10, 1887. PLAINFIELD, N. J., FRIDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1894. TWO CENTS A COPY. $5 A YEAR.

A NEW POSTOFFICE.

Proposition to Change Its Location.

BABCOCK BUILDING THE SITE.

Postmaster Hetfield's Plan to Transform the Two Stores Now Vacant into One Big Office with Special Facilities.

Plans are in progress for a great change in the local postoffice, and there is every prospect of removal from the present quarters to the Babcock Building.

It is proposed to tear out the partition separating the two stores now vacant, between Van Emburgh's and Edsall's. This will give a frontage of about 45 feet, and a depth varying from 80 to 100 feet.

Plans are under consideration by the Government and the Yale Lock Company to fit the new office with entirely new fixtures, making it one of the handsomest and most convenient postoffices in the country, thoroughly heated, lighted and ventilated.

Among the innovations in the lobby will be a raised add carpeted platform with brass railing and curtains for a ladies reception room.

Postmaster Hetfield purposes giving Plainfield public the best service that such greatly improved quarters can provide.

Postmaster Hetfield has secured two stamp stations for Plainfield—one will be located at Guttridge's store, Netherwood, and the other at Young's shoe store, opposite the Grant Avenue station. The outfit includes a handsome pair of scales for weighing letters and packages, and all denominations of postage stamps.

The package boxes for Netherwood and North Avenue stations have arrived and will be placed in position by the postmaster at once.

What to Take.

Exhaustion frequently means starvation. It is quite true that a person may consume a great deal of food and yet starve. The food that is not assimilated is worse than no food, for it irritates and clogs without nourishing. There is no harder task in the world than to rebuild a broken-down stomach—a stomach that has been crammed year after year with stuff it could not convert into a vital principle. I do wish that my friends who write me so much about their stomach troubles would try Bovinine carefully and conscientiously for a few months. I wish they would throw away their nasty, life-destroying drugs, and decline to admit any indigestible stuff into their stomachs. Bovinine is a preparation adapted to inflamed and exhausted conditions. It is pure raw food, made from the best meat, and is certainly unmedicated. It is palatable, is digested without an effort, and in consequence is perfectly assimilated. Try it, my friends, and then write how you feel. ELEANOR KIRK.

Grace Church Men's Association Lectures.

Rev. Dr. McAllister greatly delighted the audience that assembled in Grace Chapel, last night, to hear his lecture on "Windsor Castle". It abounded in historical incidents of great interest, clustered around the very beautiful stereopticon views, which were thrown upon the screen in a masterly way by Messrs Freeman, Stevens and Doane of the Plainfield Camera Club. From the lecture and pictures everyone must have gone away with a clear comprehension of the Castle, its apartments, the chapels, parks and environs, almost as vivid as if he had been there and seen them with his own eyes.

The second lecture, Thursday, the 13th inst, will be by Jacob M. Clark, on "The Pyramid and Its Relation to Modern Scientific Thought."

Slight Fire on Second Street.

The alarm from Box 46, corner of Second and Liberty streets, at 5:10 p. m. yesterday, was for a blaze yesterday in Mrs. Kane's house on Second street, near Plainfield avenue. Some clothing in an open bureau drawer caught fire from an over-heated stove near by, and before it was discovered the flames had burned through the bureau and started in on the wainscoating of the room. Chemical extinguishers proved sufficient for the occasion and no pipes were laid.

The damage caused was slight.

As this was the first time Box 46 has been rung in, many people were entirely at sea as to the location of the fire.

Anyone who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cents bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. BODY-BUILDING.

GREAT WORK TO BE DONE FOR PLAINFIELD YOUNG MEN.

Instructor MacPhie of the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium and His Special Ability for Developing Physique.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors held in the Y. M. C. A. parlor last evening a cordial welcome was given to D. A. MacPhie, who is to be the physical director of the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium.

Mr. MacPhie in speaking of the physical department said in effect: The time is past in the history of the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium when it is viewed as a place to train pugilists and prize fighters.

The objections made against gymnasiums as conducted under the old systems of using heavy weights and practicing tried work were, from physicians, that the work was too heavy; and from parents, that it was too dangerous; but the "Roberts system" of practical floor-work has stood the test for the past 25 years, and is adapted to the needs of all for a higher physical manhood as a basis for mental and moral excellence.

Parents and physicians and all who have the welfare of the young men at heart can be assured of constant, careful and intelligent instruction and supervision for all who come into this department for rational body-building gymnastics, for no heavy dangerous tried work is to be taught, but every exercise contained in a series of class exercises is to be "safe, short, easy, beneficial and pleasing". It will be the aim of the physical director to give a thorough physical education to the members in order that they may be able to exercise intelligently, which is so necessary to keep up the muscular tone and vigorous bodily health which will help them to do better whatever work in life they may be called upon to perform.

Upon joining the Y. M. C. A. each member, who enters the gymnasium, receives a thorough physical examination by the Physical Director, and special are exercises presented according to his particular needs.

The first thing to ascertain is a person's weak points physically, and by special exercises equalize the whole development.

The next step will be to apply a wide variety of exercises in order to develop the whole muscular system harmoniously.

Members, after examination, are assigned to their special class work as their needs indicate.

Mr. Mac Phie then spoke briefly of instances of those who had been helped physically by a systematic and judicious use of gymnastic exercise; particularly he spoke of the case of a young man, who had a hereditary disposition to lung trouble, who by careful, judicious exercise was restored to vigorous health, having gained 17 pounds in weight during the six months attendance upon gymnasium classes.

AN ART RECEPTION.

The Work of Mrs. Roe and Pupils Delights a Critical Audience.

From 3 to 9 yesterday afternoon the rooms thrown open to the exhibit of china painting by Mrs. Albert S. Roe, 826 First place, were crowded with pupils and friends.

The work displayed was truly artistic, the dainty designs of violets and sweet-pea blossoms on the finest of china satisfying the eye of the most critical and fastidious. Vases, plates of almost every size and shape, on which were the gorgeous Catharine Mermet roses, a large jardiniere with a design of the same flower, a very useful and dainty toilet set with indefinite roses, and many other equally pretty pieces, were the work of Mrs. Roe; also some very exquisite designs in gold on glass, done with pen and brush.

Among the many pieces of different pupils, mention might be made of a vase of indefinite red and yellow roses, the work of Miss Beatrice Craig, of which she justly might be proud; also bonbon dish and bouilion cup. Mrs. Edward Love's tete-a-tete tea set was very much admired; also the work of Miss Page, Mrs. Wm. Broadway, Miss M. Langdon, and Miss MacManus of Westfield.

Mrs. Kerr and Mrs. S. P. Craig assisted Mrs. Roe, Mrs. Craig presiding at a tea table from which Russian tea and wafers were served by Miss Craig and Miss Langdon.

—Miantonomoh Tribe, No. 118, I. O. R. M., will work the adoption on two pale faces this evening, and under the good of the order an excellent programme will be given followed with refreshments.

Mr. Ira P. Wetmore, a prominent real estate agent of San Angelo, Texas, has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in his family for several years as occasion required, and always with perfect success. He says: "I find it a perfect cure for our baby when troubled with colic or dysentery. I now feel that my outfit is not complete without a bottle of this Remedy at home or on a trip away from home. THE BOYS RELEASED.

Could Not Be Held for Killing Michael Evans.

CORONER'S JURY FINDS A VERDICT.

It is That Evans Came to His Death by a Bullet Wound from Persons Unknown, and that Walsh and Kane Were Shooting in the Neighborhood When Evans Was Found.

Coroner George Horning of Elizabeth, who conducted the inquest over the body of Michael Evans yesterday, called Dr. Mravlag of Elizabeth as first witness.

The physician had made the autopsy, and he was asked to tell the jury what he knew about the case. He said that on Monday last he went to Muhlenberg Hospital to make a post mortem examination, and in doing so found a small circular, but irregular opening over the left forehead, and upon removal of the scalp it was found that the wound had penetrated into the brain, and its course was left to right, upward and downward, and was caused by a 22 calibre ball which had entered the cerebellum. This was the only abnormal condition of the body, and paralysis of the brain was caused by the gun shot wound. He also found small pieces of lead in the track of the wound.

Dr. Maxwell S. Simpson stated that he was stopped on the street Thanksgiving morning and asked to go to the house of Evans. He found the man lying in his room in an unconscious state and in such an apparent condition that he advised his being taken to the hospital at once, which was done. The medical staff was called in consultation. This was about 11 in the morning, and to his knowledge Evans did not regain consciousness.

Dr. E. W. Hedges said that he was called to see the man Thanksgiving Day, but on account of another case was unable to reach the hospital before 1:30. He found the man unconscious, and suffering from a shock, and found that Evans could not stand an operation. The next day the hospital staff met, and he, thinking that blood might be clogged, enlarged the opening, afterward bandaging the wound. His opinion was that death resulted from the effects of a bullet in the brain.

Policeman McCue testified that his attention was first called at 11, on Thanksgiving morning, when he met two boys coming from a yard on West Third street. He had heard rifle shots. Mr. McCue recognized the rifle when shown to him in court. He said he saw the boys running and thought there was a fight. Later he saw P. Kane and J. Walsh on the porch of the former's home. He did not believe the boys knew they had shot anyone.

Joseph Barry, age 12, was with the two boys in Kane's yard, and said they were shooting at a post, and thought there were five shots fired between them. Jas. Fitzgerald and Thomas Newman were called, but their testimony was unimportant. Mrs. Agnes Scudder, living on Second street next to Evans's house, said she saw a man lying in Evans's yard, her attention being attracted by the barking of a dog. She called a man living in her house, who went out and assisted in getting Evans in his house.

Mrs. Scudder caused considerable laughter when the coroner asked her if the man was unconscious. She replied by saying: "He didn't say a word". She wished to impress the fact on the minds of the jury that the man was not found in her yard.

Dr. J. B. Probasco stated that he was called by Matron Morse of the Hospital, Thanksgiving morning, by telephone. He immediately went to the Hospital and found Evans lying on a marble slab in the morgue. Dr. Ard was also present. He told the latter it was a punctured wound, and at the same time passed a probe in the wound 3½ inches toward the orbit of the left eye near the nose. Evans was still unconscious. He also told Dr. Ard that it was a case in which Chief Grant should be notified, and this was done. The latter came immediately, and they, accompanied by Policeman McCue, went to Evans's house to examine the surroundings. He thought Evans had been shot while entering his yard.

George Voehl, for whom James Walsh works, said he was away gunning on the day in question and had not heard of the affair until he reached home. Walsh had been distinctly told by him not to take the rifle. He did not furnish cartridges for Walsh.

Arthur Sharkey and Viola Pendleton were called, but knew nothing of any account about the shooting.

Bridget Mallay said she saw the man lying in the yard and called a colored woman to tell Evans's wife so she could get him in the house, thinking he was in great pain.

Chief Grant was put on the stand and said he examined the ground and house and had found where a bullet had struck the house, and also a shutter. The post which the boys were shooting at showed no marks at all. He also said the board fence was so high that it might be the boys could not see anyone on the other side.

The Chief told the coroner in answer to his question that there was an ordinance prohibiting the use of firearms on the street, but none against using them in the yards.

Wm. Claasen, barber, had been called as a witness because he had been reported as saying he knew all about it, but he knew little of the affair; and was indignant at being called.

Thomas Kane, a brother of P. Kane, reviewed the whole case, and when he finished Prosecutor Marsh told him that he had come very far short of telling what he was expected to.

This concluded the list of witnesses, and the jury was given the case to decide.

In about an hour they reached the following verdict, using the Russian name of Evans instead of the name he was known by:

We, the Jury, find that Morres Evans came to his death by a bullet wound in the head by parties unknown to this Jury, and we also find James Walsh and Peter Kane (boys) were shooting at a mark carelessly in the neighborhood where Morres Evans was found wounded.

The following constituted the jury: Foreman—W. W. Coriell, J. E. Mosher, Alonzo Townley, L. Shepard, E. B. Titsworth, A. King, U. B. Crane, Sylvester Scribner, J. E. Beerbower, Isaac Brokaw.

Judge Coddington at once ordered his team of horses and drove with the coroner to Elizabeth to secure the release of the boys.

Judge Coddington's promptness in securing the discharge of Walsh and Kane from their unwelcome sojourn at Elizabeth, has won for him the lifelong friendship of a host of relatives and friends of the unfortunate young men.

Imagine the surprise of the latter last evening when they were tumbled from their cots and on appearing at the office of the jail, being confronted by Judge Coddington with their release papers in his hand.

After the boys had partaken of a substantial meal the party started for Plainfield, arriving here at 8:08, where they were joyously received by a large crowd of friends with many demonstrations.

Covers the Session.

The Legislative session of 1895 promises to be of more than ordinary interest. The election of a United States Senator, the crystallization of the Republican victory, and the political movements precedent to the election of a Governor next Fall, will be the principal work of the session.

The Trenton True American has made arrangements for thoroughly covering the field. Besides the full current reports of legislative proceedings, the undercurrent of opinions and actions which precede and lead to the legislative act will be carefully watched and faithfully reported. All subjects will be intelligently and independently discussed, and the full standard of our legislative reports will be maintained.

The True American publishes the session laws as soon as they are approved, and so furnishes to lawyers, public officials and observing citizens, an exact and early knowledge of the new laws during the legislative session.

The publishers will send the daily paper, postage paid, during the entire session for $1.50, or the daily during the entire session and the weekly for the rest of the year $2.50. Address The True American, Trenton, N. J.

Hoping for Consolidation.

Major Anderson Post, No. 109, G. A. R., was inspected last evening by Past Commander M. C. Dobbins of Post 73, who was accompanied by Past Commander Wm. Hand, W. W. Coriell and others from 73.

The work of 109 was highly commendable, and showed much carefulness in mustering.

Remarks were made by Past Commander Wm. Hand, M. C. Dobbins, and comrades of Post 109, regarding the good feeling existing between the two posts, and all are looking forward to the time when there will be but one post.

The officers-elect of Major Anderson Post, 109 are:

Commander—C. H. Randolph.
Senior Vice-Commander—J. T. Dunham.
Junior Vice-Commander—I. S. Olsen.
Surgeon—Dr. Joseph Berg.
Chaplain—T. R. Crosley.
Officer of Day—E. T. Dunn.
Officer of Guard—Major J. N. Anderson.
Trustee (3 years)—J. P. Allis.
Delegates to National Encampment—E. J. Olsen, J. T. Dunham.
Alternates—W. H. Williams, Nathan Pennington.

Choice refreshments were served at the close of business and all thoroughly enjoyed the hospitality of 109.

—There will be a prize bowling match at Hipp's on Somerset street this evening between the Manhattan and Scott teams.

—The Arrow is the title of a handsome monthly the first issue of which has just been published in the interest of the Parish Circle of Cranford.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. V. THE BIBLE SOCIETY.

Thirty-Eighth Annual Meeting for Union County.

ELOQUENT AND EARNEST ADDRESSES

Words of Welcome by Dr. Richards—Annual Address by Rev. Dr. Liggett of Rahway—Touching Memorial to Dr. Teel.

The thirty-eighth annual meeting of the Union County Bible Society, held at Dr. Richards's church yesterday, was replete with interesting and statistical information regarding the work accomplished by this organization, which is a branch of the American Bible Society. After prayer and Scripture reading the afternoon meeting was opened by cordial words of welcome by Rev. Dr. Richards, which were responded to by Rev. W. W. Moffett, Superintendent of the American Bible Society.

Mrs. Julia McGrew of New York, formerly Medical Missionary to India, then delivered an interesting address on work accomplished in India under the auspices of the Board of Foreign Missions in collaboration with the American Bible Society, and dwelt at length on the grand work being carried on in Madagascar, relating several personal experiences and individual conversions. The annual business meeting followed Mrs. McGrew's interesting address.

In the evening, prayer and Scripture reading were followed by an interesting report by Secretary J. L. Clayton, who also read the report of the Treasurer and Depositary, J. E. Marsh, who was unavoidably absent.

The secretary's report embraced the history of the society from its inception, Dec. 17, 1857, through its reorganization in 1891 to the present time, and many interesting statistics were given. Mr Clayton touchingly alluded to the great loss sustained by the society in the death of its former President, Rev. Dr. J. W. Teal of Elizabeth, and concluded by reading the report of receipts and disbursements during the last fiscal year.

Rev. Dr. Richards read a touching tribute to the life and works of the late President, Dr. Teal, submitted by the committee in the form of a memorial.

Dr. Teal was born in Rhinebeck, N. Y., was a graduate of Yale, and of the Theological College of the city of New York, and was for nine years rector at Germantown, Pa. On July 2, 1886, he accepted a call to the Westminister M. E. Church of Elizabeth, and was appointed the President of the Bible Society at its reorganization in 1891, holding the office until his death.

Rev. W. W. Moffett from the American Bible Society followed, extending the cordial greetings of the parent organization to this, its offspring and outlined the work accomplished in the larger field as well as the proposed plans of the near future. The society hopes to establish an auxiliary in every county the United States.

Up the present time the society has printed and distributed through the medium of the Foreign Board of Missions over a million and a half Bibles—in four hundred languages anp dialects.

Rev. J. H. Leggett, D. D., of Rahway, in his annual address held his audience for half an hour with a forceful and eloquent address setting forth in an interesting and concise manner why the Bible should be read and studied and its precepts followed by all the nations of the earth, and emphasizing the duty of all Coristians to circulate the Bible.

"I shall proceed to give briefly some of the reasons for urging this belief", continued the Doctor.

"First, it is God's message to man—the one inspired Book.

"Second, because it is everybody's book.

"Again, we learn therefrom all we need to know of God, and because we may also learn all we need to know of ourselves.

"Fourth, because of what we may call the inestimable value and beauty of its contents.

"Nowhere in the writings of Froude, Gibbons, Motley or Prescott, great men though they were, can be found such history as here presents itself to the student. Where in the songs of Homer, Milton, Scott, Tennyson, or our own beloved Longfellow, grand and beautiful though they are, can be found such sweet melody as in the XC Psalm, or in Job and Proverbs?

"Who of all the world's great biographers have equaled the truth and beauty of the narratives contained within the Good Old Book.

"The world's great art galleries of London, Paris, Florence, Rome or Venice fall far short of the beautiful pictures contained in the Bible.

"But perhaps it is in its prophesy, foretelling as it does the rise and fall of future empires, that the Bible impresses us most forcefully as the inspired word of God.

"Yet another reason for urging its study is because it has proved its self the great counselor of mankind.

"And last and greatest of all, because it is able to save souls to the uttermost."

Dr. Leggett concluded his eloquent address by repeating George P. Morris's beautiful poem, "My Mother's Bible":

MY MOTHER'S BIBLE.

This book is all that's left me now—
Tears will unbidden start;
With faltering lips and throbbing brow,
I press it to my heart.

For many generations past
Here is our family tree;
My mother's hands this Bible clasped—
She, dying, gave it me.

Ah well do I remember those Whose names these records bear,
That round the hearthstone used to close
After the evening prayer.

They spoke of what these pages said
In tones my heart would thrill;
Tho' they are numbered with the dead,
Here they are living still.

My father read the Holy Book
To brothers, sisters dear;
How calm was my poor mother's look,
Who loved God's Word to hear.

Her angel face—I see it yet—
What crowding memories come—
Again that little group is met
Within the halls of home.

Thou truest friend man ever knew,
Thy constancy I've tried;
When all were false I found thee true
My counselor and guide.

The mines of earth no treasure give
That could this volume buy;
It teaches me the way to live;
It tells me how to die.

Rev. Dr. O. A. Glazebrook made the concluding remarks and the benediction was pronounced.

REAR-END COLLISION.

BAD WRECK ON THE CENTRAL NEAR HIGH BRIDGE.

Traffic Long Delayed, But by a Miracle No One Was Injured.

At 9:15 last night Engine 356 in charge of Engineer Bird and Conductor Piatt ran into the rear end of train 351 blocking both tracks and suspending traffic for several hours. Both trains are "coalers" and the fact that they were not going at express rates accounts for the lucky escape from injury of both crews.

The wreck occured just west of High Bridge. At this point there is a 75 foot embankment and one of the sharpest curves on this division of the road.

Engine 356 was ditched and fifteen coal cars were telescoped, and spread themselves around in all directions. Wreck trains were called from Hampton and Phillipsburg, but it was found necessary to ask aid from Jersey City to aid in clearing the tracks. The train passed through Plainfield at 12:45 and reached the wreck at 1:48 a. m. The work of clearing was made more difficult by the steep embankment, and the tracks were not clear until 2 p. m.

Reform Club Officers.

The annual election of officers of the Reform Club took place last evening at Reform Hall with the following result:

President—W. C. Smith.
1st Vice-president—M. Marclay.
2d " " —E. B. Titsworth.
3d " " —E. Lanphear.
Secretary—W. B. Ayers
Treasurer—J. W. A. Bauersachs.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Geo. Rockafellow.
Marshals—John Goodwin, W. C. Smith, Jr.

The installation will be held the first meeting in January.

Ran Off with the Deposit.

On Tuesday E. B. Shove of Westfield gave Owenil Frainel his bankbook and a sum of money to deposit in the Plainfield Bank. Frainel failed to return and give an account of himself yesterday and Mr. Shove, becoming anxious, made inquiry at the bank, where he learned that the money had not been deposited. He made complaint against Frainel, and Frainel was arrested. He was sent to jail in default of bonds. He is a young man who has been doing odd jobs for Mr. Shove recently.

Knew a Good Figure.

That little people have large opinions of their ability was aptly illustrated in one of the Plainfield public schools yesterday. The teacher corrected a tot of four for making a really good figure five on the blackboard because he started at the bottom instead of the top of the figure. Looking at her archly he replied, "Well it's a pretty good five, anyway". But he rubbed it out.

Scarlet Fever Stamped Out.

Dr. Alpaugh of High Bridge says there are no cases of scarlet fever now at East High Bridge. There were six cases, four of them mild, and all are convalescent; the disease, he says, is now practically stamped out. The schools are open again.

. . . THE . . . RED BADGE OF COURAGE.

An Episode of the American Civil War

BY STEPHEN CRANE.

[Copyright, 1894, by the Author.]

CHAPTER XIV.

The youth stared at the land in front of him. Its foliages now seemed to veil powers and horrors. He was unaware of the machinery of orders that started the charge, although from the corners of his eyes he saw an officer, who looked like a boy a horseback, come galloping, waving his hat. Suddenly he felt a straining and heaving among the men. The line fell slowly forward like a toppling wall and, with a convulsive gasp that was intended for a cheer, the regiment began its journey. The youth was pushed and jostled for a moment before he understood the movement at all, but directly he lunged ahead and began to run.

He fixed his eye upon a distant and prominent clump of trees where he had concluded the enemy were to be met, and he ran toward it as toward a goal. He had believed throughout that it was a mere question of getting over an unpleasant matter as quickly as possible, and he ran desperately as if pursued for a murder. His face was drawn hard and tight with the stress of his endeavor. His eyes were fixed in a lurid glare. And with his soiled and disordered dress, his red and inflamed features surmounted by the dingy rag with its spot of blood, his wildly-swinging rifle and banging accoutrements, he looked to be an insane soldier.

As the regiment swung from its position out into a cleared space, the woods and thickets before it awakened. Yellow flames leaped toward it from many directions. The forest made a tremendous objection.

The line lurched straight for a moment. Then the right wing swung forward; it in turn was surpassed by the left. Afterward the center careered to the front until the regiment was a wedge-shaped mass; but an instant later the opposition of the bushes, trees and uneven places on the ground split the command and scattered it into detached clusters.

The youth, light-footed, was unconsciously in advance. His eyes still kept note of the clump of trees. From all places near it the clannish yell of the enemy could be heard. The little flames of rifles leaped from it. The song of the bullets was in the air and shells snarled from the sky. One tumbled directly into the middle of a hurrying group and exploded in crimson fury. There was an instant's spectacle of a man, almost over it, throwing up his hands to shield his eyes.

Other men, punched by bullets, fell in grotesque agonies. The regiment left a coherent trail of bodies.

They had passed into a clearer atmosphere. There was an effect like a revelation in the new appearance of the landscape. Some men working madly at a battery were plain to them and the opposing infantry's lines were defined by the gray walls and fringes of smoke.

It seemed to the youth that he saw everything. Each blade of the green grass was bold and clear. He thought he was aware of every change in the thin, transparent vapor that floated idly in sheets. The brown or gray trunks of the trees showed each roughness of their surfaces. And the men of the regiment, with their starting eyes and sweating faces, running madly or falling, as if thrown headlong, to queer, heaped up corpses, all were comprehended. His mind took a mechanical but firm impression, so that afterward everything was pictured and explained to him, save why he himself was there.

But there was a frenzy made from his furious rush. The men, pitching forward insanely, had burst into cheerings, mob-like and barbaric, but tuned in strange keys that can arouse the dullard and the stoic. It made a mad enthusiasm that, it seemed, would be incapable of checking itself before granite and brass. There was the delirium that encounters despair and death, and is heedless and blind to the odds.

Presently the straining pace ate up the energies of the men. As if by agreement the leaders began to slacken their speed. The volleys directed against them had had a seeming wind-like effect. The regiment snorted and blew. Among some stolid trees it began to falter and hesitate. The men, staring intently, began to wait for some of the distant walls of smoke to move and disclose to them the scene. Since much of their strength and their breath had vanished, they returned to caution.

The youth had a vague belief that he had run miles and he thought, in a way, that he was now in some new and unknown land.

The moment the regiment ceased its advance the protesting splutter of musketry became a steadied roar. Long and accurate fringes of smoke spread out. From the top of a small hill came level belchings of yellow flame that caused an inhuman whistling in the air.

The men, halted, had opportunity to see some of their comrades dropping with moans and shrieks. A few lay under foot, still or wailing. And now for an instant the men stood, their rifles slack in their hands, and watched the regiment dwindle. They appeared dazed and stupid. This spectacle seemed to paralyze them, to overcome them with a fatal fascination. They stared woodenly at the sights and, lowering their eyes, looked from face to face.

Then above the sounds of the outside commotion arose the roar of the lieutenant. He strode suddenly forth, his infantile features black with rage.

"Come on, yeh fools," he bellowed. "Come on. Yeh can't stay here. Yeh must come on." He said more, but much of it could not be understood.

He started rapidly forward with his head turned toward the men. "Come on," he was shouting. The men stared with blank and yokel-like eyes at him. He was obliged to halt and retrace his steps. He stood then with his back to the enemy and delivered gigantic curses into the faces of the men. His body vibrated from the weight and force of his imprecations. And he could string oaths with the facility of a maiden who strings beads.

The friend of the youth aroused. Lurching suddenly forward and dropping to his knees, he fired an angry shot at the persistent woods. This action awakened the men. They huddled no more like sheep. They seemed suddenly to bethink them of their weapons and at once commenced firing. Belabored by their officers they began to move forward. The regiment, involved like a cart in mud and muddle, started unevenly with many jolts and jerks. The men stopped now every few paces to fire and load, and in this manner moved slowly on from trees to trees.

The flaming opposition in their front grew with their advance until it seemed that all forward ways were barred by the thin leaping tongues and off to the right an ominous demonstration could sometimes be dimly discerned.

The command went painfully forward until an open space interposed between them and the lurid lines. Here, crouching and cowering behind some trees, the men clung with desperation as if threatened by a wave. They looked wild-eyed, and amazed at this furious disturbance they had stirred. In the storm, there was an ironical expression of their importance.

As they halted thus, the lieutenant again began to bellow profanely. Regardless of the vindictive threats of the bullets, he went about coaxing, berating and bedamning. His lips, that were habitually in a soft and child-like curve, now writhed into unholy contortions. He swore by all possible deities.

Once, he grabbed the youth by the arm. "Come on, yeh lunk-head," he roared. "Come on. We'll all git killed if we stay here. We've only got t' go across that lot. An' then—"

The remainder of his idea disappeared in a blue haze of curses.

The youth stretched forth his arm. "Cross there?" His mouth was puckered in doubt and awe.

"Cer'ly. Jest 'cross th' lot. We can't stay here," screamed the lieutenant. He poked his face close to the youth and waved his bandaged hand. "Come on." Presently he grappled with him as if for a wrestling bout. It was as if he planned to drag the youth by the ear on to the assault.

The private felt a sudden unspeakable indignation against his officer. He wrenched fiercely and shook him off.

"Come on yerself, then," he yelled. There was a bitter challenge in his voice.

They galloped together down the regimental front. The friend scrambled after them. In front of the colors the three men began to bawl: "Come on! Come on!" They danced and gyrated like tortured savages.

The flag, obedient to these appeals, bended its glittering form and swept toward them. The men wavered in indecision for a moment and then with a long, wailful cry, the dilapidated regiment surged forward and began its new journey.

Over the field went the scurrying mass. It was a handful of men splattered into the faces of the enemy. Toward it instantly sprang the yellow tongues. A vast quantity of the blue smoke hung before them. A mighty banging made ears valueless.

The youth ran like a madman to reach the woods before a bullet could discover him. He ducked his head low like a football player. In his haste his eyes almost closed and the scene was a wild blur. Pulsating saliva stood at the corners of his mouth.

Within him, as he hurled himself forward, was born a love, a despairing fondness for this flag which was near him. It was a creation of beauty and invulnerability. It was a goddess, radiant, that bended its form with an imperious gesture to him. It was a woman, red and white, hating and loving, that called him with the voice of his hopes. Because no harm could come to it, he endowed it with power. He kept near as if it could be a saver of lives, and an imploring cry went from his mind.

In the mad scramble he was aware that the color sergeant flinched suddenly as if struck by a bludgeon. He faltered and then became motionless, save for his quivering knees.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25c. per box. For sale by L. W. Randolph, druggist.

Then he made a spring and a clutch at the pole. At the same instant his friend grabbed it from the other side.

WRENCHED THE FLAG FROM THE DEAD MAN.

They jerked at it, stout and furious, but the color sergeant was dead and the corpse would not relinquish its trust. For a moment there was a grim encounter. The dead man, swinging with bended back seemed to be obstinately tugging in ludicrous and awful ways for the possession of the flag.

It was past in an instant of time. They wrenched the flag furiously from the dead man, and as they turned again the corpse swayed forward with bowed head. One arm swung high and the curved hand fell with heavy protest on the friend's unheeding shoulder.

CHAPTER XV.

When the two youths turned with the flag they saw that much of the regiment had crumbled away and the dejected remnant was going slowly back. The men, having hurled themselves in projectile fashion, had presently expended their forces. They slowly retreated with their faces still toward the sputtering woods and their hot rifles still replying to the din. Several officers were giving orders, their voices keyed to screams.

"Where in hell yeh goin'?" the lieutenant was asking in a sarcastic howl. And a red-bearded officer, whose voice of triple brass could plainly be heard, was commanding: "Shoot into 'em! Shoot into 'em! curse their souls!" There was a melee of speeches in which the men were ordered to do conflicting and impossible things.

The youth and his friend had a small scuffle over the flag. "Give it t' me." "No—let me keep it." Each felt satisfied with the other's possession of it, but each felt bound to declare, by an offer to carry the emblem, his willingness to further risk himself. The youth roughly pushed his friend away.

The regiment fell back to the stolid trees. There it halted for a moment to blaze at some dark forms that had begun to steal upon its track. Presently it resumed its march again, curving among the tree trunks. By the time the depleted regiment had again reached the first open space they were receiving a fast and merciless fire. There seemed to be mobs all about them.

The greater part of the men, discouraged, their spirits worn by the turmoil, acted as if stunned. They accepted the pelting of the bullets with bowed and weary heads. It was of no purpose to strive against walls. It was of no use to batter themselves against granite. And from this consciousness that they had attempted to conquer an unconquerable thing there seemed to arise a feeling that they had been betrayed. They glowered with bent brows, but dangerously, upon some of the officers, more particularly upon the red-bearded one with the voice of triple brass.

However, the rear of the regiment was fringed with men who continued to shoot irritably at the advancing foes. They seemed resolved to make every trouble. The youthful lieutenant was perhaps the last man in the disordered mass. His forgotten back was toward the enemy. He had been shot in the arm. It hung straight and rigid. Occasionally he would cease to remember it and be about to emphasize an oath with a sweeping gesture. The multiplied pain caused him to swear with incredible power.

The youth went along with slipping, uncertain feet. He kept watchful eyes rearward. A scowl of mortification and rage was upon his face. He had thought of a fine revenge upon the officer who had referred to him and to his fellows as mule drivers. But he saw that it could not come to pass. His dreams had collapsed when the mule drivers, dwindling rapidly, had wavered and hesitated on the little clearing and then had recoiled. And now the retreat of the mule drivers was a march of shame to him.

A dagger-pointed gaze from without his blackened face was held toward the enemy, but his greater hatred was riveted upon the man who, not knowing him, had called him a mule driver.

When he knew that he and his comrades had failed to do anything in successful ways that might bring the little pangs of a kind of remorse upon the officer, the youth allowed the rage of the baffled to possess him. This cold officer upon a monument who dropped epithets unconcernedly down, would be finer as a dead man, he thought. So grievous did he think it that he could never possess the secret right to taunt truly in answer.

He had pictured red letters of curious revenge. "We are mule drivers, are we?" And now he was compelled to throw them away.

He presently wrapped his heart in the cloak of his pride and kept the flag erect. He harangued his fellows, pushing against their chests with his free hand. To those he knew well, he made frantic appeals, beseeching them by name. Between him and the lieutenant, scolding and near to losing his mind with rage, there was felt a subtle fellowship and equality. They supported each other in all manner of hoarse, howling protests.

But the regiment was a machine run down. The two men babbled at a forceless thing. The soldiers who had heart to go slowly were continually shaken in their resolves by a knowledge that comrades were slipping with speed back to the lines. It was difficult to think of reputation when others were thinking of skins. Wounded men were left, crying, on this black journey.

The smoke-fringes and flames blustered always. The youth, peering once through a sudden rift in a cloud, saw a brown mass of troops interwoven and magnified until they appeared to be

DR. DOYLE'S creation of "Sherlock Holmes" has caused the greatest literary sensation since the publication of "David Copperfield" or "Vanity Fair."

On December 10 We Shall Begin

publication of a new and remarkable story by this well-known writer, entitled

THE MEDAL OF BRIGADIER GERARD

It deals with the

and the adventures of a gallant Hussar in his service. Dr Doyle considers it

The Best Story He Has Ever Written.

In view of the revival of interest in the genius and career of Napoleon Bonaparte, this story is particularly timely. Our New York representative paid 12½c a word for this remarkable piece of fiction, as the subjoined receipt will show. We also publish herewith the first page of Dr. Doyle's manuscript.

The Medal of Brigadier Gérard

The Duke of Tarentum a McDonald as his old comrades prips to call him

A McDonald was, as I could perceive, in no the vrost of temper. His grim Scotch face was like one of those grotesque door knockers which one sees in the Faubourg St-Germain. We heard afterwards that the Emperor had said in jest that he would have sent him against Wellington at Inkerman in the South, but that he was afraid to trust him within sound of the pipes. Major Charpentier and I could plainly see that he was smouldering with anger.

"Brigadier Gérard of the Hussars" said he, with the air of the corporal with the recruit.

I bowed & saluted.

"Major Charpentier of the Horse Grenadiers"

My companion answered to his name.

"The Emperor has a mission for you." Without more ado he flung open the door and announced us.

I have seen Napoleon ten times on horseback to once on foot, and I think that he does wisely to show himself to his troops in this fashion, for he cuts a very good figure in the saddle. As we saw him now he was the shortest man out of six by a good handsbreadth, and yet I am no very big man myself, though I ride quite heavy enough for a Hussar. His valet tells that his body is too long for his

THE FIRST STEAMBOAT FARE.

Fulton Wanted to Buy a Bottle of Wine With It, But Couldn't Afford It.

"One of the most interesting incidents of a business nature connected with Fulton's steamboat enterprise was the first steamboat fare paid to him," said Uncle Joshua.

"The narrator of this, who was also one of the actors in the scene, says: 'I chanced to be at Albany on business when Fulton arrived in his unheard of craft which everybody felt so much interest in seeing. Being ready to leave, and hearing that this craft was going to return to New York, I repaired on board and inquired for Mr. Fulton. I was referred to the cabin, and there found a plain, gentlemanly man, wholly alone and engaged in writing.

"'Mr. Fulton, I presume?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'Do you return to New York with this boat?'

"'We shall try to get back, sir.'

"'Can I have a passage down?'

"'You can take your chance with us, sir.'

"I inquired the amount to be paid, and after a moment's hesitation, a sum—I think $6—was named. The amount in coin I laid in his open hand, and, with his eyes fixed upon it, he remained so long motionless that I thought there might be a miscount, and said to him:

"'Is that right, sir?'

"This question roused him as from a kind of reverie, and as he looked up to me the big tear was brimming in his eye and his voice faltered as he said: 'Excuse me, sir, but my memory was busy in contemplating this, the first pecuniary reward I have ever received from all my exertions in adapting steam to navigation. I would gladly commemorate the occasion over a bottle of wine with you but rearly I am too poor even for that just now; yet I trust we may meet again when this will not be the case.'

"His voyage to New York was successful, as all know, and terminated without accident.

"Some four years after this, when the Clermont had been greatly improved and her name changed to the North River, and when two other boats, namely, the Car of Neptune and the Paragon had been built, making Mr. Fulton's fleet three boats plying regularly between New York and Albany, I took passage on one of these for the latter city. The cabin in these days was below, and as I walked its length to and fro, I saw that I was closely observed by one I thought a stranger. Soon, however, I recalled the features of Mr. Fulton, but, without disclosing this, I continued my walk.

"At length, in passing his seat, our eyes met, when he sprang to his feet, and, eagerly grasping my hand, exclaimed: 'I knew it must be you, for your features have never escaped me; and, although I am still far from rich, yet I may venture that bottle now.' It was ordered, and during its discussion he ran rapidly, but vividly, over his experience of the world's coldness and sneers, and of the hopes, fears, disappointments, and difficulties that were scattered through his whole career of discovery—up to the very point of his final crowning triumph, at which he so fully felt he had arrived at last.

"And in reviewing all these he said: 'I have again and again recalled the occasion and the incident of our first interview at Albany; and never have I done so without reviewing in my mind the vivid emotion it originally caused. That seemed, and does still seem, to me, the turning point in my destiny—the dividing line between light and darkness in my career upon earth, for it was the first actual recognition of my usefulness to my fellow men.'"—Boston Herald.

Palmer Cox produced the first of his "Brownies" about fifteen years ago, when Arthur Gilman, dean of the Harvard Annex, now Radcliffe College, asked him for drawings to illustrate a humorous manuscript about the alphabet.

The WREN in Business

It is characteristic of the Wren that it will sneak in and occupy the nest made by another bird, in preference to building one of its own. This same trait is often seen in business. It is shown by the imitators of

COTTOLENE

No sooner has the wonderful merit of this new vegetable shortening, so much better than lard, created for it a remarkable sale and popularity, than the business wrens are ready to move upon the market with many worthless counterfeits. Any housekeeper can be easily and cheaply convinced of the value of COTTOLENE by simply giving it a trial. They will then be unwilling to go back to lard, or go down to fraudulent imitations.

THE SPOKESMAN OF THE PEOPLE

PARTICULAR MENTION.

T. S. Thorn of Plainfield has patented a toy.

Mrs. Annie Vroom of Somerset street has returned from a visit to relatives in Newark.

A son, weighing ten pounds, came to brighten the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Heron, of South Second street, last evening.

A complete and delightful surprise was give to Mr. and Mrs. John Poole of 522 East Second street last night. Time passed pleasantly with refreshments, games, music, etc.

Mrs. Maxson Dunham, mother of Mrs. I. C. VanDyke of East Front street, who has been suffering from severe wounds received from the brutal attack of a negro, has fully recovered.

The types made the mistake yesterday of stating that Mrs. Randolph was to give, with Mrs. Gilbert, a reception December 15. It should be Miss Randolph, Mrs. Gilbert's sister.

Miss Nettie Bauersachs, daughter of Letter-Carrier Bauersachs, went to Newark this afternoon to attand a surprise party to be given to her cousin, Master Theo. Merklinger, this evening.

A birthday party was given last night to Miss Alice Deal at her home on First mountain. The happy celebration was arranged by her brother George. About 50 attended, and enjoyed till the small hours the games, dances and refreshments. John Willis was the violinist.

A very plessant surprise was given to Mr. and Mrs. William Allen by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Leitheuiser at the home of the latter, 712 East Second street. Dancing was the principal feature and a sumptuous supper was served during the intermission. Guttman furnished the music.

Henry G. Adams of Orange place has accepted a position with E. J. Gillies & Co., coffee importers of New York, which which enables him to devote a portion of time daily to the interests of the National Fire Insurance Co. of Hartford, as their agent, and having left North avenue he will shortly open an office in a more central location.

A charming bal poudre was given by the Misses Simmonds of Watchung avenue in honor of their guests, the Misses Coutreauxx of New Orleans and Miss Pixote of Paris, last night. The women were gowned in Empire costumes, and the men were dressed as counts. Among those present were Mr. Marsh, Mr. Israels, Mr. Thompson and Mr. Baldwin of New York; the Misses Freeman of Metuchen; Miss Sandford and Mr. and Mrs. Pollock of Plainfield.

Westervelt Avenue Surprise.

A delightful surprise arranged by Miss Ada Woolston and Miss May McLaughlin was given Miss Mamie Buckle at her home on Westervelt avenue last evening. Sociability was pre-eminent and all joined in making the event one of the most successful of the season. The bewitching music furnished by Andrew Carpenter captivated the hearts of the young people who danced till early morning, and then an intermission was pleasantly passed with excellent refreshments. Among those present were:

The Misses Coddington, McLaughlin, Lewis, Chandler, Vetterlein, Miles, Woolston, Thorn, Steiner, Simpson and W. Simpson; and W Havens, W Morrison, B Steiner, E Clark, J DeMeza, George DeMeza, C McNabb, H Woolston, W Woodland, W Kitchen, F Fullerton, G Chandler, A Vail, C Phender and Herbert Schutt.

The young people left for their homes about 2 in the morning.

Trinity Election.

Election of officers and committees for the ensuing year for the Trinity Reformed Sunday-school was held last evening and resulted as follows:

Superintendent—E. E. Anthony.
Asst. Supt.—F. E. Smith.
Leader of Primary Department—Mrs. Josephine Tier.
Treasurer—W. F. Oliver.
Secretary—E. H. Bird.
Librarian—W. A. Woodruff.
Asst. Librarian—F. E. Woodruff.
Executive Committee—J. H. Van Winkle, Mrs. J. C. VanDyke, Miss Mabel Wilson.
Library Committee—Mrs. A. M. Gillem, Mrs. J. S. Cutter, Miss E. C. Benedict.
Music Committee—Mrs. F. E. Woodruff, Miss Mary Berg, Mrs. J. S. Cutter.

—Reed & Coddington have secured judgment for $125.10 in the court of Justice Newcorn, in the case of Williams against Gwynette.

—Albert Grieb cut his knee so badly by a fall this morning that Dr. Hedges had to take several stitches in it at Muhlenberg Hospital.

"It is a pleasure to sell Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," says Stickney & Dentler, druggists, Republic, Ohio, "Because a customer after once using it, is almost certain to call for it when again in need of such a medicine. We sell more of it than of any other cough medicine we handle, and it always gives satisfaction." For cough, colds and croup, it is without an equal. For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

The Inferiority of Woman.

Mr. Hall Caine, whose recent statements regarding the inferiority of woman attracted some attention, has called down upon his unlucky head a spirited rejoinder from John Strange Winter (Mrs. Stannard). In the commencement of her literary career, Mrs. Stannard says in the Young Woman, her father died, leaving the family without a penny. She lived far from London and had no friends to help her in the literary world. "Yet, before I was thirty, my name was known all over the English speaking world. I have married, brought children into the world, ruled my house, sold a million and a half of books, kept up an enormous circle of friends, helped several charities and many strugglers both in kindness and in influence, have kept my house better than most women, and have a husband and children who worship me and are never really happy unless in my actual presence."

"On the other hand," Mrs. Stannard proceeds, "you have Mr. Hall Caine, who is a small, fragile man, who cannot work in London, who, by his own showing, is thoroughly exhausted by the effort of writing a single book, a burden of nerves and fancies. He began his literary career with an enormous advantage over me. He has a wife to mind his house, and to bolster him up when his nerves get too much for him. I fail to see where his immense superiority over me comes in."—Westminster Budget.

Prizes Won at Cards.

A card club, composed of a number of the young people of Plainfield and North Plainfield, held its second meeting since organization at the home of Benjamin O. Bowers, Jr., LaGrande avenue, last evening. Hearts was the game of the evening, and among those who played were Miss Florence Serrell, Miss Elsie Jobbs, Miss Percy Emmons, Miss Lillian Glenn, Miss Clara Long, Miss Lillian Schoonmaker, Geo. Smith, Clifford Crane, V. F. Green, S. B. Titsworth, B O. Bowers, Jr., Allen Taylor, Seymour Smith, Jr.

The first feminine prize, a silver sword stick pin, was won by Miss Florence Serrell. Miss Lillian Schoonmaker received a double-heart clasp pin as second prize. Seymour Smith was the highest among the young men, and received as his reward a handsome watch chain. Clifford Crane won second prize.

After the games, refreshments were served and the rest of the evening was spent in the delights of the dance.

The evening was much enjoyed by all, and all agreed that the club was a great success.

REMARKABLE CURES

Of Recent Date.

A Statement from Ex-Mayor John Corson, Esq., of Clinton, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

I acknowledge with the utmost pleasure the wonderful cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in my case.

I had been a sufferer from piles, which gave me constant pain and distress, during twenty long years, attended with frequent loss of blood and with great and painful protrusion of the pile tumors and rectum whenever my bowels moved.

I tried constantly to get relief from my sufferings, but to no purpose until Mr. Bryan, a friend of mine, who had been cured by Dr. Lighthill of the same trouble, recommended him to me, and he effected a complete and radical cure in my case also, and earned my lifelong gratitude.

JOHN CORSON.

THE CASE OF MR PETER G. EYCK, OF BISSELL, HUNTERDON CO., N. J.

Dr. Lighthill Effects a Complete Cure Where Ten Physicians Had Failed.

TO THE SICK, SUFFERING AND AFFLICTED:

For many years past I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. Every movement of the bowels was attended with loss of blood and with intense pain which lasted for hours and sometimes all day. My condition was aggravated by a prolapse of the rectum, which greatly increased my suffering and sometimes gave me most agonizing pains.

So great was my distress and so bad my condition that I sold my farm, not being able to work it any longer. At one time the protruding pile tumors became so highly inflamed and swollen that they could not be replaced, and I had to go to bed, applying hot poultices for three months before I could get relief.

I had been under the treatment of ten different physicians, some of New York City, Easton, Washington and elsewhere, without any benefit whatever, and had given up my case as hopeless when, luckily for me, I heard of Dr. Lighthill's skill and success in such cases, and went to him for treatment, with the happy result that he effected a radical and permanent cure in less than four weeks's time; and I am glad to say that the entire treatment gave me neither pain nor distress.

I consider my cure perfectly wonderful, and so do all my friends and neighbors. I am confident that there is no case of piles which Dr. Lighthill cannot cure.

DOANE & EDSALL.

A GOWN DOCTOR.

SHE TURNS SUMMER COSTUMES INTO CHARMING WINTER ONES.

A Frenchwoman Who Has the Knack of Making Over Gowns in a Way to Deceive the Elect of Society. How She Does It.

The young matrons of New York are noted all over the country for the freshness and prettiness of their evening gowns. This is due in some cases to a French dressmaker who goes among them refashioning summer dresses into at-home toilets for the evening, and who charges an amount for her services that is really nominal considering the results she achieves.

One day last week the French woman appeared at the house of a young matron who had written that she wanted a pale green gown of thin summer goods fashioned into a dainty dress for a stay-at-home evening. She carried a parcel and this is what it contained: One yard of rose colored crepe, five yards of satin ribbon of the same color, and several strips of rose velvet cut on the bias.

When the pale green gown was laid before her she seized it as if she were a wolf pouncing upon her prey, and began ripping off the fancy green collar as if it were odious to her sight. As soon as the collar was thrown away a piece of the broad rose ribbon was folded neatly across the front and fastened on each side, and there cut off. Then, quick as her hands would let her, she took a velvet strip and shirred it so as to make an upstanding end at least three inches broad. This she sewed fast to the collar so that it would stand up well under the ear, and proceeded to make another one like it for the other side.

A nice strip of the ribbon was next sewed on and carried around to the back of the neck to complete the collar effect. After this a velvet rosette finished the back and the side ears, as she calls them, although they bore no resemblance to the donkey-eared bows of the summer.

The front point of the green bodice was treated to two more of the bias velvet upstanding ends. These were very wide at the flaring part. Perhaps they might have been five inches wide. From under them went the rose ribbon meandering along the side of the bodice and up half way under the arm, where it caught some trimming that finished there. Then it continued its way to the back of the waist, where it ended under the biggest velvet bow that ever was seen on the back of a house waist. Here the Frenchwoman stopped to do an ornament for the hair.

"Eef I s'ould be unable to finish zee skirt," said she, "madame could wear zee bodice eef she have zee hair trimming. It ees so parfait!"

The little thing that was fashioned for the hair consisted of two loops of the rose ribbon twisted together in a mysterious way, while from the opposite side extended three pointed ends. A gold hairpin was twisted through the ribbon knot to facilitate the business of dressmaking the hair.

"Zat ees for the hair high," declared the deft Frenchwoman. Then came two small and perfectly symmetrical rose-colored rosettes to be fastened back of each ear in the demurrest possible way, should the hair be worn low in one of the draggy, old-fashioned styles now in favor.

Next she ripped the skirt from the band and shortened it a little, perhaps enough to show the high heels of the wearer, who would, of course have pretty house slippers to wear with her glorified gown. Not a particle of the rose was put upon the skirt, and it might have seemed as if the Frenchwoman were making a mistake, or even shirking her work. But she knew what she was about.

Calling for a handsome lace-trimmed petticoat, she began to stitch a ruffle of the crepe under its bottom flounces of lace. Then, holding it off for a glance of approval, she flew busily onward with her needle. The crepe flounce fell two inches below the lace flounce.

"Ziss," she said, "will fall below zee skirt and give zee appearance of a rose crepe ruffle. And if zee lace show, so much zee prettier."

When tried on the effect was so admirable that the young matron, after a suggestion from the dressmaker, ordered the skirt of the dress to be lifted at the side and fastened with a large velvet rosette and a couple of the broad upstanding ends, while the underskirt was to be further trimmed with flounces of the rose crepe and white lace.

Very large and regular rosettes of the rose crepe were made for the black satin house slippers, and the crepe was pulled out to appear as full as possible in the rosettes.

The Frenchwoman's lamentations were many that she could not cut the sleeves into a long point over the hand, as they were of the full variety. But she consoled herself by binding a fan with rose satin and covering its outside sticks to match. She likewise set squares of rose satin into a lace handkerchief.

"That would have cost a little fortune if I had had it done at my dressmaker's," said the matron as the woman slipped away with the money for one day's sewing in her pocket.

THE SERMONS GLADSTONE LIKES

He Thinks Clergymen are Not Severe Enough Upon Their Congregations.

Mr. Gladstone, upon being asked recently what sort of sermons he liked best, wrote that, in his opinion, the clergymen of the day were not as a rule severe enough upon their congregations They do not, continued Mr. Gladstone sufficiently lay upon the souls and consciences of their hearers their moral obligations or probe their lives and bring up their whole lives to the bar of conscience. The sermons most needed are those similar to the one that offended Lord Melbourne when he complained that he was obliged to listen to a preacher who insisted upon a man applying his religion to his private life.

"This," added Mr. Gladstone, "is the kind of preaching men need most and get least of."

HIGH SCHOOL NOTEBOOK.

Principal Travell concluded the opening exercises this morning by reading a very interesting sketch of the wonders of deep sea life.

The tug-of-war rope was brought out at recess for the first time this school year. There was an exciting contest between two teams composed of the boys of the High and Grammar schools which only ended when the bell rang. Contests between teams from the various classes are in contemplation.

The class of '96 held a class meeting yesterday afternoon at 3:30. It was decided to decorate the room for Christmas on Dec. 21. Wilbur F. Cornwell, Miss Grace E. Overton and Miss Annie Carl were appointed a committee to take charge of the decorating. Miss Alice Thompson, Miss Mamie Steiner and Herbert Richardson were appointed another committee to secure the class colors. After the business was concluded, Miss Cahoone and Miss Burnett gave readings from Harper's. Piano solos by Miss Lizzie Alice and H. Oscar Nightengale followed, and the meeting ended with a humorous recitation by Morton Pierson, the class orator. NINETY-FIVE.

IGNORED THEIR TREATY

Trouble Near Between England and Nicaragua.

Officials of the Latter Country Have Issued Proclamations and Given Orders in Direct Opposition to the Agreement with Great Britain—Yellow Fever on a U. S. Cruiser.

Kingston, Jamaica, Dec. 7.—Somewhat startling news comes from Nicaragua. The treaty between Great Britain and Nicaragua has been ignored. General Cabeza has been named governor of Mosquito. His brother has been named governor of Corn island. Recently he obtained the concession for a number of years, to use the island for a coaling station. In the event of a completed Nicaragua canal Corn island will have an immense value both as a coaling station and a strategical situation, practically commanding the Atlantic entrance to the canal.

General Cabeza as governor of the Mosquito territory, gave a state banquet. He issued formal invitations to the officers of H. M. S. Mohawk, and to the officers of the United States cruiser Marblehead. The officers of the Mohawk promptly declined, while the officers of the Marblehead accepted, and were welcomed with a salute of 21 guns.

Last evening the United States cruiser Marblehead arrived here direct from the Mosquito coast. There is sickness on board, said to be yellow fever. A report also obtains that the Mohawk recently reprovisioned on the coast of Central America. She has sickness on board also.

The seizure of the properties of the Moravian missionaries in the Mosquito reserve by President Zelaya's deputies will lead to serious complications with Great Britain. The Moravian mission is a large and influential one. A bishop and nearly thirty clergy have conducted the mission among the Mospuito and Sarna Indians. At one time they purchased their extensive holdings from the government of Mosquito it was with the full approval of Great Britain. The deeds were duly registered in London and England has promised them protection and full redress.

General Cabeza's decrees, in the Mosquito reserve have been refused recognition by Great Britain. General Barrios, the Nicaraguan minister to England, has been so informed in London.

Nicaragua is practically under a dictatorship. Under the new constitution formulated by General Zelaya, any one denounced to the government of Nicaragua as unfriendly to that country may be fined $50,000, or have his property confiscated.

Mr. Edwin F. Hatch, late British consul at Bluefields, will have a large claim for personal losses. Nicaragua must also account to Great Britain for having deprived Mr. Herbert F. Bingham, consul at Greytown, of his exequatur.

SOCIALISTS CAUSE TROUBLE.

An Aggressive Demonstration in the German Reichstag.

Berlin, Dec. 7.—The socialists made an exceptionally aggressive demonstration during the debate on the royal civil list in the chamber. Their attacks were so bitter that eventually the conservative deputies rose in a body and, led by the premier, drowned the socialists speeches with cheers for the king.

The socialists replied, "Hurrah for the people."

The conservatives continued to cheer and wave their handkerchiefs, until the confusion became hopeless and the chamber adjourned.

Must Pay Store Licenses.

Rockville, Conn., Dec. 7.—The jury in the superior court at Tolland rendered a verdict in favor of the state in the case of the state against Conlon Bros., of Waterbury, charged with running a temporary shoe store at Rockville without paying a city license of $2 a day. The defense was that the law was unconstitutional and that the store was a permanent one. Judge Prentice imposed a fine with costs amounting to $50.

Cloakmakers Strike.

Philadelphia, Dec. 7.—Four hundred cloakmakers, employed by Strawbridge & Clothier, went on a strike rather than submit to a reduction of wages. The employees have been receiving 75 cents and $1 per garment, but were notified by the manager of the department yesterday that hereafter they would receive but 50 and 75 cents.

Operators and Miners To Meet.

Columbus, O., Dec. 7.—Secretary McBryde, of the United Mine workers, has received notice that the joint board of arbitration of operators and miners will be held here Monday to consider the complaint of the Pittsburg operators that the scale is not being observed generally there.

Football Is Profitable.

Philadelphia, Dec. 7.—The gross receipts of the Harvard-Pennsylvania football game here on Thanksgiving day were slightly over $37,000 and the expenses amounted to almost $13,000. This leaves about $12,000 a piece as the share of the two colleges from the games receipts.

Spinners' Strike Off.

Dover, N. H., Dec. 7.—The strike of local mule spinners was declared off after a conference between National Secretary Ross of Fall River, Thomas O'Donnell of New Bedford, representing the strikers, and Agent Holland of the Cocheco mills.

End of the Mutual Life.

New York, Dec. 7.—T. B. Bleecker, president, has been appointed receiver of the New York Mutual Insurance company at he request of the stockholders in proceedings for a voluntary dissolution of the company.

Started an Iron Furnace.

Reading, Pa., Dec. 7.—Furnace No. 2 of the Reading Iron company, idle for three years, started to-day.

CHINA SEEKS PEACE.

She Will Send a Special Ambassador to Tokio To Treat.

Chee-Foo, Dec. 7.—The Tsung-Li Yamen has decided to send a special ambassador to Tokio, fully authorized to negotiate a treaty of peace with Japan.

This is the result of an intimation from United States Minister Denby that he and the United States minister to Japan have prepared the way for direct communication between China and Japan, though the nature of the preliminary negotiations is kept secret.

Lyons, Dec. 7.—The Missions Catholiques has received a letter from Mgr. Mutel, addressed from Seoul, the capital of Corea, announcing that all the French missionaries in Corea after great hardships have succeeded in reaching Seoul.

The letter adds that all the Christian villages in Corea have been pillaged and burned, and that numbers of native Christians have been massacred.

VOTED AGAINST THE POLICE.

Danvers Refuses To Pay Salaries and Will Have No Force.

Danvers, Mass., Dec. 7.—A peculiar condition of affairs obtains in this town where, at the town meeting, an appropriation was refused to pay the expenses of the police department, and it now becomes necessary after tomorrow, to dispense with the services of the chief of police and the three officers.

The appropriation was exhausted by extra expenses caused by the efforts of the officers to stamp out the illegal selling of liquor and in making such arrests as are necessary in a town of several thousand inhabitants and which is also located so near Salem as to be nearly a part of that municipality.

The vote against the extra appropriation stood 150 to 108, and the peculiar condition prevailed that a large number of men who are strong no-license men, voted against the appropriation.

FIRE IN THE SKY.

Sailors Tell a Remarkable Yarn of Celestial Phenomena.

Baltimore, Dec. 7.—The officers of the Neptune line steamer Urbano, from Rotterdam, tell of a queer experience in a gale on Nov. 25.

They say that at 9 o'clock in the morning a gale was blowing northwest, accompanied by snow and rain, thunder and lightning.

At that hour a loud report was heard in the air, and an immense ball of fire appeared overhead. Suddenly two explosions louder than the first were heard. After the first of these explosions the ball became a mass of forked streamers of light. At the second small particles spread over the ship and shot in all directions.

Large lumps of ice fell on the deck. Several of the men ran to pick them up, but it is said they seemed to disappear, and left the men astounded.

NOT MUCH TO LOOSE.

Secretary Morton Speaks on Germany's Attempted Embargo.

Washington, Dec. 7.—Speaking on the subject of German retaliation Secretary Morton of the department of agriculture said Germany had never been a large consumer of any of our agricultural products except lard. Germany's cattle trade with the United States is infinitesmal compared with that of England.

During the first nine months of this year alone Great Britain took 305,910 fat live steers from America at a cost of $26,500,000. Germany in 1890 received from this country 3,977 head of cattle, valued at $335,540; in 1891, 5,223 head valued at $427,565; in 1892, 4,643 head valued at $448,480; in 1893, 419 head valued at $4,800, and only $80 worth of fresh beef the same year, and in 1894, 3,069 head valued at $285,792.

New Jersey's Water Supply.

Jersey City, Dec. 7.—The Hudson county grand jury has made a presentation condemning the efforts to impose a new water supply on Jersey City, and recommending a general system for supplying all the cities of northern New Jersey so as to lessen the cost while ensuring the purest supply.

Adolphus' Birth Honored.

Gloucester, Mass., Dec. 7.—The 300th anniversary of the birth of Gustavus Adolphus was observed here at the Fishermen's institute, where a large number of the Scandinavian population and others were assembled. Rev. Emanuel Charlton presided and an address was delivered by Rev. Mr. Mason.

Kidnapped a Child.

Tunkhannock, Pa., Dec. 7.—Goldie Worden, an eight-year-old child, was kidnapped as she left the school house. A closed carriage stopped nearby and a man suddenly threw his arms about her, tossed her into the carriage and drove swiftly away. The supposition is that the man is the girl's father.

German Knights Withdraw.

Baltimore, Dec. 7.—As a result of the declaration of the grand lodge, Knights of Pythias, that the rituals of all lodges should be conducted in the English language, the Goethe and Harmonic lodges of this city, composed entirely of Germans, have withdrawn from the order.

Pierce's Great Theft.

Yankton, S. D., Dec. 7.—Advices received here from England show that J. M. T. Pierce, who recently decamped, obtained over $15,000,000 on bonds he was given to sell. There were half a dozen men concerned in the theft.

Rev. Dr. Pyle's New Call.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 7.—Rev. James P. Pyle, who for the past ten years has been assistant pastor of St. Patrick's church here, has been ordered to Montville, on the Thames river.

Denbroeder Took the Money.

Weymouth, Mass., Dec. 7.—It has been discovered that when he absconded tax collector Denbroeder took $3,000 of the citys money with him.

Daniels May Be a Minister.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 7.—It is reported here that Senator Daniels intends at the expiration of his term, to become a Methodist minister.

HONORS TO THE BISHOP

Dr. Clark Is Tendered a Brilliant Reception.

Bishops of Massachusetts, New York and Other States, with Many Prominent Clergymen from New England Present in Providence—Addresses Delivered Eulogizing His Work.

Providence, R. I., Dec. 7.—Grace church was the scene of one of the most interesting, important, and impressive occasions in the history of the Episcopal church in this state, the service being in commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of Right Rev. Thomas March Clark, D. D., L. L. D., bishop of Rhode Island.

Bishops and eminent divines of other states, the clergy, and many prominent laymen of Rhode Island and an assemblage of people which filled the church to overflowing, were present. The ceremony was the more impressive because the less imposing Its great beauty was in its simplicity

The processional "Ancient of Days," during which the clergy and bishops took their places within the chancel was followed by the ante-communion service. Bishop Clark sat at the right of the altar. The service was conducted by Bishops Lawrence of Massachusetts, Neely of Maine, and Grafton of Fond du Lac.

The addresses of Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts and Bishop Potter of New York were then delivered. Bishop Potter spoke at length of Bishop Clark as a teacher.

The celebrant of the communion was Bishop Whittaker of Pennsylvania. He was assisted by Bishops Neeley of Maine and Lawrence of Massachusetts and Rev. Dr. Greer of New York. The past communion service was conducted by Bishop Potter of New York and at the close the bishop and clergy retired while the doxology was sung.

Among the prominent visiting divines besides Bishop Neely of Maine, Grafton of Fond du Lac, Whittaker of Pennsylvania, Potter fo New York and Lawrence of Massachusetts, were Rev. Drs. Greer and Huntington of New York; President Smith and Rev. Dr. Donnell of Trinity college, Hartford; Rev. Dean Hodges of Cambridge, Rev. Drs. Brown and C. H. Babcock of Boston; Rev. John C. Brooks of Springfield; Rev. Lucius Waterman of New Haven; Rev. Leighton Parks of Boston; Rev. E. S. Rousmaniere of New Bedford and others.

Bishop Clark was tendered a reception at the Trocadero, which was attended by the visiting church dignitaries and a large number of members of the Rhode Island diocese.

The venerable bishop, being unable to walk through temporary indisposition, was brought in by attendants and sat in an easy chair at the front of the platform in the main hall.

Dr. Richards, rector of St.John's church, presided and introduced Bishop Clark, who in a brief speech welcomed his friends and associates and expressed deep appreciation of the great honor bestowed upon him. Then followed brief addresses by the distinguished guests present, all eulogistic of the work of Rhode Island's bishop and the pre-eminent position which he had gained through years of faithful service.

The speakers were, Dr Henshaw, Mr. Rathbone Gardner, Dr. Vose of this city, Rev. Dr. Greer of New York and Rev. Dr. Huntington of New York.

Impersonated a Sheriff.

Winsted, Conn., Dec. 7.—A man representing himself as deputy sherif of Torrington, walked into Carty's saloon, grabbed a German named Carl Schneider, who he said he wanted for murder. Schneider got into a team and the two drove off. They went to the German's home and the stranger wanted $5 to let the man go free. Schneider's wife paid him $5 and the stranger drove off. Schneider notified Chief Wheeler and the stranger was arrested at Hotel Central. He claimed to be P. J. Gallagher of Scranton, Pa., and to represent the Bay State Publishing company.

A Clever Swindler's Doings.

Oneonta, N. Y., Dec. 7.—A swindler known as Mueller, Schultz and Miller has swindled a number of merchants in all parts of the country, by representing that he has an estate here. Letters have been received from Worcester, New Bedford and Fall River, Mass., New Haven, Conn., Newark, N. J., and Scranton, Pa., asking about him. He swindled several people here, and has no estate.

Operated on for Appendicitis.

Buffalo, Dec. 7.—Postmaster Howard H. Baker, who has been confined to his room for nearly a week past suffering from appendicitis, has undergone a successful operation.

TORTURED THIRTY YEARS.

His Suffering Ended After Using Munyon's Rheumatism Cure.

Mr. George Smith, of Tacony, Pa., says: "I suffered from rheumatism for 30 years, and had so many severe attacks that some of my joints were twisted out of shape. At times I suffered terrible pain, and, although I tried many remedies, I never obtained any permanent relief until I procured Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. The action of this remedy was wonderfully quick, and although I have only taken a small quantity, I consider myself permanently cured."

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure is guaranteed to cure rheumatism in any part of the body. Acute or muscular rheumatism cured in from one to five days. It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides, back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. It is guaranteed to promptly cure lameness, stiff and swollen joints, stiff back, and all pains in the hips and loins. Chronic rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago, or pain in the back are speedily cured.

Munyon's Homœopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

ONE TERM IS FAVORED

Bryan Against the Re-election of Presidents.

Nebraska's Congressman Introduces a Resolution in the House for a Constitutional Amendment To Prevent One Man from Serving More Than Four Years.

Washington, Dec. 7.—The senate spent only two hours in session, transacting business of miner importance, and then adjourned until Monday. In the house Speaker Crisp made many important changes in committees. The session was taken up mostly in discussing a railroad pooling bill, and the introduction of resolutions, one of which was to declare the president of the United States ineligible to re-election after serving one term. Mr. Vest in the senate made an effort at the close of the proceedings to get up his cloture resolution for action; but he was cut off by a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business. He will probably be more successful on Monday next, when Mr. Blackburn (dem., Ky.), chairman of the committee on rules, is expected to be present.

Mr. Turpie (dem., Ind.) occupied about an hour in the presentation of an argument in favor of making senators elective by the people. Four bills were passed, one of which was to reimburse the Washington and Lee university at Lexington, Va., for injuries done by United States troops during the war.

After the passage of the bills the senate adjourned. Among the changes in the house committees was the appointment of Mr. Sibley (dem., Pa.) to the committee on public buildings and grounds and Mr. Tracey (dem., N. Y.) to the committee on merchant marine and fisheries.

The pension and fortifications appropriation bills for the year ending June 30, 1896, were reported. The debate on the bill to so amend the interstate commerce law as to permit of pooling by the railroads was resumed and occupied the attention of the house for the most of the day. Messrs. Cooper (dem., Fla.) and Daniels (rep., N. Y.) spoke against the bill and Mr. Gresham (dem., Tex.), Mr. Morse (rep., Mass.) and Mr. Reed (rep., Me.), for it.

Mr. Draper of Massachusetts offered in the house a bill which makes it unlawful for any common carrier to haul any car not equipped with automatic couplings or any locomotive which has not driving wheel brakes. Mr. McRae of Arkansas, chairman of the house committee on public lands, introduced three important measures which he hopes to have the house act on at an early day. The bills are to provide for opening Indian reservations to settlement; the swamp land bill to settle swamp land matters with the states, and the bill to protect our forest reserves.

General Sickles (dem., N. Y.) offered a bill to establish a national military park at Gettysburg, Pa. The bill authorizes the secretary of war to accept from the Gettysburg battlefield association about eight hundred acres of land, being a considerable part of the battlefield. Two thousand dollars, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is to be paid the association in order to allow it to discharge its debts. The secretary is directed to acquire all lands known as the Gettysburg battle field and to establish a national park, and $100,000 is appropriated to enable him to do so.

W. J. Bryan (pop., Neb.) introduced a joint resolution, submitting an amendment to the federal constitution, making the president of the United States ineligible to re-election. Speaking of the resolution Mr. Bryan said: "Mr. Cleveland has explained the necessity for this amendment with so much force and clearness that nothing can be added. In his letter of acceptance written in 1884 he said: "'When an election to office shall be the selection by the voters of one of their number to assume for a time a public trust, instead of his dedication to the profession of politics; when the holders of the ballot, quickened by a sense of duty, shall avenge truth betrayed and pledges broken, and when the suffrage shall be altogether free and uncorrupted, the full realization of a government by the people will be at hand. And of the means to this end not one would, in my judgment, be more effective than an amendment to the constitution disqualifying the president from re-election.'" The resolution was laid over.

Secretary Carlisle has been invited to appear before the house committee on banking and currency to explain more in detail his plan for a new banking system. While the time has not been definitely arranged, it is believed that the secretary will make his appearance on Monday.

A meeting of the full committee has been called at which it is expected all the members will be present, with the possible exception of Mr. Culberson of Texas, who has not yet reached the city.

At this meeting there will be a general discussion of the financial situation, and an effort will be made to reach some understanding of the views of the members on the subject of a new elastic currency.

Some of the democratic members of the committee have held an informal conference regarding the course to be pursued by them, but no conclusion was reached.

Gen. Hooker of Mississippi introduced in the house a bill repealing section 3 of the act providing for the resumption of specie payments. This is the act under which the late bond issues have been made, and the object of the bill is to revoke this power.

Every indication points to a vigorous attack in the house of representatives from the south and west upon the recent bond sales of the treasury department.

Fifty Thousand Dollars Found Buried in His Garden.

Oberlin, Kan., Dec. 7.—The death of Otto Weibler, an old German bachelor, occurred in this country a few days ago.

Weibler was a miser, and it is now stated left over to his daughter $50,000 in money which he had buried in the ground near his sod cabin.

The greater part of this he brought with him from Pennsylvania, where, in his young manhood, he made money rapidly in coal mining enterprises. The day before his death he called Margaret to his bedside and told her he must die. He gave her his blessing and told her to go to a certain place near an apple tree and she would find a large rock. Underneath that she would find in an earthern jar buried in the ground his fortune.

She obeyed him and alone went in search of the treasure. She was skeptical and believed the old man to be flighty, but the money was there—gold, silver and greenbacks, amounting in all to $51,620.

She reported her discovery to the dying man, and as he sank into repose he told her to leave it there until he was laid away in the country graveyard, and then to take it and return to her native state, Pennsylvania.

BAHEN WAS ASSAULTED.

Charges That He Was Beaten While Playing Football.

Washington, Dec. 7.—Proceedings in the criminal court of Washington may be a result of the Thanksgiving day football game between the Columbia Athletic club and Georgetown University, in which Quarterback Bahen, of the university, received such injuries that he lies paralyzed and at the point of death.

Several persons who witnessed the episode assert that Bahen was evidently assaulted with the intention of injuring him and putting him out of the game. Some say that the Columbia men went into the game with the deliberate intention of compelling the best players of the opposite team to retire early, and talked of their plans in the club house before the game.

MADE A RICH HAUL.

Train Robbers Secure $140,000 Near Fort Worth.

Fort Worth, Tex., Dec. 7.—One of the most daring train robberies ever perpetrated in this state occurred eight miles west of here early this morning. The robbers escaped with an amount believed to be $140,000, which was being shipped from San Francisco to Washington, D. C.

An east bound Texas & Pacific express was nearing Mary's Creek when it was stopped by a danger signal. The engineer and fireman were covered with revolvers in the hands of three masked men, who compelled the fireman to break open the express car door. The safes were blown open and the money secured. The bandits then departed.

HARVARD OARSMEN OUT.

Candidates for the 'Varsity Crew Training on the River.

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 7.—The Harvard crew begun active training under the direction of Watson, after several weeks preliminary work on the river. The candidates for the 'varsity are being worked in two crews and have been frequently changed.

There were seventy-five candidates for the freshman crew seven weeks ago, but this number has been reduced to twenty-four. None of the crews will use the rowing tank this year, rowing machines being used instead.

The Eastern League Meeting.

New York, Dec. 7.—At the Eastern Baseball League meeting here, Scranton, Toronto and Rochester were granted franchises. James O'Rourke made a strong plea that one of the vacancies be awarded to Bridgeport; which may be done. There are only two vacancies left to go to Fall River, Paterson, Reading and Newark. A committee was appointed to report upon the advisibility of making a ten club circuit. The meeting then adjourned.

Gave Them Scarlet Fever.

Lowell, Mass., Dec. 7.—Thanksgiving day a homeless girl was admitted to the Ayer home for young women and children. Two days later she became ill with scarlet fever and the infection spread among the other inmates of the home till thirty-nine out of forty-two children in the home are suffering from the disease.

Father Ducey Replies.

New York, Dec. 7.—The Rev. Thomas Ducey, rector of St. Leo's church, has made public a remarkable letter, in which he charges Archbishop Corrigan with ten years persecution. He defends his attendance at the Lexow committe meetings and gives an account of all his dealings with the archbishop.

Dynamiters After Asquith.

London, Dec. 7.—It is stated that at their own request detectives are shadowing Mr. Herbert Asquith, the home secretary; Sir William Vernon Harcourt, chancellor of the exchequer, and Mr. John Morley, chief secretary for Ireland. Fears are entertained of a revival of the Fenian movement.

No Tariff Legislation.

Washington, Dec. 7.—There was a caucus of democratic senators, but they adjourned without providing for the tariff bills, believing that none could pass. Provisions were made for a hearing on the Nicaragua canal, bankruptcy, currency and Arizona and New Mexico bills.

Daring Highway Robbery.

Cincinnati, Dec. 7.—Josephine Brand, of Lawrenceburg, Ind., drew $10,000 from a bank here to deposit at home, and while en route to the depot, a bag containing the money, was snatched from her hand by a thief. The latter escaped.

ARMENIA TO BE HELPED

Citizens Demand That the President Take Action.

Mass Meetings Held and Petitions Circulated Asking Mr. Cleveland and the Czar of Russia To Interfere and Prevent Further Slaughter—More Details from Sassoun.

Boston, Dec. 7.—The society of the Friends of Armenia of this city has begun to circulate a petition to the president of the United States and to the czar of Russia asking them to interfere to prevent the further slaughter of Armenians by the Turks and secure just reparation for the blood already shed.

The petition to the czar will be carried to St. Petersburg by special representatives of the society. Twenty-five hundred copies of the petition are being circulated.

Malden, Mass., Dec. 7.—The residents of this city held a mass-meeting in National hall to protest against the Turkish outrages in Armenia. The grand army post attended in a body, and many well-known persons took part in the proceedings, including Gov. Greenhalge, Julia Ward Howe, William Lloyd Garrison, Miss Alice Stone, and prominent Armenian residents.

Green Bay, Wis., Dec. 7.—Bishop Messmer and Mayor J. H. Elmore, head a petition to President Cleveland reading in part:

"Thousands of bereaved relatives of the cruelly slaughtered people in Armenia stand with bowed heads and hearts mutely appealing to the world to take up their cause. America as the most enlightened nation on earth should not hesitate to first respond, and therefore we, the undersigned citizens of Green Bay, Wis., demand you, illustrious head of an illustrious country to take proper steps to help secure them full, complete reparation for the indignities and losses they have suffered."

Berlin, Dec. 7.—The following narrative from Armenia has been received here:

"Andakh was besieged in August. Grgo with his followers strengthened their position and defended it heroically for six days, generally fighting with stones and daggers. The women often took the places of the men who had been killed.

"The position becoming untenable, Grgo left the women to defend it and took the troops out to forage for food and ammunition. The women maintained the defence twenty-four hours, then yielded to greater numbers after being surrounded on all sides. Their condition was terrible. Many carried babies on their backs, while the elder children stood beside them. The women saw that they could never fight their way through the ranks of the enemy. Grgo's wife stepped on a high rock and cried: 'Sisters, you must choose between two things; either fall into the hands of the Turks and forget your husbands, homes and your holy religion to adopt Islam and to be violated, or you must follow my example.'

"Thereupon, holding her young child in her arms, she dashed herself into the abyss. Others followed her, falling without cry or groan. The children followed their mothers and the ravine was soon filled with corpses. Those who jumped last were not hurt, as their companions' bodies were piled high.

"About fifty women and one hundred children were taken prisoners. The women bore the torture silently and refused to betray Grgo and his brave followers. Grgo's wife was named Schakhe."

London, Dec. 7.—A despatch received here from Constantinople says that Sir Philip Currie, the British ambassador there, is dissatisfied with the Porte's statement that the Armenian outrages were only ordinary acts of brigandage and that he has made further strong representations to the Porte, as Great Britain is aware that the affair partook of the nature of a rising upon the part of the Armenians owing to the intolerable situation, the absence of security for life and property, and the depredations of the Kurds.

Constantinople, Dec. 7.—An Armenian journal in Tiflis reports that the governor of Bitlis recently sent a circular letter to conspicuous Armenians in his district, commanding them to sign an address to the sultan, declaring that all stories of the Sassoun atrocities are untrue. They refused and eight were arrested. It is reported that there is trouble in the Armenian district of Zeitun.

thousands. A fierce-hued flag flashed before his vision.

Immediately, as if the uplifting of the smoke had been prearranged, the discovered troops burst into a rasping yell and a hundred flames jetted toward the retreating band. A rolling, gray cloud again interposed as the regiment doggedly replied. The youth had to depend again upon his misused ears which were trembling and buzzing from the melee of musketry and yells.

The way seemed eternal. In the clouded haze, men became panic-stricken with the thought that the regiment had lost its path and was proceeding in a perilous direction. Once the men who headed the wild procession turned and came pushing back against their comrades screaming that they were being fired upon from points which they had considered to be toward their own troops. A soldier who heretofore had been ambitious to make the regiment into a wise little band that would proceed calmly amid the huge-appearing difficulties, suddenly sank down and buried his face in his arms with an air of bowing to a doom. From another, a shrill lamentation rang out filled with profane allusions to a general. Men ran hither and thither seeking with their eyes roads of escape. With serene regularity as if controlled by a schedule, bullets buffed into men.

The youth walked stolidly into the midst of the mob and, with his flag in his hands, took a stand as if he expected an attempt to push him to the ground. He unconsciously assumed the attitude of the color-bearer in the fight of the preceding day. He passed over his brow a hand that trembled. His breath did not come freely. He was choking during this small wait for the crisis.

His friend came to him. "Well, Flem, I guess this is good-by-John."

"Oh, shut up, you dammned fool," replied the youth and he would not look at the other.

The officers labored like politicians to beat the mass into a proper circle to face the menaces. The ground was uneven and torn. The men curled into depressions and fitted themselves snugly behind whatever would frustrate a bullet.

The youth noted with vague surprise that the lieutenant was standing mutely with his legs far apart and his sword held in the manner of a cane. The youth wondered what had happened to his vocal organs that he no more cursed.

There was something curious in this little intent pause of the lieutenant. He was like a babe which having wept its fill, raises its eyes and fixes upon a distant toy. He was engrossed in this contemplation and the soft under-lip quivered from self-whispered words.

Some lazy and ignorant smoke curled slowly. The men hiding from the bullets, waited anxiously for them to lift and disclose the plight of the regiment.

The silent ranks were suddenly thrilled by the eager voice of the youthful lieutenant bawling out: "Here they come. Right onto us, b' Gawd." His further words were lost in a roar of wicked thunder from the men's rifles.

The youth's eyes had instantly turned in the direction indicated by the awakened and agitated lieutenant, and he had seen the haze of treachery disclosing a body of soldiers of the enemy. They were so near that he could see their features. There was a recognition as he looked at the types of faces. Also he perceived with dim amazement that their uniforms were rather gay in effect, being light gray plentifully accented with a brilliant-hued facing. Too, the clothes seemed new.

These troops had apparently been going forward, with caution, their rifles held in readiness, when the youthful lieutenant had discovered them and their movement had been interrupted by the volley from the blue regiment. From the moment's glimpse, it was derived that they had been unaware of the proximity of their dark-suited foes, or, had mistaken the direction. Almost instantly, they were shut utterly from the youth's sight by the smoke from the energetic rifles of his companions. He strained his vision to learn the accomplishment of the volley, but the smoke hung before him.

The two bodies of troops exchanged blows in the manner of a pair of boxers. The fast, angry firings went back and forth. The men in blue were intent with the despair of their circumstances, and they seized upon the revenge to be had at close range. Their thunder swelled loud and valiant. Their carving front bristled with flashes and the place resounded with the clangor of their ramrods. The youth ducked and dodged for a time, and achieved a few unsatisfactory views of the enemy. There appeared to be many of them, and they were replying swiftly. They seemed moving toward the blue regiment step by step. He seated himself gloomily on the ground with his flag between his knees.

As he noted the vicious, wolf-like temper of his comrades he had a sweet thought that if the enemy was about to swallow the regimental broom as a large prisoner it could at least have the consolation of going down with bristles forward.

But the blows of the antagonist began to grow more weak. Fewer bullets ripped the air, and finally, when the men slackened to learn of the fight, they could see only dark, floating smoke. The regiment lay still and gazed. Presently some chance whim came to the pestering blur and it began to coil heavily away. The men saw a ground vacant of fighters. It would have been an empty stage if it were not for a few corpses that lay thrown and twisted into fantastic shapes upon the sward. At sight of this tableau many of the men in blue sprang from behind their covers and made an ungainly dance of joy. Their eyes burned and a hoarse cheer of elation broke from their dry lips.

It had begun to seem to them that events were trying to prove that they were impotent. Fate had evidently endeavored to demonstrate that the men could not fight well. When on the verge of submission to these opinions the small duel had showed them that the proportions were not impossible, and by it they had revenged themselves upon their misgivings and upon the foe.

The impetus of enthusiasm was theirs again. They gazed about them with looks of uplifted pride, feeling new trust in the grim always-confiden' weapons in their hands.

CHAPTER XVI.

Presently they knew that no firing threatened them. All ways seemed once more opened to them. The dusty blue lines of their friends were disclosed a short distance away. In the distance there were many colossal noises, but in all this part of the field there was a sudden stillness.

They perceived that they were free. The depleted band drew a long breath of relief and gathered itself into a bunch to complete its trip.

In this last length of journey, the men began to show strange emotions. They hurried with nervous fear. Some who had been dark and unfaltering in the grimest moments now could not conceal an anxiety that made them frantic. It was, perhaps, that they dreaded to be killed in insignificant ways after the time for proper military deaths had passed. Or, perhaps, they thought it would be too ironical to get killed at the portals of safety. With backward looks of perturbation they hastened.

They turned, when they arrived at their old position, to regard the ground over which they had charged.

The youth, in this contemplation, was smitten with a large astonishment. He discovered that the distances, as compared with the brilliant measurings of his mind, were trivial and ridiculous. The stolid trees, where much had taken place, seemed incredibly near. The time, too, now that he reflected, he saw to have been short. He wondered at the number of emotions and events that had been crowded into such little spaces. Elfin thoughts must have exaggerated and enlarged everything, he said.

The men were gulping at their canteens, fierce to wring every mite of water from them. And they polished at their swollen and watery features with coat sleeves and bunches of grass. However, to the youth there was a considerable joy in musing upon his performances during the charge. He had had very little time, previously, in which to appreciate himself, so that there was now much satisfaction in quietly thinking of his actions. He recalled bits of color that in the flurry had stamped themselves unawares upon his engaged senses.

Several men came hurrying up. Their faces expressed a bringing of great news.

"Oh, Flem, yeh jest oughta heard," cried one, eagerly.

"Heard what?" said the youth.

"Yeh jest oughta heard," repeated the other, as he arranged himself to tell his tidings. The others made an excited circle. "Well, sir, th' colonel met your lieutenant right by us—it was the derndest thing I ever heard—an' he ses: 'Ahem,' ses he, 'Mr. Hasbrouck,' he ses, 'by th' way, who was that lad what carried th' flag,' he ses. There, Flem, what do yeh think a that? 'Who was the lad what carried th' flag?' he ses, an' the lieutenant, he speaks up right away. 'That's Flemin', an' he's a Jimhickey,' he ses. Th' lieutenant, he ses: 'He's a Jimhickey,' and the colonel, he ses: 'Ahem, he is indeed a very good man t' have.' He kep' th' flag way t' th' front. I saw 'im. He's a good 'un,' ses the colonel. 'You bet,' ses the lieutenant, 'he an' a feller named Wilson was at th' head a th' charge, an' howlin' like Indians, all the time,' he ses. 'Head a the charge all the time,' he ses. 'A feller named Wilson,' he ses. There, Wilson, m' boy, put that in a letter an' send it hum t' yer mother, hey? 'A feller named Wilson,' he ses. An' the colonel, he ses: 'Were they indeed? Ahem, ahem. My sakes,' he ses. 'At th' head o' th' reg'ment?' he ses. 'They were,' ses the lieutenant. 'My sakes,' ses the colonel. He ses: 'Well, well, well,' he ses, 'those two babies?' 'They were,' ses the lieutenant. 'Well, well,' ses the colonel, 'they deserve t' be major generals,' he ses. 'They deserve t' be major generals.'"

SEVERAL MEN CAME.

The youth and his friend said: "Huh." "Yer lyin', Thompson." "Oh, go to blazes." "He never said it." "Oh, what a lie." "Huh." But despite these youthful scoffings and embarrassments they knew that their faces were deeply flushing from thrills of pleasure. They exchanged a secret glance of joy and congratulation.

They speedily forgot many things. The past held no pictures of error and disappointment. They were very happy.

THE DAILY PRESS

ESTABLISHED MAY 10, 1887. PLAINFIELD, N. J., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1894. TWO CENTS A COPY. $5 A YEAR.

THE POSTOFFICE CHANGE.

The Department Wholly in Favor of It.

The proposition of Postmaster Hetfield to remove the postoffice to the Babcock Building, published in The Daily Press last evening, was personally submitted by him to the Department at Washington during the week. The officials expressed delight at the opportunity of giving Plainfield such a superb office, and heartily approved the plans submitted. Mr. Hetfield asked, however, that an inspector be sent to investigate the matter, and the inspector is expected here in a few days. The fittings will be of superior bank style, and in every way Plainfield's new postoffice will be made a modern model.

The Little Prophet.

As has been exclusively announced in The Daily Press, Hermann Warszawiak, "The little Messianic Prophet", who has been preaching to the Jews in New York city, with wonderful results, will speak in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church tomorrow evening, and tell of his work among his people. The Bliss Princeton College quartette will sing at that time, as well as at the morning service of the church.

The story of the prophet's wanderings and of his present great work for the upbuilding of his countrymen in New York cannot help but be of great interest to all who have the welfare of the poor and downtrodden foreign element of our cities at heart. Doubtless Mr. Warszawiak will have a large audience tomorrow evening.

Hope Chapel's Programme.

The entertainment in Hope Chapel Thursday night was a great success. It was given under the direction of Mrs. Fred Canfield, and Mrs. Gow arranged the acrostic which was such a pleasant feature. The programme was as follows:

Chorus—Come Where the Lilies Bloom.
Recitation.....Miss Kittie Larue
Cornet Solo.....Benj. Lavere
Piano accompaniment, Mrs. Fred Canfield.
Recitation.....Miss Edna Harris
Violin and Piano Duet—
Mr. Menzel and Mrs. Canfield
An Acrostic—(God Bless Our Sunday-school), 28 girls
Solo and Quartette Chorus—
Mrs. Wm. Westphal, Miss Maggie Page.
Bertram Tallamy, William Leland.
Recitation.....Miss Kitchen
Comic Song.....Ely Odam
Dialogue—
Miss Maggie Page, Miss Lena Cose.
Miss Lizzie Firstbrook, William Leland.

The Manhattans will bowl the Somerville team next Monday evening at Somerville.

Fanwood vs. Elizabeth.

Another series of the New Jersey Whist League was played at E. L. Kieb's residence, Fanwood, Wednesday evening, between the Fanwood and Elizabeth teams.

The result in totals:

FANWOOD.		ELIZABETH.
F. W. Quereau	10	McConnell	5
McCarthy		Thomas
E. L. Kieb	10	Tolar	5
George Bates		Crane
L. J. Briggs	4	Kellogg	11
A. P. Downer		Darrach

Fanwood winning by three points.

Anyone who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cents bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. BOROUGH SEWERS.

North Plainfield Council Going Ahead.

ORDER FOR PRELIMINARY MAPS.

Street Lighting Investigation Shows the Company to Be Doing the Best It Can, and Promising to Do Better—Arranging for Regular Fire-Alarm Inspection.

It was 8:20 when Mayor Needham called the Borough Council together last evening. All answered to the roll call except Mr. Powell.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read by Clerk Arnold and approved.

The Clerk's report of the borough's finances was as follows:

Fire department	$ 385.65
Light account	188.74
Road account	626.52
	$1,200.91
Deficit	930.89
	$ 270.02

A communication was read from J. P. Humble and others, residents of Somerset street, asking for a crosswalk on Somerset street at the southeast side of Emily street. It was referred to Committee on Streets and Public Health. Charles Debele and others asked Council to provide lights on Clinton avenue from Greenbrook road to Greenbrook. It was referred to the proper committee with power.

Collector Spencer presented a statement of the taxes collected for 1894, which was:

Borough	$ 173.07
Lights	830.72
Roads	588.42
Fire department	484.59
	$2,076 80

The usual batch of monthly claims was read, and after being audited by the proper committees was ordered paid.

Mr. Lounsbury stated that the Sewer Committee had held two or three meetings, and Mayor Gilbert of Plainfield was present, by invitation, at one of them, in consultation. The committee thought it advisable to join with Plainfield in the work, but would not be able to do anything until a suitable map, such as Surveyor F. A. Dunham had furnished Plainfield, was secured. The cost of this would be $200.

Mr. Valiant said that Frank Hubbard of Plainfield had interviewed him and had asked that he be allowed a chance to bid on the map. He was associated with Andrew Gavett on the Plainfield sewer work, and was able to obtain valuable information that would assist him greatly.

Mr. Peck for the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee reported that he had been investigating the matter of lighting the borough, because there had been so many complaints in regard to the poor service given by the Electric Light Company.

The company had given several reasons for the faulty lighting of the streets, and claimed they could furnish a 25-candle power light which was sufficient. The company also claimed that their wires in some cases passed through trees, causing defective insulation. They promised to be more vigilant in maintaining excellent lights, and would do all in their power to give the borough the best possible service. During the month only 36 lights had been found in poor condition. Mr. Peck also stated that the insurance on the engine house had been renewed for three years, and by a resolution asked that J. F. Buckle be given a certificate of membership in the engine company, which was adopted.

Mr. Valiant of the Street Committee stated that the work of repairing Linden avenue was about finished. The trouble had been with Smalley Bros., who had failed to furnish the stone as quickly as needed. The prospects for pushing the work on Somerset street were poor, as the appropriation was almost exhausted. Therefore the residents could not expect very much this Winter. Mr. Valiant reported that a crosswalk had been laid at Linden avenue and Duer street.

Mr. Valiant offered the following resolutions:

Be it resolved, That a walk be laid in front of the property 96—98 Jackson avenue, and the cost of the same be charged to the property owner.

Be it resolved, That warrants be drawn in favor of the pay-rolls for $408.24.

These were adopted.

Mr. Neal made a motion that the matter of securing a map for the borough, be referred to the Sewer Committee with power, the same not to cost over $200, which was carried.

The Mayor stated that the commitee had seen a map similar to the one the borough needed, and felt as though the committee would make no mistake in their purchase.

Mr. Valiant said that the only idea he had in the matter was that Mr. Hubbard might do it cheaper and just as good.

Mr. Lounsbury did n't think the work ought to be given to the cheapest man. Mr. Neal agreed with him.

The Clerk reported that the Collector would have a sufficient amount of money to meet the two notes of about $1,800, and the Council authorized the Mayor and Clerk to instruct the Collector to pay the same.

Mr. Peck thought that the Council should make some provision for a proper care of the fire-alarm system, it being absolutely necessary to have a man ready to repair it in case of break, which might occur any time. He had been informed that the work could be done for about $100 a year.

Mr. Lounsbury heartily agreed with Mr. Peck, and moved that the matter be referred to the proper committee with power, which was carried.

There being no further business, Council adjourned at 9:05

SCHOOL CHILDREN.

Thousands of Them Need at Times the Trolley.

In the city and borough there are nearly three thousand children that attend the schools, public and private. One half of this number are under ten years of age. The teachers and school officials consider it important, for many good and sound reasons, that the junior half, as well as the older half, should be present at each school session. When it is remembered that the two Plainfields cover fully ten square miles, it must be conceded that we are sadly lacking in public conveyances so far as the gathering of the children into the schools on inclement days is concerned. "Three thousand children to school", is the command; in the teeth of driven and pitiless storms, through slush, slush, over roads that in many cases invite "colds", which in turn invite a legion of other troubles.

The two Plainfields are certainly rich enough, populous enough, humane enough, to care well for their children. If there were no other need, the trolley extensions should be made for their sake. When they need a public conveyance, they need one very much It is not, in their case, a matter of convenience or pleasure, but one of health, education and success in life.

The trolley lines cannot be placed in front of every door, but there will be no serious difficulty in so locating the lines that almost every child can escape a drenching in a heavy storm. One line should pass the door of each school building, and a system of transfers would do the rest. The trolley people understand the subject; and if the city authorities will properly locate the lines, the convenience of the children can safely be left to the managers when they take up the task of securing needful patronage.

The Wonder Explained—True Merit Tells.

Some pretty tall considering has been done by many Plainfield people, and now it has reached Brooklyn and New York and other cities, how it is that Edsall can maintain such a large and magnificent store; stocked as it is to its utmost capacity with the finest goods that can be had, both from foreign and domestic manufacturers, in a city so small as Plainfield and so near the metropolis of this country. The crowds that visit this popular house number up in the thousands, who make liberal purchases, and are free to say that they do just as well as in stores in the larger cities. The wonder is easily settled by those who have done business with this reliable house; it is simply wide-awake enterprise and true merit.

All who patronize this well-known house will testify to this statement, and take much local pride in sustaining an establishment second to none in the country, and one of which they may be justly proud.

Chimney Afire.

William Pangborn, who boards with Frank Conshee at 57 Pearl street, was awakened at 4:45 this morning by the smell of smoke. At first he thought Mr. Conshee was building a wood fire, but the smoke began to enter his room and he was alarmed. Getting out of bed, he made a search and found the chimney was afire. Dressing himself hurriedly he went to the Electric Light Company's plant and got a key for box 141, which he pulled. The department responded quickly, and soon extinguished the fire.

A considerable amount of water was thrown in the house, doing more damage than the fire. However, the loss will be slight.

Grace M. E. to Have a Fair.

The Epworth League of Grace M. E Church had a very pleasant time at the home of Mr. Townsend on Craig place last evening. During the business session it was decided to hold a fair in the church Thursday and Friday of next week.

The rest of the evening was given up to sociability and refreshments.

PLAINFIELD RIDING CLUB.

The Proposed Horse Show Next February.

The Plainfield Riding Club met Thursday night at the Riding Academy, and went through a very interesting drill under the efficient tutelage of John I. Holly. Those present were:

Miss Henderson, Miss Vail, Miss Holly, Mrs. Opdyke, Mr. and Mrs. Serrell, Mr. and Mrs. Pentz, and Messrs. J. W. Johnson, Harry Johnson, Roome, Henderson, Butterfield, VanBoskerck, Charles and Samuel McCutchen, Vail and Broadway.

Hereafter, Monday evenings will be used for practice, and the regular class drills will take place Thursdays.

A four-days horse show will be given by the club in February, much after the pattern of the New York affair. Novel features will be introduced each evening, and many prizes will be awarded. Large delegations will be present from New York, Brooklyn and Philadelphia, and the function promises to be a grand social success for its promoters. Details will be given as they develop.

Why the Lights Are Out.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—Noticing the complaint in your issue of yesterday from residents of West End avenue and vicinity that their street lights have not burned for some time, I wish to state that it is simply and only because the lamps are broken as fast as we put them in, and this being the case we find it cheaper to pay the fine than to furnish targets for the small boy. Armed with a slingshot he sallies forth and tries his skill. The lamps make an excellent target for when struck they explode with a loud report. In the evening when the indulgent parent goes to his club the lights are out and he immediately informs The Press. I once received complaint from a councilman in the Park that the lights in front of his house had not burned for a week. They had been renewed seven times at a cost to the company of more than they received for burning the lamps two months and the boy who broke them was a near relative of the councilman making the complaint. When the contract was renewed last January I informed the Council that we could not afford to light the borough at a lower rate as so many lamps were destroyed, and they assured me we should have protection. The rate was reduced $2 per lamp. The same marshals are in office, the lamps continue to be broken, whole fixtures are broken down by loads of hay or vans—sometimes with the marshals looking on. No arrests are made—the light company pays the bills and gets the blame. Where is the remedy?

JUSTUS H. COOLEY,
Secretary Edison Electric Light Co.

At The Casino.

Arrangements are now completed for the recital of Thursday evening, December 13, by Miss Addie Parker Jackson, reader, and P. Ludwig Conde, violinist. The programme will include numbers by Prof. Conde's Symphony Orchestra, and the Rubinstein Quintette. Miss Jackson will give as a Christmas number "The Angel and the Shepherds" from "Ben Hur", in which she will be assisted by Grace Church Choir Boys.

Prof. Conde's solos will be doubly attractive, rendered upon his old and valuable instrument, the Amati violin, recently purchased by him while in Germany.

Tickets, seventy-five cents, are on sale at Reynolds's, Randolph's, Shaw's, and Leggett's.

Relief Corps Sociable.

A parlor meeting was held at the home of Mrs. I. L. McVoy, East Front street, last evening, attended by the Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73. The evening was spent in a pleasant social way, and refreshments were served.

Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Morse, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Walker, Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Terry, Mrs. Summers, Mrs. Radin, Mrs. Corwin, Miss Laura Radin, Miss Nash, Mrs. Leland, Mr. and Mrs. I. L. McVoy, H. C. McVoy, Percy McVoy, and Raymond McVoy.

Originality

If properly applied commends itself to lasting respect. Fifty years ago your grandmother learned about "Hecker's Farina"; that it was made from the best selected wheat; that it was delicate, easily digested, nourishing and very palatable: Do you know as much as your grandmother? Do you use Hecker's Farina for desserts, for baby, for the convalescent? What a pity, but your grocer can supply you. Hecker's Farina is "the original".

—A regular meeting of the Committee on Fires and Buildings was held last evening. Several matters of importance were discussed.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. V. The prompt relief it affords is alone worth many times the cost, 50 cents. Its continued use will effect a permanent cure. For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

NEWS OF NEAR NEIGHBORS.

Fanwood.

Mrs. E. L. Kieb is confined to the house by a complication of physical troubles occasioned by the inclement weather of last week.

L. J. Briggs is off for a trip to the South on business taking in Washington, Richmond and Lynchburg.

The Choral Union of the Baptist Church is rehearsing for a cantata soon to be rendered, and from the audience assembled outside the church at the Thursday evening recital the music is already so highly appreciated as to guarantee an immense assemblage at its formal rendition.

Mr. Haight of the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company, now occupying the residence of Captain George F. Hamlin, has gone into the chicken raising business on an extensive scale, he having purchased of Mr. Sieor, the late proprietor of the Scotch Plains Hotel, his chicken plant numbering 105. There are some games among them.

The Central Railroad Company are now replanking the overhead bridge at Martine avenue and have protected the approach to the bridge west of the station by a neat iron railing.

The Prodigal Daughter.

In many respects "The Prodigal Daughter", which comes to Music Hall Dec. 12 and 13, is the best English melodrama that has ever been made known here. The horses are real, the running is real, the jumping is real. The audience is actually misled into believing it a real race, and it almost gets as excited as the crowd on the stage. The steeplechasers fly along as if they had taken the bit in their teeth, and they go over the hurdles and water jumps as recklessly as if there was a vast stretch of country ahead of them.

Plainfield Soloists to Sing.

The cantata of "Daniel" will be given by the Scotch Plains Choral Union Thursday evening, Dec. 13, at 8, in the Scotch Plains Baptist Church, under the leadership of Prof. Fitzhugh. The soloists will be Horace Martin and William Runyon of Plainfield, Miss Hoffman of New York, and Mr. Lightowler of New York. Plainfield stages will leave Shaw's drug store at 7:30, and the church at the close of the concert.

Watchung Avenue Surprise.

Members of the North Plainfield "Four Hundred" very pleasantly surprised their friends, Mr. and Mrs. Schroder of Watchung avenue last night. Dancing, games, pleasant repartee and the discussion of a most dainty banquet caused the time to slip swiftly away, and it was not until a late hour that the party said "Au revoir, but not good bye" to their genial host and hostess and dispersed to their homes.

B. Fay Mills in Yonkers.

B. Fay Mills, the evangelist, yesterday held a big revival meeting in Music Hall, Yonkers. The city presented a Sunday appearance. All the big mills and places of business were closed during the hours the services were going on, and the employes of the different places attended the revival meetings. Music Hall was crowded and remained so all during the services.

Carmen.

The Duff Grand and Comic Opera Company, from the very best theatres in New York city, where it has sung over one thousand times in the masterworks of the greatest composers, will appear in Music Hall Dec. 14, in its finest production, "Carmen; or, the Bull Fighter". The costumes, stage settings, and general effects, were manufactured in New York and London expressly for this opera.

Fractured a Leg and an Arm.

While Matthias Townley was working on his house on Elmer street, Westfield, the scaffolding gave way and he fell to the ground. Though the distance from the scaffold to the ground was but seven feet, one of Mr. Townley's arms was broken in two places, above and below the elbow, and one leg was broken above the knee.

Plainfield Master Plumbers.

Last evening's meeting of the Master Plumbers in in Odd Fellows Hall was well attended. An interesting address was delivered by President Hickman of the Paterson Association, who was introduced by President John H. Carney. Several new members were admitted.

Footprints in the Forest.

Doane & Edsall have an exceedingly novel and attractive Christmas window in which is displayed a profusion of the most artistic novelties in Christmas slippers and children's moccasins. A happy combination of forest, snow, and footwear results in forming a display of unusual attractiveness.

Always Alert.

Alert Hose Company have added a novel and convenient basket to their carriage for the purpose of carrying coats, hats and boots. The basket sets directly back of the driver's seat and can be instantly removed when necessary.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTEBOOK.

The quarterly examinations have completed, and everyone has settled down to routine work again. The advanced Physics class has taken up the study of Light, and is now working at the magic lantern.

The Astronomy class has begun the study of the moon and is fast learning the different constellations. The Senior Literature class has been enjoying Chaucer's Canterbury Tales and the different characters described therein.

The prize essay contest will bring out quite a number of contestants. The change from a competition open to the whole school to one confined to each class will add greatly to the number of competitors.

The Senior class now spend the period immediately after morning exercises in discussing the most important topics of the day. Many of these interesting discussions will form subjects for some of the coming essays of the Senior class. The newspaper report, usually held Monday morning, is still a very important exercise of the class. The Geometry class has just taken up the study of the theory of limits.

The various classes have appointed committees to confer together and select school colors and a school yell.

The Kappa Delta Phi held its regular meeting yesterday afternoon. Several amendments to the constitution were passed relating particularly to the office of programme committee. Henry Eggerding '96 was elected programme committee. Carl C. Gallup '96, Wilbur F. Cornwell '96, and Henry B. Drake '95 were appointed a committee to decorate the boxes at Music Hall. A committee composed of Chas. Noble '96 and Arthur B. Crane '97 was appointed a committee to choose a Kappa Delta Phi yell.

The High School Lyceum met at the High School at 3:30 for its regular weekly meeting. Mr. Travell gave a very interesting talk on the national currency, its present condition and various changes proposed. A hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Travell for his very interesting and instructive address. After a business session spent mostly in discussing plans for the future of the Lyceum, the meeting adjourned. NINETY-FIVE.

B. P. O. ELKS.

First Stag Social of Elizabeth Lodge, No. 289—A Lodge Talked of in Plainfield.

The first social session of Elizabeth Lodge, B. P. O. Elks, was held at their rooms in the Drake Opera House last evening. Many out-of-town Elks were present, among whom were: District Deputy Hausser and Brothers Gifford, Jacques, Hopkins, Holmes, Pridham and Mallit, all of Newark Lodge, No. 21; Mr. Courtney of Philadelphia Lodge, No. 2, and W. S. Bullock of Atlantic City Lodge, No. 276. Plainfield was represented by Messrs. Gilbride, Force, Trust and Bullock.

Deputy Hausser presented Elizabeth Lodge with a beautiful Bible on behalf of Newark Lodge, No. 21, the presentation speech being made by Past E. L. G. Knight O. F. Gifford.

Among those who added to the "Feast of reason and the flow of soul" which followed were: Messrs. Gifford, Hausser, Mullen, Rigby, Squire, Drake, Kelly, Eick, and Bullock.

The Drake Opera House Orchestra discoursed music during the evening.

Mr. Gannon of the New York World delivered the closing address. Deputy Hausser expressed the hope that a Lodge might be started in Plainfield in the near future, and as there are already several Elks in the city a movement will doubtless soon be made with that end in view.

P. M. W., V. W. Nash.

Columbia Lodge, No. 58, A. O. U. W., last night elected the following officers:

Past Master Workman—Vincent W. Nash.
Master Workman—Wm. H. Woodruff.
Foreman—Julius Bauersachs.
Overseer—G. T. Dunham.

UNITED STATES TO HELP

An American Delegate Is To Visit Sassoun.

President Cleveland Reconsiders His Determination and Cables the Sultan That a Commissioner from Our Legation Will Take Part in the Armenian Inquiry—Latest News.

Washington, Dec. 8.—The indignation of the American people at the awful slaughter of defenceless Christian women and children in Armenia, has proven so great that President Cleveland could not pursue the policy of non-interference in the massacres, which he first attempted. Thousands of petitions and great meetings all over the country have had their effect, and an American commissioner will visit the Sassoun districts, where the men have been fighting for their liberty and religion and women for life and honor. President Cleveland has sent a cable message to the sultan at Constantinople saying that he had reconsidered his decision not to send an American delegate with the Turkish commission appointed to inquire into the Armenian outrages.

The president adds that he will instruct the American legation here to nominate a delegate to accompany the Porte's Armenian commission.

The Turkish government is manifesting a great desire to satisfy the powers that the United States government was the first asked to send a delegate with the Armenian commission, but the United States declined. The Earl of Kimberley, the British secretary of state for foreign affairs, was also requested to nominate a delegate, and he immediately assented.

London, Dec. 8.—A dispatch from Constantinople says:

"The reports of the Armenian outrages are confirmed from various sources. A Lazzarist priest from Van says in an interview that he has not been able to discover the cause of the massacres at Sassoun. He believed that the victims numbered 2,000, and the regular troops were the actual murderers and violators.

"The despatch also says that since the sultan invited President Cleveland to send a delegate with the Armenian commission he has requested Gen. Blunt Pasha to go to Bitlis on a similar errand. Gen. Blunt's health, however, prevents him from accepting the invitation."

The Daily News says that Milo A. Jewett, United States consul in Sivas, has been instructed from Washington to attend the commission of inquiry in Armenia, while maintaining a strictly independent attitude toward representatives of European powers.

Varna, Dec. 8.—After a long delay the czar has sent a cold and formal acknowledgment of the sultan's effusive message promising to send a special mission to congratulate the emperor on his marriage.

The character of the reply is supposed to be intended as a mark of the czar's displeasure on account of the Sassoun outrages.

MORTON IN NO HURRY.

He Will Only Make Appointments After Inauguration.

Rhinecliff, N. Y., Dec. 8.—Governor-elect Morton has said in regard to the question of judicial appointments:

"I have received a very large number of applications from all part of the state. I am considering the question of my power to appoint under the authority conferred by the new constitution, but have reached no decision in the matter.

"It was neccessary that I should select the members of my military staff prior to my inauguration, but no further selections for any offices will be decided upon until after I have officially assumed my duties."

Awaited Death in the Snow.

Providence, R. I., Dec. 8.—Matthew Doolin died at the city hospital here from a dose of arsenic, taken with suicidal intent. Doolin spent several hours in Gardner's saloon, singing comic songs and skylarking. He then went to a drug store and bought some arsenic, which he said was to kill rats. He went back to Gardner's and swallowed the poison. He told his companions what he had done, but they did not believe him and chaffed him. In great agony Doolin went out and rolled himself in the snow, where he was found by the police.

BUSINESS IN THE HOUSE

Members Discuss Currency and Railroad Pools.

Congressmen Grow of Pennsylvania and Cockran of New York Lead the Debate—Mr. McCall's Plan To Simplify Contested Elections—Disposal of the President's Message.

Washington, Dec. 8.—The senate was not in session, having adjourned until Monday. In the house an hour was spent in the consideration of the bill to protect forest reservations, but no vote was had, and the remainder of the day was occupied in the further discussion of the railroad pooling bill.

The debate was participated in by Messrs. Bartlett (dem., N. Y.), Cockran (dem., N. Y.), and Wise (dem., Va.), in support, and Messrs. Bryan (pop., Neb.) and Northway (rep., O.), in opposition to the bill.

The speech of Mr. Cockran was especially brilliant, and for almost an hour held the house spellbound. It is expected that a final vote will be reached on Tuesday of next week.

"I had not intended to intervene in this debate," said Mr. Cockran, "until the remarkable speech of the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. Bryan) on the relations of railroads to the community induced me to make a contribution to the discussion.

"He told us that it was impossible to have competition between railroads, and from that he proceeded to argue that it was unjust, unwise, undemocratic and unpatriotic to interfere with competition between railroads.

"Now, I have always believed that there is little that can be said in denunciation of railway management that would do justice to the subject. I have always deplored the fact that the courts, which were so ready to invent methods of preventing strikes of laborers against railroads, have never been able to discover a method to prevent robbery and peculation by the directors of railroads.

"I have always felt that the financial condition of this country would be substantially improved if a few railroad financiers were sent to jail. But this is not a question of what is best for the railroads, but of what is best for the community."

A resolution offered by Mr. Wilson (dem., W. Va.) was passed distributing the president's message among the several appropriate committees. On this resolution the house was briefly addressed by ex-Speaker Grow (rep., Pa.), who presented his views in regard to amendments to the national bank act necessary to secure the desired elasticity of the currency issued by the banks.

"For thirty years," he said, "the present national banking system has been in operation, and no holder of any national bank bill has ever lost a dollar nor would such loss occur as long as it continues. The system furnishes a sound circulating medium and has met all the requirements of the people with the exception, perhaps of elasticity

"I believe the present law should remain exactly as it is, except that the banks should be allowed to deposit money as well as bonds for circulation, and take out $110 on every $100 in money deposited, and circulation up to the par value of the bonds.

"State banks, should have the same rights of issue with the same liability to the government, together with personal liability of the stockholders.

"To prevent undue contraction, no bank should be allowed to redeem its circulation at a higher rate than 10 per cent. each month, and no bank should be allowed to reduce its circulation below 25 per cent., except to go into liquidation."

"If a bank can take $110 in circulation on $100 of money, where is the elasticity of your system?" asked Mr. Hall (dem., Mo.) "Certainly nowhere except in allowing the reduction of bank reserves from 25 per cent. to 10 per cent. during the months of October, November and December, the period when the crops are moved.

"I do not see how an elastic currency can be based on a non-elastic substrata, like a bond or a legal tender dollar. An elastic currency must be based on an elastic credit."

Mr. Grow said that no sound currency could be based on credit. In the final adjustment a dollar must be behind every dollar of circulation.

Mr. McCall (rep., Mass.) introduced a bill relating to the contested elections of members of that body.

Mr. McCall proposes to allow the United States circuit courts first to pass upon the claims of contestants and to decide which entitled, prima facia, to the seat. The one in whose favor the court decides is to be seated and is to participate in the organization of the house.

The house, however, is to be the final judge of all contested cases and can overrule the decision of the court. The house then adjourned.

Fleming's Murderous Record.

Charleston, W. Va., Dec. 8.—Officers have arrived here with requisitions for Hernon Fleming, who is wanted for killing Ira Mullins and wife, Wilson Mullins and son, Joseph Smith, a driver, and two horses, on the highway in Wirt county, Va., three years ago. Fleming killed Detective Brougham in Webster county, W. Va., a year ago, and was tried and acquitted.

CHARGES AGAINST TILLMAN.

The Populist Governor Accused of Many Dishonest Transactions.

Columbia, S. C., Dec. 8.—Quite a sensation has been caused here by the circulation among the members of the general assembly, in pamphlet form of a letter, written by B. F. Perry, a Carolinian, now in Washington, and bearing the date Washington, Dec. 1 to Josh W. Ashley, a member of the house, charging ex-Governor Tillman with all kinds of dishonest transactions, and urging Ashley to call on the legislature for the appointment of a committee to investigate the matter. He says in the letter:

"Tillman denied at Union, during the canvass, that he had ever received the rebate of seven cents a gallon on the whiskey he bought from the whiskey trust. I am creditably informed that he did receive that rebate, and a check was sent him for the amount, and he returned the check and asked them to send the money in currency by express; that the money was sent and received by Tillman, amounting to many thousand dollars, that ought to have gone to the credit of the tax payers.

"Furthermore, I am informed that the railroad company that transported the liquor paid Tillman a rebate on the freight.

"I understand that Tillman got a good slice out of that Port Royal lawsuit, and that is the reason why Tillman is afraid of Irby. There is no doubt that Tillman and John Evans got a good slice out of the $118,000 given to Rhind in funding the senate debt. Why don't you demand a committee to investigate these things?"

BUSINESS IS BETTER.

Bradstreet's Report Shows an Improvement in Trade.

New York, Dec. 8.—Bradstreet's report on the general condition of business in the country says:

"The improving character of trade of late is showing itself in bank clearings totals, they for this week amounting to $1,161,600,000, an increase of 44 per cent. over the preceding week.

"Nearly all the larger cities show gains. Totals at 55 cities for November aggregate $4,103,494,262, against $4,033,398,296 in November a year ago and $4,228,287,550 in October this year. For eleven months the total is $40,742,913,363, a decrease of 17.9 per cent. from last year and of 26.8 per cent. from a year ago.

"In industrial lines, woolen and cotton goods mills and shoe factories are fairly busy, but production of Bessemer pig iron, as well as of some other varieties, continues slightly in excess of demand, although there have been several sales of iron and steel for 1895 delivery at very low prices.

"The going into effect of the new wool tariff on January 1 checks operations in woolens, in which there is a prospect of further reduction in prices."

FOUGHT A PITCHED BATTLE.

Two Men Killed and Several Others Wounded in Oklahoma.

Guthrie, O. T., Dec. 8.—A regular pitched battle took place on the highway between Alva and Eagle Chief in which James Brown, J. R. Knight, Charles Kitchen, Sam Wescott and a man called "One-Eye-Taylor," who live near Eagle Chief took part, and who were returning home drunk.

On the road they met Sam Crocker, and three rangers en route to Alva. The drunken men stopped and one without provocation opened fire on Crocker.

Immediately a fusillade of shots followed and a regular battle ensued. Kitchen and Brown were killed outright, Sam Wescott was maimed for life, and Taylor was fatally wounded. One of the rangers was seriously wounded. During the fight a deputy marshal rode along and received a severe wound from a stray bullet.

FREEHOLDERS INDICTED.

A Newark Grand Jury Charges Them with Misdemeanors.

Newark, N. J., Dec. 8.—The grand jury which has just finished its work found six indictments against the freeholders, the entire building and lunacy committees of the old board being indicted for misdemeanors in charging exorbitant rates for supplies.

Messrs. Ripley, Lupton, Cahill, Oury and McLaughlin, members of the board, appeared in court and pleaded "not guilty."

The first four named furnished bail in the sum of $2,000 each. McLaughlin was released on $1,000 bail. J. J. Hanly, the sixth of the indicted freeholders, did not make his appearance in court. The day for the trials has not yet been fixed.

End of the Last Turnpike.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 8.—F. J. Kingsbury, of Waterbury, and F. F. Davidson, of Bethel, were named by the superior court as a committee to determine the damages resulting from the opening and abolition of the Derby turnpike. This is the last of the toll roads in the state. There will be no opposition made by the Turnpike company. The company was chartered about one hundred years ago and has always been a paying investment for its stockholders. The capital stock is $10,000 and for a number of years has paid seven and eight per cent.

Arrested the Wrong Man.

Wichita, Kan., Dec. 8.—L. Harndon, the man supposed to be J. W. Hillmon, arrested at Tucson, has been released, his friends having proved that he is not the man wanted. D. B. Harndon, a brother of the accused lives here and got the news of the release. Hillmon is the man who it is said to have been killed in southern Kansas 18 years ago, when his life had been insured for $80,000. The company has refused to pay the policies to his heirs, claiming that they have evidence that Hillmon is still alive.

Three Victims in the Forecastle.

Boston, Dec. 8.—Three bodies were found at low tide in the forecastle of the sunken Provincetown schooner Gracie Benson.

REMARKABLE CURES

Of Recent Date.

A Statement from Ex-Mayor John Corson, Esq., of Clinton, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

I acknowledge with the utmost pleasure the wonderful cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in my case.

I had been a sufferer from piles, which gave me constant pain and distress, during twenty long years, attended with frequent loss of blood and with great and painful protrusion of the pile tumors and rectum whenever my bowels moved.

I tried constantly to get relief from my sufferings, but to no purpose until Mr. Bryan, a friend of mine, who had been cured by Dr. Lighthill of the same trouble, recommended him to me, and he effected a complete and radical cure in my case also, and earned my lifelong gratitude.

JOHN CORSON.

THE CASE OF MR PETER G. EYCK, OF BISSELL, HUNTERDON CO., N. J.

Dr. Lighthill Effects a Complete Cure Where Ten Physicians Had Failed.

TO THE SICK, SUFFERING AND AFFLICTED:

For many years past I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. Every movement of the bowels was attended with loss of blood and with intense pain which lasted for hours and sometimes all day. My condition was aggravated by a prolapse of the rectum, which greatly increased my suffering and sometimes gave me most agonizing pains.

So great was my distress and so bad my condition that I sold my farm, not being able to work it any longer. At one time the protruding pile tumors became so highly inflamed and swollen that they could not be replaced, and I had to go to bed, applying hot poultices for three months before I could get relief.

I had been under the treatment of ten different physicians, some of New York City, Easton, Washington and elsewhere, without any benefit whatever, and had given up my case as hopeless when, luckily for me, I heard of Dr. Lighthill's skill and success in such cases, and went to him for treatment, with the happy result that he effected a radical and permanent cure in less than four weeks's time; and I am glad to say that the entire treatment gave me neither pain nor distress.

I consider my cure perfectly wonderful, and so do all my friends and neighbors. I am confident that there is no case of piles which Dr. Lighthill cannot cure.

PETER G. EYCK,
Bissell, Hunterdon Co., N. J.

ATTACKED HER SOLDIERS.

Mexico May Be Compelled To Fight Pugnacious Guatemala.

City of Mexico, Dec. 8.—If reports received from the border are true, Mexico can no longer delay a declaration of war against Guatemala. It is claimed that the Guatemalans have assassinated a Mexican colonel, member of the staff of Gen. Lullane, and from unofficial sources it is reported that a company of the Nineteenth battalion of the Mexican forces have had two skirmishes with a force of 400 Guatemalan guerrillas.

The first assault on the Mexican troops was a harmless skirmish, but the second resulted in two Mexican soldiers being killed.

The Guatemalans retreated hastily and it is not known that they suffered any material damage.

They are reported as still hovering about the vicinity of the Mexican troops, but it is believed that after making the attack they retired to the Guatemalan side of the international line.

Should official information confirm these reports, the Mexican government will at once take action.

ATTACKED THE MINISTERS.

Socialist Deputies Cause a Disturbance in the Italian Chamber.

Rome, Dec. 8.—Napoleone Colajanni, socialist deputy for Castro-giovanni, questioned the government in the chamber concerning the disappearance of important official documents which were needed to fix the blame in the Banca Romana scandal. Premier Crispi replied that he had no power to explain the matter.

Camillo Prampolini, socialist for Guastalla, then made a violent attack upon the ministers, whom he denounced as the protectors of rich criminals.

The socialists in the chamber are more unruly than ever before, as they are smarting under the severity with which their former colleague, De Felice, was treated by the government.

The chamber on Tuesday will discuss the enforced dissolution of socialist and anarchist societies throughout the kingdom. A stormy session is expected.

HILL'S NARROW ESCAPE.

Attempt To Wreck the Train on Which He Was Riding.

Charleston, S. C., Dec. 8.—A special says that an attempt was made near Florence, S. C., last night to wreck the north bound passenger train on the Atlantic Coast line. A piece of timber fourteen feet long was laid on the track parellel with and between the rails.

The engine, mail, baggage and first class cars passed over the obstruction, but the sleeper trucks caught the timber dragged it for a mile, when the trucks of the sleeper were turned across the track, tearing it up for several hundred yards.

The train was running sixty miles an hour, and had it left the track at this point it would have gone down a thirty-five foot embankment and resulted in great loss of life. As it was no special harm was done.

Senator Hill, of New York, was aboard the train in a special car.

CONFESSED THEIR CRIME.

Hoyt and Davis Plead Guilty and Meet with Mercy.

Hartford, Conn., Dec. 8.—John Davis, alias J. W. Murphy, and Russell B. Hoyt, the Bethel counterfeiters, whose arrest created such a sensation last summer, were arraigned in the United States district court before Judge William K. Townsend.

George N. Gunn was assigned as counsel for the men.

A large quanity of plates, presses and tools unearthed at Bethel by the United States inspectors was exhibited in court.

Both men pleaded guilty and each was sentenced to eight years in the state prison. The judge said in imposing sentence that the age and debility of Davis, and the previous good record of Hoyt induced leniency. The maximum penalty is fifteen years.

KILLED BY DYNAMITE.

Four Men Fatally Injured in an Explosion at Boston.

Boston, Dec. 8.—While six men were excavating at Elm place and Seaver street, several dynamite cartridges exploded, and four men were fatally and two seriously injured. Those who will die are John McCann, James Clancy, James Goteley and P. Leonard. John McShale and John Cronin were seriously, but not fatally injured.

The men had fired a blast, but unknown to them three cartridges had failed to explode.

Must Let Catholics Alone.

Posen, Dec. 8.—The czar has ordered General Gurko, military governor of Warsaw, to cease persecuting Catholics, and to stop interfering in the affairs of the Catholic clergy. For years the Catholics have suffered at the hands of the Greek church, which has persecuted them through Russian officials.

Gold Mine Products.

Washington, Dec. 8.—The treasury officials announce that the output of the gold mines this year will amount to $43,000,000.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

COTTOLENE IS MADE TO EAT

Made from clarified oil, expressed from Cotton Seed—as pure and golden as the Southern Sunshine which produces it.

For convenience in handling, there is added to this oil enough beef suet to make it a semi-solid.

The combination of these two pure natural products makes Cottolene, a shortening and cooking fat, with which in healthfulness, cleanliness, flavor and economy, nothing in the world can compare.

IMITATIONS are MADE TO SELL

To sell on the merits of the genuine. To sell by substitution; or by deception. To sell to the injury of the genuine, to the dissatisfaction of the consumer, to the detriment of the dealer, to the loss of all concerned—except the scheming counterfeiter himself.

If you wish the best food and the best health, you should insist that your cooking be done with genuine Cottolene. Refuse all counterfeits.

Sold in 3 and 5 pound pails.

CHINESE RELIGION.

THE DOCTRINE BELIEVED BY FOUR HUNDRED MILLIONS.

Confucius and His Personality. Of the Hereafter He Said: While I Can Tell so Little About Life, What Can I Tell About Death.

Confucius is a great historic personality. His history is as true and as real to the four hundred millions of Chinese as that of George Washington is to the sixty-eight millions of Americans.

On the banks of the River Sze, to the north of the capital city of Lee, at the end of a fine avenue of old cypress trees, and in the midst of a shady forest of oak, is the burial place and the tomb of Confucius. It is a huge mound, over grown with trees and shrubs, and at the end stands a tablet twenty-five feet high by six broad, on which are engraved the name and the doings of Confucius the Sage.

No historian has ever ventured to doubt the genuineness of this tomb. The burial places of Virgil, of Homer, and even of Alexander the Great are still unknown. But such is not the case with that of one whose name and teachings have influenced the great world of China for twenty-three centuries or more.

Confucius flourished at the very time when Pythagoras established his school of philosophy at Crotona, when Cyrus the King permitted the Jews to rebuild their temple, and when Haggai the prophet uttered those words which now form a part of our Sacred Scriptures. He was born 551 before Christ, when the prophet Daniel received his visions, and he died at the advanced age of 73, just about the time when the Athenians were rebuilding the walls of their city, and becoming great among the nations of the earth.

He was poor, and at an early age became a public store keeper. Having committed the indiscretion of contracting marriage when he was only nineteen, and the marriage proving unhappy, he finally divorced his wife after she had borne him a son. At the age of 21 we find him released from the toils of office, and devoting his time to the more congenial task of imparting instruction to a band of admiring students. With idle and stupid scholars he had no patience. "I open the truth," he would say, "to those who thirst after knowledge. I help only those who want to help themselves. My teaching is in a solid square, but I present only one corner of a subject, and I expect my pupils to find out the other corners."

The people flocked to him for information upon every conceivable topic, and when he was but thirty years of age he was surrounded by a company of 3,000 disciples.

A prophet has no honor in his own country or among his own people. This was a proverb in the ancient Oriental world, and just as the Man of Nazareth was rejected by the people of Judea, and Mohammed had to flee from the people of Mecca, and Socrates was poisoned by his fellow citizens, so was Confucius the Sage compelled to flee from the people of his own city.

And yet during his lifetime he had for a short period the satisfaction of seeing the beneficent results of his principles. "Crime ceased," we are told, "dissoluteness and dishonesty hid their heads. Loyalty and good faith became the characteristics of the men; chastity and docility those of the women.

Confucius taught nothing about God. He believed in God. He believed in a great ruler of the universe, but when asked for his opinion about death he answered: "While I can tell you so little about life, what can I tell you about death?"

The Christian apostle tells us that life and immortality have been brought to light through the Gospel, and therefore in the religious future of Japan and China there is no reason why the teachings of Christ should not stand side by side with those of Confucius.

Such is an outline of the teachings of this remarkable man. Although he had many opportunities of advancement in public affairs, he lived a life of poverty, and never repined at the absence of wealth. He would say: "Give me rice to eat, with water to drink and my bended arm for my pillow, and I am contented and happy. Riches and honor acquired by wrong-doing are to me as floating clouds."

The mantle of Confucius fell on Mencius, who became a teacher of Confucianism, about the year 330 before Christ, at the time when Alexander the Great was making his conquests. Mencius had no system of his own to enunciate, but clothing himself in the armor prepared for him by his master he went forth to combat the evils of the day. What Aristotle did for the teachings of Plato, and what St. Paul did for the teachings of Jesus, Mencius did for those of Confucius.

From the time of the rise of the Chinese empire about 200 years before Christ, to the present day, Confucius has been the object of supreme veneration. Temples have been erected to his honor throughout the empire, and the literature bearing his name is studied by every educated man in China.

Mormons from Samoa.

In the early days of Mormonism its missionaries made so many converts in Hawaii that Brigham Young predicted the setting up of a Mormon kingdom there. Before it could be set up, there were troubles in Utah, through which Hawaii was forgotten, and most of the Hawaiian converts gave up their new faith.

Within the past two or three years the Mormon missionaries have resumed their labors in the islands of the Pacific, and those of them in Samoa have recently made a surprising report of success there. If there be truth in what they say, they have converted the souls of nearly 500 of the Samoans to Mormonism, and the new religion is spreading so rapidly, especially among those of the natives who had previously been converted to Christianity, that they expect to win the whole of them. It must be said, however, that the Mormon story lacks Christian confirmation.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 9. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Helps and hindrances to a Christian life.—Luke viii, 4-15.

No one can attempt to live a Christian life without soon discovering that there are many things to help him and that also there are things that hinder him in such a cause. The topical reference emphasizes the hindrances rather than helps, as it contains simply the familiar parable of the sower, in which in three cases out of four the seed that was sown did not bring forth as it ought. In the parable the hindrances naturally, by the order of the illustration, came first and must thus be considered.

1. The hindrances to a Christian life. The first hindrance mentioned by Christ is the devil. The seed is sown. It falls upon the heart, but no sooner has it fallen than satan comes along and carries it away, as the birds carry off the seed that falls upon the beaten paths. It is a solemn fact to us that there is a personal agent of evil in the world, powerful, wise and tactful, whose sole purpose is to win us from God and the truth, and we should have constantly "on the whole armor of God that we may withstand the wiles of the devil." The second hindrance is temptation. In another instance the seed sown falls upon the heart and is well received, even with joy and gladness, but there is no constancy of character, and when temptation comes the lip of joy is lost. The de re for evil within us is a great hindrance to our Christian lives, and we should pray to God for constancy of character, for the power to overcome temptation. The third hindrance is the world — its cares, its riches and its pleasure. These choke out the impressions made as the thorns choke out the seed that grows up.

In all of these cases we can see that the great trouble is in the heart, or the ground. The seed is all right. The sower is all right. It is the heart that is all wrong, and therefore to overcome these hindrances the heart must be right. The ground must always be in good condition before we can expect any kind of a crop. But who alone can make the heart right? God. And therefore the greatest help needed is to have God change the heart and dwell in the heart, and the life will be successful and fruitful. If we are overcome by satan, led astray by temptation, allured by the cares and riches and pleasures of the world, what we need is to have God "create in us clean hearts and renew a right spirit within us."

Bible Readings.—Job vi, 13; Ps. xxxiii, 20; cxxi, 1; cxxiv, 8; Math. vi, 13; Luke xxii, 46; Acts xxvi, 22; Rom. viii, 26; I Cor. xi, 28; xii, 28; II Cor. i, 24; Eph. vi, 10-18; I Thess. ii, 18; Jas. i, 2; I John ii, 15.

Friends In Joy and Sorrow.

You may sometimes see in a garden two flowers side by side, one of which opens its petals as the sun goes down, and the other at the same time closes them, to open them again after sunrise. The one has sympathy with the shade of evening, the other with the brightness of noonday. So there are some friends to whom we more naturally turn for sympathy in joy, and others to whom we feel we can go in sorrow. But we must not say that the former are unfeeling and the others morbid. The flowers referred to were so created by God, and the different dispositions of men were also his gift. "There are diversities of operations, but the same Lord."—New York Observer.

Missionary Extension.

The movement along missionary extension lines has advanced in the last three months as it never has before. The most conspicuous success has followed the efforts of the leaders of the missionary extension course in Chicago. Hundreds of doors are now open that were closed before, and missionary enthusiasm is stimulating missionary giving. More and more our young people are becoming informed about their duties at home and abroad to those less fortunate than themselves and are giving generously of their income, many giving not less than one-tenth.—Secretary Baer.

God Wants First Place.

A heart divided between God and mammon is in reality not divided, but belongs to the world. It may appear to be divided, but every heart has one and but one supreme object of regard. If that object is not God, it is some temporal object. God never shares the heart of any person with the world. He accepts only the supreme place.—National Presbyterian.

New Form of Endeavor Work.

The Christian Endeavor union of Cleveland has arranged for a new form of work in its "brotherhood committee." This committee will work in connection with the Y. M. C. A. Representatives of each society will attend the Y. M. C. A. Sabbath afternoon services, become acquainted with the converts and offer them a church home.—Exchange.

Five Minutes With Christ.

Five minutes spent in the companionship of Christ every morning—aye, two minutes, if it is face to face and heart to heart—will change the whole day, will make every thought and feeling different, will enable you to do things for His sake that you would not have done for your own sake or for any one's sake.—Drummond.

Faith and Patience.

Keep on a sowing.
God will cause the seeds to grow
Faster than your knowing.
Nothing e'er is sown in vain
If, His voice obeying,
You look upward for the rain
And falter not in praying.

Keep on praying.
In the brightest, darkest day
Still His voice obeying,
Never from the gates of prayer
Turn with doubting sorrow,
For the One who standeth there
May answer you tomorrow.

Mrs. Putnam, Forristdale, Mass., says:

"That Bearing-Down Feeling and dizzy, faint, gasping attacks left me as soon as I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am like one raised from the dead. I was sick with womb troubles so long I thought I never could get well."

Good Homes Provided.

Five children from the Children's Home have just been sent to good homes in the West under the care of Mr. Trot, western agent of the Children's Aid Society, and a sixth was one of the first admitted to the new Brace Memorial Farm.

Wm. Swaim is celebrating his 86th birthday today at the home of his son Alburtus, corner of Plainfield avenue and Front. Mr. Swaim is remarkably smart for his age, and today was spry as his grandchildren, and entered into games with them, including leap-frog.

This is Reliable.

Plainfield may be a little slow with her sewer system, but there is no place in the solar system where better inducements are offered to purchasers of Christmas novelties, and if you want the best in the market, call at Collier's and examine his latest novelties in silver bon-bon spoons, glove buttoners, pocket combs, paper cutters and everything else in the line of Christmas-gift silverware.

Free Pills.

Send your address to H. E. Bucklen & Co., Chicago, and get a free sample box of Dr. King's New Life Pills. A trial will convince you of their merits. These pills are easy in action and are particularly effective in the cure of constipation and sick headache. For malaria and liver troubles they have been proved invaluable. They are guaranteed to be perfectly free from every deleterious substance and to be purely vegetable. They do not weaken by their action, but by giving tone to stomach and bowels greatly invigorate the system. Regular size 25c. per box. Sold by L. W. Randolph, druggist.

Mrs. T. S. Hawkins, Chattanooga Tenn., says: "Shiloh's Vitalizer saved my life; I consider it the best remedy for a debilitated system I ever used. For dyspepsia, liver or kidney trouble it excels; 75c. Sold by all druggists.

Shiloh's cure is sold on a guarantee. It cures incipient consumption; it is the best cough cure, only 1c a dose; 25, 50c, $1. Sold by all druggists.

Karl's Clover Root, the great blood purifier, gives freshness and clearness to the complexion and cures constipation; 25c 50c, $1. Sold by all druggists.

Covers the Session.

The Legislative session of 1895 promises to be of more than ordinary interest. The election of a United States Senator, the crystallization of the Republican victory, and the political movements precedent to the election of a Governor next Fall, will be the principal work of the session.

The Trenton True American has made arrangements for thoroughly covering the field. Besides the full current reports of legislative proceedings, the undercurrent of opinions and actions which precede and lead to the legislative act will be carefully watched and faithfully reported. All subjects will be intelligently and independently discussed, and the full standard of our legislative reports will be maintained.

The True American publishes the session laws as soon as they are approved, and so furnishes to lawyers, public officials and observing citizens, an exact and early knowledge of the new laws during the legislative session.

The publishers will send the daily paper, postage paid, during the entire session for $1.50, or the daily during the entire session and the weekly for the rest of the year $2.50. Address The True American, Trenton, N. J.

"Yield Not to Misfortune."

I was afflicted with catarrh last autumn. During the month of October I could neither taste or smell and could hear but little. Ely's Cream Balm cured it—Marcus Geo. Shautz, Rahway, N. J.

I suffered from catarrh of the worst kind ever since a boy, and I never hoped for cure. but Ely's Cream Ba m seems to do even that. Many acquaintances have used it with excellent results—Oscar Ostrum, 45 Warren ave., Chicago, Ill. Cream Balm is agreeable.

HIS LAST CANAL IS BUILT

Ferdinand De Lesseps Expires at Lachenaie.

After an Illness of Nearly a Year the Great Engineer Dies Peacefully in the Old Department of L'Indre Historic Incidents in His Career The Suez and Panama Canals.

Paris, Dec. 8.—Count Ferdinand De Lesseps is dead. The great engineer, who has been critically ill for over a year expired peacefully at his home in Lachenale, near Vatan, in the department of L'Indre. His wife and all of his children were with him.

The career of Count De Lesseps is one of the most famous in French history. He was born in Versailles, Nov. 10, 1805. He was the son of Jean Baptiste Barthelemi, Baron de Lesseps.

At the age of 20 years he was appointed attache of the French consulate at Lisbon, and was afterwards engaged in the commercial department of the French ministry of foreign affairs.

In 1828, he was made attache of the consul-general in Tunis, and in 1831 became consul to Alexandria.

After the revolution of 1848, which overthrew the king of the French, he returned to Paris, and was sent by the new republican government to represent it at Rome, then governed by Mazzini. His first conception of the idea of the Suez canal came with a visit to the Egyptian khedive in 1854.

When de Lesseps visited Alexandria in that year the viceroy gave him a residence in that city and enlisted him as a companion in his journey across the Libyan desert. During the journey the project was conceived and placed before the viceroy, who approved it and granted the first concession in that year.

A company was formed and subscription books were opened in Paris Nov. 5, 1858. Despite the hostility to the project shown by England and leading engineers, the stock was all subscribed for before Nov. 30. Subsequent concessions were secured in 1856, 1863, 1864 and two others in 1869 and 1876.

Actual work on the canal was not begun until 1859, and in 1861 it was opened to the world. The amount of earth and sand excavated was 80,000,000 cubic yards. The total cost of the construction was $100,000,000.

For his share in this great undertaking de Lesseps was decorated by nearly every government of Europe. His own interest in the Suez canal constitutes the fortune that de Lesseps leaves.

It was late in the seventies that de Lesseps conceived the idea of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama. Lieut. Lucien Bonaparte Nyse went to Bogata and obtained a concession for a canal across the isthmus.

This concession was purchased by the Canal company in Paris. It was 1881 before subscriptions for stock were taken, however, and once opened the "woolen stockings" of France poured forth their hoards in a golden shower. The history of the canal and the waning faith of the French people in their god, "Le Grand Francais," is a matter of recent history.

After 1,300,000,000 francs had been beguiled from the "woolen stockings" and expended in bribery and extravagance of the wildest sort, the Panama Canal company, in December, 1883, was declared bankrupt.

The subsequent investigation and revelations astounded the world, and nearly overthrew the French republic. They were followed by prosecutions of nearly every person of prominence connected with the formation of the Panama Canal company, including de Lesseps and his son Charles.

That the old count had himself been cognizant of the corrupt use of money in connection with the affairs of the Canal company was not absolutely proven, but he was so seriously involved that, with the other defendants, he was found guilty and sentenced to five years' imprisonment and to pay a fine 3,000 francs.

De Lesseps was twice married and had a numerous family. Charles de Lesseps, a son by his first wife, was greatly devoted to his father, whose labors and misfortunes he shared. He was also convicted of interest in the Panama bribery cases and sentenced to long imprisonment, but has already been released.

A few days after the inauguration of the Suez Canal, de Lesseps married Mlle. Autard de Bragard, a very young creole of English extraction.

He was appointed to the rank of Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor in 1869, and in the following year was nominated by Queen Victoria an Honorary Knight Grand Commander of the Order of the Star of India.

Engaged in a Curious Contest.

Denver, Dec. 8.—Sixteen men are engaged in this city upon a contest of endurance, a prize of $500 being offered to the one man who keeps awake the whole week. RAPIDLY BREAKING DOWN

MRS. S. BATES TELLS THE STORY OF HER SUFFERINGS.

How She Was Cured By Munyon's Little Pellets After Physicians Had Failed.

Mrs. S. Bates, of Cecil, N. J., adds her testimony to that of the thousands who have been saved from a life of suffering by Munyon's Remedies. She said: "I had suffered greatly with indigestion and stomach trouble. Everything I ate distressed me, I was nervous and fretful and rapidly breaking down. Physicians had failed to help me, nor did any of the many remedies I took relieve me until I began using Munyon's Dyspepsia Cure. The result was astonishing. After taking but three doses I felt greatly improved, and after taking one 25c. bottle I was entirely cured."

Munyon's Stomach and Dyspepsia Cure cures all forms of indigestion and stomach troubles such as constipation, rising of food, distress after eating, bloating of the stomach, palpitation of the heart, shortness of breath and all affections of the heart caused by indigestion. It soothes, heals and invigorates stomachs that have been weakened by over-eating, or where the lining of the stomach has been impaired by physic and injurious medicines. Price 25 cents.

Munyon's Homoeopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

THEY FOUGHT FOR LIFE

Terrible Experience of the Magnolia's Seamen.

The Schooner Was Driven Ashore During a Furious Storm and Completely Wrecked—One Killed and the Other Members of the Crew Seriously Injured.

Halifax, N. S., Dec. 8.—Capt. Mason and seventeen men, the crew of the Gloucester fishing schooner Magnolia which was lost at Bass Island, N. F. have left for Boston. The men are more or less bruised and injured. The schooner was halibut fishing on the Grand Banks and had taken 15,000 pounds, when a heavy gale with snow sprang up and she was obliged to run to the land for shelter.

That night Bass Island Light was made, and at 8 p. m., she anchored and sent for a pilot. When he came aboard he advised the captain to change his position, as the storm was then raging with terrific fury. As soon as the anchor was weighed, however, and the vessel got under sail she missstayed and in five minutes was in the breakers, striking stern on.

By this time the sea was running to a great height, and came pouring down on the little craft, threatening to rend her to pieces. Those on board never expected to reach the shore alive.

One sea which swept over her carried off all the dories on one side, smashed the bulwarks to pieces and took the rudder off. One of the crew named Dillon was at the wheel at the time. The rudder was broken off and the shock jammed him under it, and it was only with difficulty that he was extricated.

His body was pitched down into the cabin and his head was split open and one of his shoulders dislocated. Murdock, was struck by a piece of dory and received a painful wound. James O'Neil had his head cut and shoulder dislocated by being dashed down by a heavy sea.

As the vessel was fast going to pieces, those on board launched the four remaining dories over the leeward side and made a start for the shore but before reaching it they had to battle with the sea for their lives for nearly an hour, during which time two of the boats were upset, and the occupants narrowly escaped drowning.

When they finally got to land they were wet through, their clothing being frozen stiff on them.

They found the inhabitants of the islands on which they were cast not very hospitable, only one man out of half a dozen families there opening his door to them. This one had a family of ten children, but, notwithstanding his limited room and resources, did all he could for them till the packet schooner took them to Harbor Breton, and from there they took passage on a coasting steamer to St. John's.

Soon after the crew left the Magnolia, flames were seen to shoot from the cabin, and in about an hour's time she had burned to the water's edge. The captain thinks the stove must have upset.

The Magnolia was 108 tons and seven years old. During the time she had been afloat, she rescued four crews of shipwrecked vessels, the last being that of the Gloucester schooner Maggie E. Wells, whom she landed at Halifax last year.

HIS CORPSE IN A CASE.

Chicago Has Another Murder Mystery To Solve.

Chicago, Dec. 8.—The police of this city have a first class murder mystery on their hands. The mutilated body of A. D. Barnes, janitor of the Hiawatha flats at No. 250 East Three Hundred and Seventy-fifth street, was found doubled up in a packing case, which had been deposited in an alley between Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth streets. Someone had evidently made an unsuccessful attempt to dismember the corpse, it being gashed and bruised as if with a hatchet. There is no clue to the perpetrators of the crime.

Tin Workers' Troubles.

Pittsburg, Dec. 8.—The Tin Plate Manufacturers association has taken the first step to end the lock-out which began on Oct. 1 over a reduction of wages for the more skilled employes. The representatives of the manufacturers have presented a request to the Amalgamated association for another conference on the scale, from which the manufacturers demanded a release because of the reduced tariff on tin and black plates. President M. M. Carland, for the workers, has consented.

Killed a Train Robber.

Peoria, Ill., Dec. 8.—An attempt was made to rob a freight train on the Iowa Central near Farmington, but the crew captured the robbers and took them to Farmington. As officers were taking the robbers to jail one of them made a desperate break for liberty and was instantly killed by a bullet from an officer's revolver.

Indicted the Engineer.

Pittsburg, Dec. 8.—Engineer C. N. Whisser of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, alleged to be responsible for a wreck in which two people were killed, has been indicted by the grand jury on a charge of murder.

A Great Order for Stone.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 8.—Orders have been placed with the Laetes Quarry company for 60,000 cubic yards of stone, valued at $1,000,000, for the New York & Long Island bridge.

Durland Guilty of Fraud.

Philadelphia, Dec. 8.—Dr. John H. Durland, president of the Provident Bond & Investment company, has been convicted of using the mails for fraudulent purposes.

Bailey Is Irwin's Receiver.

Pittsburg, Dec. 8.—Mr. John D. Bailey has accepted the appointment of receiver for George Irwin, the discretionary pool operator.

Shot a Race Horse.

Chicago, Dec. 8.—At the Roby, Ind., races the horse Jovita fell and broke a leg. She was shot.

THE GREATEST MODERN PHYSICIAN.

To Whom Thousands of Men and Women and Children Everywhere Owe Their Life and Happiness Today.

His Reputation Has Made Dartmouth College Famous in Every Town and Village in the Country—Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D, who First Gave to His Profession Paine's Celery Compound, the Wonderful Remedy That Makes People Well.

PROF. EDWARD E. PHELPS, M. D., LL. D.

"Excepting its handful of magnificent statesmen and its military heroes," says the most recent writer on America, "the people owe more to Dartmouth's physician-teacher than to any one man.

"In every walk of life, among the highest officeholders at Washington, in the homes of the best people in the large cities, among the every-day folks of the country, families in comfortable circumstances, families that live from hand to mouth, and could not, if they wished, afford the services of any but an ordinary physician—everywhere I have met people to whom Paine's celery compound has been a blessing."

The story of the life work of this giant among men has been often told and is familiar to most readers. The likeness above is probably the best portrait of him yet printed.

It was the world-famed discovery of Prof. Phelps of an infallible cure for those fearful ills that result from an impaired nervous system and impure blood which has endeared the great doctor to the world, and made his life an era in the practice of medicine.

Prof. Phelps was born in Connecticut and graduated from the military school at Norwich, Vt. He studied medicine with Prof. Nathan Smith of New Haven, Conn., and graduated in medicine at Yale. His unusual talent soon brought him reputation and prominence among his professional brethren. First he was elected to the professorship of anatomy and surgery in the Vermont university. Next he was appointed lecturer on materia medica and medical botany in Dartmouth college. The next year he was chosen professor of the chair then vacated by Prof. Bobby, and occupied the chair, the most important one in the country, at the time when he first formulated his most remarkable prescription.

In view of the overwhelming testimony to the value of Paine's celery compound that has recently appeared from men of national reputation, the picture of Prof. Phelps is particularly interesting.

New York's state treasurer, Hon. Addison B. Colvin.

Ex-Minister to Austria, John M. Francis.

Miss Jennese Miller.

President Cook of the national teachers' association.

Hon. David P. Toomey, the publisher of Donohoe's magazine.

Gen. John A. Halderman of New York City.

Hon. John G. Carlisle's private secretary.

The popular and talented actress, Marie Tempest; the poet author, Albert H. Hardy; the mayor of Montreal, brave Ida Lewis and a host more of prominent men and women are among the thousands of grateful people who have recently sent to the proprietors of this wonderful remedy their expressions of its unequalled value—men and women who can well afford, and do command the highest medical advice in the country.

And then also from the "plain people" there come thousands of honest, straightforward, heartfelt letters, telling how Paine's celery compound has made them well.

Their testimony simply goes to show what New England's vigorous essayist has so aptly said, that Paine's celery compound is not a patent medicine; is not a sarsaparilla; it is not a mere tonic; it is not an ordinary nervine—it is as far beyond them all as the diamond is superior to cheap glass.

It makes people well. It is the one true specific recognized and prescribed today by eminent practitioners for diseases arising from a debilitated nervous system. Prof. Phelps gave to his profession a positive cure for sleeplessness, wasting strength, dyspepsia, biliousness, liver complaint, neuralgia, rheumatism, all nervous diseases and kidney troubles. For all such complaints Paine's celery compound has succeeded again and again where everything else has failed.

It is as harmless as it is good, and it was the universal advice of the medical profession that the compound be placed where the general public could secure it, and thousands of people have every year proven the wisdom of this good advice.

Only a truly great and effective remedy could continue, as Paine's celery compound has done, to hold its high place in the estimation of the ablest physicians and of the thousands of busy men and women whose only means of judging is from the actual results in their own home or among their friends. No remedy was ever so highly recommended, because none ever accomplished so much.

Today Paine's celery compound stands without an equal for feeding exhausted nerves and building up the strength of the body. It cures radically and permanently. The nervous prostration and general debility from which thousands of women suffer so long that it finally gets to be a second nature with them—all this suffering and despondency can be very soon removed by properly feeding the nerves and replacing the unhealthy blood by a fresher, more highly vitalized fluid. A healthy increase in appetite and a corresponding gain in weight and good spirits follow the use of Paine's celery compound.

Paine's celery compound is the most remarkable medical achievement of this last half of the nineteenth century.

THE SUN'S FASHIONS.

NEW YORK'S "400" ATTEND THE OPERA IN GAY ATTIRE.

The Swell Ladies of the Metropolis Are Not all Beautiful But They Dress Well. Styles Are Not in all Cases Conducive to Health.

The opening week of the opera season is an important event in the development of modes for evening dress which definitely settles the question of what to wear and how to have it made. This study of feminine attire as represented by the fashionable society woman, with all the advantages which art, in fashion, can lend to nature, becomes a glowing picture of beauty and brightness: dainty coloring, and graceful outline, as you view it through an opera glass, on the opening night, seeking pretty ideas for practical use.

Satin is the material most generally employed for opera gowns; in fact, on opening night all of the dresses which were unmistakably new were of satin, and white was the prevailing color with a very generous sprinkling of pale blue, pink, and yellow satin gowns, so rich and glossy in quality, so brilliant in effect, that you wonder why satin ever goes out of fashion. You next turn your attention to the sleeve, which has grown by an interesting series of gradual inflations to the most conspicuous feature of dress, and you find it smaller, and consequently prettier, than it has been for some time; and it is satin, too, like the skirt, in almost every instance made in a plain, short, full puff or of chiffon, the same color as the rest of the gown. A few draped sleeves are seen, quite short and caught up in the middle in butterfly fashion, showing the upper part of the arm in the pretty, old way of a few years ago. These were of lace or chiffon frills arranged one over the other, giving the effect of small wings, or hanging out loose like a miniature ballet skirt. A small sleeve hanging low on the arm is used in gowns cut low and round in the neck, and the arm shows plainly between this sleeve and the strap going over the shoulder.

The low bodices are cut at the neck, either round and well off from the shoulder in the Victorian style, or decidedly square and defined by a trimming which accentuates the square effect. One distinguished looking woman was dressed in a plain black velvet gown, cut low and round at the neck where it was finished with a band of ermine.

Evening coiffures at the opera are arranged very simply, as far as the knot is concerned, but the hair first has to be waved all around the head in the approved fashion of the day, and that process cannot be called a simple one. There is nothing new in the arranging of this knot, which varies in size and shape according to the amount of hair, but its favorite resting place seems to be just below the crown of the head. In a few cases it is high on the head; in many others the hair is brought down over the ears and arranged low in the neck. Hair ornamentation consists principally of jewelled pins, an occasional band of diamonds across the top of the head, and the regal jewelled tiara which so few possess. One single pin, not at all pretentious in size, is the prevailing decoration worn, with here and there a headdress of satin ribbon the color of the gown, made in a bow which stands out a little at each side and droops on the hair at the back, instead of taking the upright position it did last year.—N. Y. Sun.

THE "OLD IRONSIDES."

Secretary Herbert Favors Preserving the Ship as a Relic of the Navy of 1812.

Senator Chandler has requested the Navy Department that "Old Ironsides," which now lies housed over and tied up at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, be turned over to the State of New Hampshire for the use of the naval militia, but there is opposition to permitting the old ship to be used for such purposes, and an effort is to be made at this session of Congress to secure an approbriation to repair her so that she may be preserved as a relic for years to come. In her present state she is unfit for even naval militia purposes, except perhaps as an armory. Her timbers are so far gone that it is not believed that any amount of repair would render her serviceable as a practice ship for the militia, and it is improbable that she will ever ride the waves again unless it be on a short voyage to this city to be turned over to the Navy Yard as a relic of the glories of the navy of 1812.

Secretary Herbert, it is understood, advocates the removal of the vessel to Washington, where for $10,000 she could be renovated and preserved, and where she would attract thousands of visitors who yearly swarm to the capital. The draft of the ship is about 21 feet, or a foot more than there is water up to the yard. By stripping her of every weight it is believed her draft could be decreased to the limit of the Potomac channel, and that little difficulty would be met in getting her to a safe berth.

UP-TO-DATE COSTUMES.

Loveliness of Women Bewildering in Its Many Phases of Dress.

Note how the big puff sleeves touch and jostle each other. Note how the same sleeves taper to the slender wrists when madame raises her hand to adjust a hair pin or fix her veil. Note the invariable full collar which has become all at once, as it were, as much of an objective point as the sleeves with rosettes either side of the back of neck or each side of front or with a huge bow of lace and chiffon on the left side of collar, which no longer lies in close folds, but is fulled and puffed until the size of neck corresponds with size of arm.

Truly the fashionable woman is all neck and sleeves. Then there are the hats. If one gets interested in these bewildering and fantastic creations the sleeves lose their charm in comparison. There are generally one or two figures in every crowd of ladies more conspicuous than the rest, whom the caricaturist need only faithfully copy to make everybody laugh.

A Year's Immigration.

The annual report of Herman Stump, United States Superintendent of Immigration, shows that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894, 288,020 immigrants arrived in this country, of whom 285,631 were landed and 2,389 debarred from landing because of being under contract to perform labor made previous to their arrival. Of the immigrants landed 96,000 were destined for New York State, 42,000 for Pennsylvania, 25,000 for Massachusette, and 22,000 for Illinois, the others being scattered throughout the United States, no other State receiving a greater number than 10,000. Immigrants destined for Southern States, all told, did not exceed 12,000. Of the immigrants over sixteen years of age, 41,000 could not read or write.

The Miss in Frocks.

Frocks for girls of twelve to fifteen are more or less of a problem. The prettiest this year seem to be made of crepon, trimmed with lace, cut, of course, high in the neck, with long sleeves.

As tight coats are apt to crush delicate materials, young girls are now wearing long circulars. To give additional warmth, these may be made with a fitted back, and a sleeveless jacket of quilted silk or satin of the same material as the lining of the cloak, which is sewn to the inner sides of the circular.

It Makes All the Difference.

"There's Biggser, now; would you call him a patient man?"

"All depends."

"On what?"

"Whether he's fishin' or waitin' fer his supper."—Burlington (Iowa) Gazette.

Question of Circumstances.

And we reply that he should not,

ANTON RUBINSTEIN.

MAURICE GRAU'S REMINISCENCES OF THE GREAT COMPOSER.

His First and Only Visit to America, and the Enthusiasm it Awakened. A Sight of Beecher's Lithographs Brought Contentment.

Maurice Grau, under whose management Rubinstein visited America, thus writes of the dead composer in the New York Herald:

I never saw any one with such magnetism. He gave one the impression of being very reserved, and yet he could, upon occasions, be as jovial as the most reckless of boon companions. He had a perfectly enchanting smile. When he was pleased his rugged Tartar face would become quite sunny and fascinating.

He made his first appearance at Steinway Hall, on September 23, 1872. He played his own concert in D minor; an air and variations by Handel; the Ruins of Athens march; Mozart's rondo in A minor; the Schumann etudes symphonies, and his own barcarolle in G, the melodie in F and his valse caprice.

The sensation he made was colossal. The audience went crazy. It seemed as though he would never have finished bowing. I remember that during one part of the concert a silver wreath was offered to him on a white satin cushion. He looked at it cynically and then shook his leoine head, nor could he be persuaded to accept either the wreath or the masses of flowers that were sent to him.

He was a sturdy minded man in every way. He hated ostentation of all kinds. I remember one of the thing that cut him to the quick was the sight of his own portraits plastered on the walls and exhibited in the shop windows. The portraits were by no means flattering, and on that ground alone he had, I must admit, legitimate cause for complaint. That, however, was not what he objected to. He hated to be looked upon as a curiosity or as a phenomenon. That affair of the portraits was a sore spot, until our travels out West, he came to a place where the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher was announced to lecture, and when he saw the preacher's portraits covering the entire town, he cheered up immensely. They were far worse than his own.

One Saturday night he had played at Buffalo. The following evening he was to play at the Grand Opera House in New York.

Some one called at the hotel to welcome Rubinstein and showed him a programme of the evening's concert. Almost side by side with his solo were a couple of Straus waltzes. That was enough. He sat down calmly and refused absolutely to play. I implored, I argued, I entreated, I threatened. It was of no avail. There was nothing to be done. All the printing offices were closed. So I and several others set to work, and with pen and ink scored out of the programme the offending items. After the concert he said, gravely, "I never regretted so much being a poor man. Had I had the money, I would have paid you the $40,000 forfeit, and would have gone straight back to Europe."

ANTON RUBINSTEIN.

He was a tremendous worker. At every hotel in which he stayed he had a piano placed in his room, and the moment he arrived he would begin to practice. He never slighted a single audience, no matter how small, by neglect or carelessness. He appeared to be completely engrossed in his art. He would work and study and study and work continuously. How his constitution stood the immense strain is a marvel. The last ten or fourteen days in this country presented a task that might have broken down a Hercules.

And yet there was never a complaint. His was the most lovable disposition imaginable.

He played at more than the stipulated number of concerts, and the net profit from the tour was $60,000.

The last concert Rubinstein gave in Boston was a genuine triumph. His very clothes were rent by enthusiastic admirers in search of souvenirs. Women rushed on the platform and embraced him, and the entire audience literally yelled: "Come back again! Come back again!" He played once more in New York and sailed the following day toward the end of May, 1873.

The last time I saw him was in Berlin. This was in the summer of 1892. He was conducting his Maccabees at Kroll's Theatre. I found him sadly changed and nearly blind. Abbey and I dined with him at Wolff's house, and afterward he made young Hoffmann play for us. For the boy he predicted a great future. We discussed a possible second tour through the States and a contract was signed for the season 1892-93 at an honorarium of $2,500 per concert. That is the highest fee ever paid a pianist, and it is curious to think that the only two artists who ever created such universal, delirious enthusiasm were Patti, the singer par excellence, and Rubinstein, the incomparable pianist. In the contract, however, was a clause which gave him the right to cancel his engagement before a certain date if he chose. Shortly before the expiration of this time we received a formal notification that he had abandoned the idea of a second tour.

In the winter of 1891 I received a letter from Rubinstein recommending to me a tenor called Mikailoff. In this letter, he said:

"My dear Grau, if you really wish to see me again I am afraid it will have to be on this side of the water."

There was something so hopelessly sad about the remark that I was afraid he must be ill. The following May Abbey and I saw him, as I said before, in Berlin and tried to tempt him to come over here, but he thought it was impossible. We renewed negotiations for a tour this winter, but the answer came that he had returned to Peterhof and that, in all probability, nothing could tempt him to leave it.

A New Departure.

The residents of the Second Ward have long felt the need of a drug store on Watchung avenue, but it remained for the enterprising firm of F. H. Hebard & Co., formerly of Front street, to take the initiative in this matter by opening a large and elegantly appointed store at Watchung avenue and Fifth street, directly opposite Neuman Bros., the popular grocers.

The store, or more strictly speaking the two stores thrown into one, has excellent light and large floor area, and the stock will at all times consist of only the best and purest drugs and chemicals. Confections in endless variety may be found on hand, and an excellent and carefully selected stock of leading brands of cigars will be at the disposal of the public. As to the sodas, hot and cold, which will be drawn at this establishment, it is only necessary to say that Messrs. Hebard & Co. will keep up their reputation of handling only the best syrups and fruit juices. A novel feature of the window display is the tasteful arrangement of potted plants and ferns. F. H. Hebard, the head of the firm, is the son-in-law of Hon. Roswell G. Horr, who recently became a resident of Plainfield.

WHAT THE SOCIETY DOES.

Development of Individual Responsibility, and Promotes Church Growth.

The third annual meeting of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church was held Saturday in that church. After an organ voluntary, the members of the Junior society marched in in a body, singing "Onward Christian Soldiers". An anthem by the large chorus choir followed, and then Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis led in prayer, closing with the Lord's Prayer. After a hymn, W. C. Hubbard, president of the society, led a responsive reading, after which he addressed a few words of welcome to the church and the visitors, telling of the great prosperity of the society during the last three years, when its membership had risen from 16 to 96, and a Junior society of 32 members had been formed. Another hymn by the congregation was followed by the annual report of the secretary, Miss Lou Clawson, who showed the great growth of the society in membership and financial standing, told of the special work of the different committees, and said in conclusion:

"As the time has come to select new officers to fill the places of those now in office, I hope that all will maintain the same Christian spirit that those before them have maintained."

After another anthem by the choir, Miss Mabel Potter read the report of Mrs. H. M. Maxson, superintendent of the Junior society, who was unable to be present. The reported consisted of a statement of the manner of carrying on the work of the society, and a review of the work done since its organization, Dec. 3, 1893.

This was followed by a song by the Juniors, entitled "Shine out for Jesus".

Rev. Dr. Lewis then spoke to the Christian Endeavorers, and especially to the Juniors. He showed that in the Christian Endeavor society the individual responsibility is promoted, and the member sees the necessity to begin while young to take individual responsibility. He compared the training of the young people in this age to those of former years, and said that after a few years of this work the church will be stronger spiritually than it could possibly be without it.

While a collection for the benefit of the society was being taken, the choir sang another selection. The service was closed with the doxology and the benediction.

The chorus choir which aided materially in the success of the meeting was under the able direction of D. E. Titsworth. It was composed of Miss Lulu Lewis, Miss Nancy Randolph, Miss Elizabeth Titsworth, Mrs. Stillman, Miss Elizabeth Allis, Miss Ernestine Smith, George Stevens, Frank Clawson, Arthur J. Spicer and Charles Randolph.

No Excuse for Reckless Shooting.

[From The Elizabeth Journal.]

Everbody will be glad that the boys who were in jail, accused of murdering a man in Plainfield, have escaped from a charge so awful. But it is undoubtedly the universal opinion that the lives of human beings should in some way be better protected against the reckless use of guns by boys fifteen or sixteen years of age. The boys were shooting at a target, within the city limits. A peddler was passing at a distance, and a stray bullet struck his head and entered his brain. He died from the wound. These boys have caused a man's death, left a woman a widow, and made several children fatherless, and all through thoughtless, careless, reckless shooting in a place where they had no business to use firearms. It was an accident, but it was an accident that there is no excuse for. It might not be wise to punish these boys severely, wrecking their lives, but somebody should be held to accountability for such criminal recklessness.

Doings of the Disciples.

Some of the people of the First Church of Christ attended services yesterday morning at the Second Christian Church, 169th street, New York; in the afternoon, the Third Church, 119th street; in the evening, the Endeavor and general service, First Church, West Fifty-Sixth street, of which B. B. Tyler is pastor, and the social reformer is a leading spirit. The people in New York are well pleased over the action of the Plainfield trustees A meeting of the Disciple ministers will be held in the parlors of the Fifty-Sixth Street Church tonight. B. W. Hand is a member.

Anyone who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cents bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, T. S. THE PARK CLUB.

ANOTHER DELIGHTFUL SATURDAY EVENING SOCIAL.

Princeton's Bliss Quartette Gives Blissful Music—Bowling Games in Prospect on the Park Club Alleys.

The third of the series of Saturday socials was held at the Park Club Saturday evening, when an entertaining programme was rendered by the Bliss Quartette of Princeton College, consisting of Messrs. P. P. Bliss, C. L. Fisk, A. E. Holmes of Plainfield, and R. Z. Hartzler, who responded to many hearty encores. One of the hits of the evening was their rendering of "The Bill of Fare", a side-splitting college glee, while refreshments were being served in the billiard hall.

Saturday evening's gathering was the third of a series of informal socials to be continued by the Park Club during the Winter, at each of which entertainment will be provided by either local or outside talent.

Dancing and bowling followed Saturday's programme, and refreshments were served to all. Quite a large party assembled, considering the inclemency of the weather, and the guests unanimously agreed that the Park Club was royal hosts.

The Junior Entertainment Committee will give an informal dance within the next ten days.

Bowling teams are being selected for matches between the Bachelors and the Benedicks, Dec. 22 and 29.

A game will be called Dec. 18 between the New Jersey Athletic Club of Bergen Point and the club team.

B. A. Hegeman, Jr., of the club, who had charge of Saturday's social, has just returned from Buffalo on a business trip.

Charming Christmas Gifts.

There are few things so essential to the comfort of a home as a good lamp, hence unusual care should be exercised in making a choice, for upon the selection much of your happiness depends. If the lamp proves a poor burner, or is not made upon advanced principles, there will be times when you will be tempted to think life is not worth living; to insure getting the best, both from an artistic and practical standpoint, buy the "Miller" Lamp. Edward Miller & Co., 10 and 12 College place, between Barclay street and Park place, New York, are the manufacturers; they are the oldest and the largest manufacturers of lamps and so have a complete assortment of staple and beautiful designs in lamps. It is worth your while to visit their showroom to see such a rare collection of art in lamps.

The Friends Programme.

The Friends Entertainment Committee announce the following 8 o'clock lectures to be given in the Friends Meeting-house on Watchung avenue:

Dec. 15—"Fenelon and His Times", by Dr. Edward H. Magill of Swarthmore College.

Jan. 16—"Glimpses in Europe" (with stereopticon views), by Aaron M. Powell of Plainfield.

Feb. 6—"The Youth of Some Eminent Americans", by Elizabeth Powell Bond, Dean of Swarthmore College.

The evening of March 6 will be devoted to a social, and March 20 to a study of Whittier.

Music Hall Temperance Meeting.

A fair sized audience, not, however, as large as on several previous Sundays, assembled in Music Hall yesterday afternoon and listened to the earnest remarks of Dr. Brett of Newark. His discourse was replete with anecdotes, incidents and personal observation, to which the audience listened with marked interest. During the meeting Mr. Allen favored with music on the cornet and Mr. Evans gave a whistling solo. The usual collection was taken.

Col. Hadley of New York is announced to speak next Sunday.

After a Bitter Siege.

It was a happy reunion of the family of John Wakefield yesterday at their home on Park place, North Plainfield, after a separation of five weeks, during which time two of their children died with that terrible scourge, diphtheria. Mrs. Wakefield and her two remaining children were permitted to go down stairs yesterday for the first time, and their friends and neighbors were glad to see their faces at the parlor windows. The quarantine placard will be removed in a day or two

Mrs. Babbitt Exonerated.

The many friends and relatives of Mrs. Ida M. Babbitt, whose husband, Dr. George Babbitt, instituted proceedings for divorce, will be gratified to learn that Advisory Master Williams, before whom the case was tried, reports a decree for Mrs. Babbitt, refusing to grant her husband's application, on the ground that her husband did not prove his case. She has so been notified by her Attorney, Leonard Kalisch.

Six Additions.

The good work which is quietly progressing from week to week at Warren Chapel bore fruit yesterday in the admission of six more to the fold, three by letter and three by profession of faith.

A NICE LEGAL POINT.

THE COURT DECIDES IT JUDGE CODDINGTON'S WAY.

Important Principle of Law Involved in a Controversy Over a Pair of Scales.

Nearly a year ago Charles W. Griffin made a chattel mortgage to Theodore F. Bayles on his stock in trade and fixtures then contained in his store on Watchung avenue. A short time after the mortgage had been given Constable Moffett sold the grocery store under chattel mortgage sale. About the same time that the mortgage was given Mr. Griffin let Watson J. Tunison have his large platform scales.

In a day or so Mr. Tunison made a bargain with Mr. Griffin, and Mr. Griffin it is claimed told Mr. Tunison to give him credit for the scales to the amount of $15 as Griffin at that time was indebted to Mr. Tunison in the sum of $33. When the day to sell under the chattel mortgage arrived Constable Moffett informed Mr. Tunison to return the scales as they were mortgaged property. Mr. Tunison at once saw his counsel, William A. Coddington, who advised him not to return the scales, as they could not be held under the chattel mortgage because the chattel mortgage failed to specify them. Mr. Bayles began suit in Justice Nash's Court in tort against Mr. Tunison for the value of the scales which with costs amounted to over $20.

Mr. Coddington did not defend the suit before the Justice, but as soon as the verdict had been rendered took an appeal to the higher court where the case was tried last week. George W. DeMeza represented Mr. Bayles, and in the Common Pleas proceeded to prove his case, after which Mr. Coddington in arguing the case for his client stated to the Court that, admitting everything to be true that the plaintiff had attempted to prove, they could not recover because platform scales were not a fixture; that the chattel mortgage did not specify the scales particularly and the word fixtures could not include any article not a fixture.

The Court reserved its decision until Saturday, when the case was decided in favor of Mr. Coddington's client. While the case in the beginning did not involve very much money, it did involve a nice law point. The case will probably be quite an expensive one to Mr Bayles, who came from western New York State as a witness in the case. Mr. Tunison feels highly elated over his legal victory.

THE CHOSEN PEOPLE.

To the Jew First, and Also to the Gentile.

Hermann Warezawiak, Superintendent of the American Mission to the Jews in St. Marks place, New York, related his experience at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church last evening before a large audience. He is from a family of rabbis, and was educated for the synagogue, but instead embraced the Christian religion. For this he was repudiated by his family, forced to leave his wife and children and finally driven from his native town of Warsaw.

He drifted to Scotland and finally to New York where he was soon put in charge of the mission for Christianizing and elevating his people. He dwelt at length on the fact that the Jews were the chosen people of God, and bitterly deplored their persecution by the nations of the earth. He cited facts depicting the business ability and integrity of the Jews, their temperance and honesty.

Mr. Warezawiak's command of the English language is not of the best and he was very difficult to understand at times. His earnestness of purpose, however, was apparent throughout his remarks. He urged all good Christians to assist in the great work being carried on in New York, involving as it does the uplifting and christianizing of over half a million Jews residing in that and adjacent cities.

At the conclusion of his remarks a special collection was taken for the cause.

Sneak Thief at "The Chestnuts".

A sneak thief robbed the Seminary on Seventh street, Saturday evening, during the dinner hour. Entrance was obtained by climbing through a second-story window from an adjoining shed. The thief was evidently frightened away before completing his work, as only one room was visited. The loss was confined to several rings and small articles of jewelry belonging to one of the boarders.

—The work on the sewers on West Ninth street has necessitated the blocking of several driveways, and it is alleged that those in charge refuse to arrange a place for driving out.

Mr. Ira P. Wetmore, a prominent real estate agent of San Angelo, Texas, has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in his family for several years as occasion required, and always with perfect success. SPARE THE COUNTY ROADS.

THAT IS WESTFIELD'S PRAYER, AND A GOOD ONE.

Our Sister Township Also Feels That Trolley Cars Should Not Be Run on Sunday—Final Action Deferred.

The Town Hall in Westfield was crowded with citizens and property owners Friday night to listen to the amended ordinance presented by the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company to the Township Committee for a franchise for an electric railroad through the township.

Mr. Bethel, representing the company, presented the amended ordinance, which was read by Township Clerk Irving I. Ross. After the reading of this ordinance, Chairman Welles stated to the people present that a chance would immediately be given to anyone wishing to speak on the subject.

L. H. Cohen offered amendments to the proposed ordinance, that the company whether for transportation of passengers or merchandise within the limits or running through the township should be subject to and controlled by the ordinances of the Township Committee. His other amendment to the ordinance was that the company should not operate their cars or do any repairs of the roadway on Sunday. These amendments were accepted by the committee for future consideration.

Objections to the granting of the franchise over the proposed route were made by C. L. Andrus, C. B. Peddle, G. White Smith, Col. G. H. Starr and C. W. Harden. Some of these gentlemen favored another route, while others said the company should buy a right of way.

Dr. William Gale, who conducts a drug store on the main street, spoke in favor of having the franchise granted over the proposed route. W. G. Peckham was also in favor of the road, and stated he had a petition signed by many wealthy property-owners asking that the road be granted. This petition he said would be presented at a future meeting with a number of more signatures.

After considerable discussion on the subject pro and con, the chairman informed the people present that no action would be taken that night, and the Committee would again meet Friday evening, Dec. 21, when another hearing would be given.

The Committee then proceeded with their regular business.

The main objection to having the franchise for the trolley granted is the tearing up of the county roads, which cost the people so much money.

Afternoon Tea.

A delightful reception was given at the home of Mrs. J.P. Homan Saturday afternoon from 4 to 6. The rooms were daintily decorated with green and white. Miss Minnie French and Mrs. S. W. Clark received, assisted by Mrs. L. M. French and Mrs. J. P. Homan. Those at the table in the dining room were Mrs. E. H. Bird, Mrs. Joy, Miss Covert, Mrs. French, Miss Helen French, Miss Lulu Pangborn, Miss Elsie Horne, Miss Mary Fritts and Miss Emma Case.

The number of guests was very large, and included: Miss Grace Langdon, Misses Crouse of Brooklyn; Miss Barrett, Miss Addie Parker Jackson, Miss Anna Boice, Mrs H O Newman, Mrs J. M Clark, Mrs James Jackson, Mrs Peck, Miss Penny, Mrs Rogers, Mrs Howland, Mrs D J Jackson, Miss Case, Mrs Clark, Misses Clark of Westfield; Mrs C R Barnes, Mrs O L Jenkins, Mrs J F McDonald, Misses Blisch, Miss Delia Bowers, Mrs Dunham. Miss Dunham, Mrs Spicer, Miss Delano, Miss Runyon, Mrs Valiant, Miss Crawford, Miss Fritts, Miss Clawson, Mrs Van Winkle, Miss Smith, Mrs Most, Miss Andrew Manning, Miss Maxson, Miss Randolph, Mrs Church, Miss M E Brown, Miss Whitney, Miss Hyde, Mrs Leland, Mrs H Randolph, Mrs J M Hetfield, Mrs T S Davis, Miss Potter, Miss Smith, Miss Price, and Mrs Whitney.

Red Men's Dance.

A New Year's reception and dance will be given by Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe, No. 193, I. O. R. M., to the women of the Fair Committee, Thursday evening, Jan. 3, in Sanger Hall, on Somerset street. An interesting programme has been arranged, to be rendered by local talent, and excellent music will be in attendance. The affair promises to be a success in every way, and fully up to the high standard maintained at all the previous social functions given by the new tribe of Red Men.

To Go to Somerville.

The Somerville Tribe, I. O. R. M., have invited Paugh Caugh Naugh Sinque Tribe, No. 193, to visit them this evening. The invitation came too late for announcement at the council sleep last Wednesday evening, but as many members of No. 193 as can go are invited to meet at 7:30 p. m. A good time is insured.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. V. The prompt relief it affords is alone worth many times the cost, 50 cents. Its continued use will effect a permanent cure. For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

THE SOCIAL SEASON.

FIRST OF THE ASSEMBLIES TO BE GIVEN MONDAY NIGHT.

A New Riding Class in Prospect, But Theatricals Have Been Abandoned.

With the advent of cold weather people are waking up to the necessity of amusing themselves. The mails are once more heavy with invitations, and cards and engagement lists are fast filling up. Everyone at present is looking forward to the first Assembly next Monday night which bids fair to be more successful in point of patronage than these early dances usually are. Many people heretofore have waited until the New Year dance before enrolling their names among the subscribers, but this year it is confidently expected that the list of subscribers will be full from the first dance on. People cannot be too generous in their patronage of the assemblies, as they are really the backbone of the season, and an excellent example has been set by some of the older married people who though not intending to be present except possibly to drop in during the evening have subscribed liberally toward defraying the expenses.

Besides the renewed interest in the riding club and the proposed horse-show there is an admirable project on foot for forming a riding class to meet twice a week in the academy and combine the pleasure of a ride on the tanbark with the best instruction it is possible to obtain. Many people who would like to join the riding club are deterred by the number in the ring and by lack of confidence in their own horsemanship. To these people the riding class will be particularly well adapted as well as to those who wish to avoid the crowd. Mrs. Robert L. Burnett is getting up the class at present, and William Stephenson will be the instructor. The dues will be extremely reasonable and suit those economically inclined.

What with the number of teas to come and the dances of Christmas week, together with those private dances which are being talked of, Plainfield society should find plenty to occupy it until after the holidays at least.

Much disappointment has been expressed by those who have followed the repeated successes of Plainfield amateurs in former years that the projected theatricals have been given up at last, and that there is no definite promise of any play at present. With so much really good talent it seems a great pity that some one cannot be found with sufficient energy and executive ability to put through at least one performance during the season.

Pastor Herring Won't Leave Plainfield.

Rev. C. E. Herring of the First Presbyterian Church has not received a call as stated in another paper. He would doubtless have been called, had he permitted his name to stand, as the matter has been urged to his attention on several occasions, but as he does not entertain the idea of leaving Plainfield no formal call was extended.

Mt. Olive's Notable Event.

Commencing next Sunday and continuing during the week, the twenty-fourth anniversary exercises of the Mt. Olive Baptist Church will be held.

The church will by that time be completed, and the services will all be held in the church proper.

Thursday evening, Dr. Perry, pastor of the Messiah Baptist Church, Brooklyn, will preach the anniversary sermon. The doctor was the first colored graduate in this country, and his graduation took place the day that Ft. Sumter was fired upon. He preached the first sermon in the Mt. Olive Church 24 years ago. All day Sunday, services will be held, consisting of short addresses and excellent music.

Putting the Roadways in Shape.

The sewer contractors took advantage of the mild weather Saturday to put back the macadam on Putnam avenue, but found the materials too wet to roll the street properly, though this was attempted.

Today the men are leveling the roadway of West Third street, and will probably have the street in fair shape tonight.

The dirt thrown into the street by the men who have laid the new sidewalks should also be removed by them at once.

Mr. Prout is in New York today having the necessary papers drawn up for an extension of time to be presented to the Council at the meeting Friday evening.

Death of Mrs. Keyser.

The death of Mrs. Aaron Keyser occurred yesterday after an illness of about three years. She leaves four young children. The funeral takes place Thursday morning at 11. Interment will follow in Belvidere.

—The Two Vans do n't use many words, but their ad is an invitation for all to come and see one of the greatest holiday displays ever in Plainfield.

THE BROWNIES TONIGHT.

THEATRICAL COPYRIGHTERS WILL MAKE NO TROUBLE.

At First They Threatened Suit, But Everything Has Been Explained.

The Daily Press today received the following despatches:

New York, Dec. 10—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is infringing upon our copyright in announcing Palmer Cox's Brownies for Music Hall, and we shall make every effort to bring them to account for it.

JEFFERSON, KLAW & ERLANGER.

New York, Dec. 10—Messrs. Jefferson, Klaw & Erlanger exclusively control Palmer Cox's Brownies, which is now running at Fourteeth Street Theatre, and no one else has the right to announce such a play or entertainment.

PALMER COX.

In conversation with a Daily Press representative, who was the first to convey the news of an attempt on the part of Jefferson, Klaw & Erlanger of New York to stop the production of the Brownies at Music Hall, Miss Peck, President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, state dthat no apprehension is felt by the Union regarding the matter. The production was obtained for Plainfield by Major J. B. Pond through the theatrical bureau of Plant & Co., of New York, who specify in the contract that Messrs. Brewer and Decker are to have charge of the local production. These last named are expected today. Miss Peck's first move in the matter was to write Jefferson, Klaw & Erlanger, who, without replying to her communication, turned it over to Major Pond.

LATER.

This afternoon, after the above was in type, Miss Peck informed The Press that the entire matter had been adjusted, and that the trouble had been due entirely to misunderstanding. Therefore the performance will be given tonight in its entirety and without a hitch.

THE FANWOOD TRIO.

The Court Determined to Rid the Community of Such Bad Men.

Thomas Shelly and William Adams, recently convicted for assaulting and robbing Mrs. Elizabeth Furey of Fanwood, were, as told in The Press of Saturday, sentenced to State Prison, the former for eighteen months, and the latter for two years.

In passing sentence on Adams the Court said that it had had an opportunity of ascertaining considerable regarding him, and, from what it had learned, was unable to say one good word in his favor. The Court was determined to rid the community of such characters as he.

Shelly's sentence was lighter, owing to the fact, as the Court explained, that he had not participated in as many crimes as his companion, Adams.

George Shay, convicted of rape and also of being a participant in the assault made by Shelly and Adams, was, on motion of his counsel, Craig A. Marsh, granted a new trial. This, however, is on the second, and not the first charge.

The reason set forth by his counsel in making the petition was that he had been given to understand that Shay was not to be tried on a second indictment, and such being the fact he was not present to defend him.

Lecture, and a Class.

When it appeared probable that the right of suffrage would be extended to women in Colorado, every gathering of women in that State began to study political economy and civil government. They proposed to be ready for the discharge of their political duties intelligently when the time came, and in every way that they could employ teachers or lecturers for their own education they exerted themselves in order to be prepared for the emergency.

There will be an opportunity for Plainfield women to study both these subjects with Miss Jane M. Slocum, after January 1.

Miss Slocum will lecture in the Park Club-house, Wednesday, Dec. 12, at 3 p. m., and after the lecture the names of those wishing to join the classes will be taken.

Fanwood Next.

The New York and Philadelphia Traction Company have added to their various franchises already obtained by the addition of Irvington, which is the key to the situation in northern New Jersey.

"It is a pleasure to sell Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," says Stickney & Dentler, druggists, Republic, Ohio, "Because a customer after once using it, is almost certain to call for it when again in need of such a medicine. We sell more of it than of any other cough medicine we handle, and it always gives satisfaction." For cough, colds and croup, it is without an equal. ABSOLUTELY PURE

RUINED HER CARGO.

Heavy Seas Produce a Wonderful Mixture in a Steamer's Hold.

Philadelphia, Dec. 10.—The shipping of heavy seas by the German steamer Remus during her recent passage from Hamburg to this port, practically ruined her entire cargo, valued at $100,000, and the consignees have refused to accept their consignments.

The damage done during a stormy passage, consuming twenty days, was further augmented by the action of the salt water upon the large quantity of beet sugar which composed part of her cargo.

The salt water, which attained a depth of five feet in the hold, coming in contact with the sugar, transformed it into a practically valueless black molasses syrup.

This liquid syrup was in turn mixed with the balance of the cargo, composed of sauerkraut, rags, clay, zinc, dust, beans, muriate of potash and arsenic, and ruined all that was not inclosed in perfectly tight casks.

TO STOP THEIR ATTACKS.

Emperor William Will Prevent Further Socialist Outbreaks.

Berlin, Dec. 10.—Emperor William received Count von Schouvaloff, the Russian ambassador to Germany, who formally announced to his majesty the accession of Czar Nicholas to the throne of Russia. The ambassador was invited to take lunch at the palace.

The emperor later received Herr von Levetzow, president of the reichstag, and the vice-presidents of that body. His majesty referred to the socialist demonstration at the first session of the reichstag in the new parliament building, and said he did not for a moment regard the matter from a personal point of view.

He merely regarded it as an attack on the constitution, inasmuch as the monarchy was an essential part of the constitution. The purpose of a new bill that will be submitted to the reichstag is to prevent any more such attacks.

DEATH OR A TRANCE.

Mrs. Sudbrook's Lifelike Appearance Postponed the Funeral.

Baltimore, Dec. 10.—Mrs. Louisa Sudbrook, wife of Charles Surbrook, of No. 261 East Hamburg street, apparently died after a brief illness. Her funeral was to have taken place, but it was postponed because of the lifelike appearance of the supposed dead person.

The body had been kept since Wednesday night in a room of about ordinary temperature, without using ice or embalming fluids of any kind. There is not the slightest sign of decomposition, and the flesh is unusually soft and lifelike. It is cold, but when pinched between the fingers resumes its natural position with as much elasticity as that of a live person. Mr. Sudbrook declares it all foolishness delaying the funeral, and says his wife is really dead.

STARVED TO DEATH.

An Awful Case of Destitution Found by the Pittsburg Police.

Pittsburg, Dec. 10.—Two German women have informed the police at the West End station, of a sad case of destitution on Capitol street. An investigation disclosed that Mary Roude, a Polish woman, and her infant babe had been lying dead in a tumble-down shanty since Friday afternoon, having starved to death.

The husband, August Roude, who has worked only two weeks within two years, had not the means to see to the proper care of the bodies.

The family existed on what could be brought in by three children who were sent out to beg. The department of charities took charge of the case.

CONFESSED THE ROBBERY.

Texas Officials Have the Men Who Held Up a Fort Worth Train.

Fort Worth, Tex., Dec. 10.—Sam Evans, related to some of the most prominent people of this city, was arrested at Corsicana by Sheriff Weaver, of Navarro county, and is in jail.

Weaver says that Evans came to him and acknowledged being one of the men who robbed the Texas & Pacific train at Mary's Creek, Thursday night. Evans made the confession under promise that he would not be prosecuted.

The other two men whom Evans implicated were arrested at their home near the scene of the robbey.

More Trouble for McClintock.

Meadville, Pa., Dec. 10.—The case of Dr. B. C. McClintock, for whose extradition unsuccessful attempts were recently made by Sheriff Pugsley of White Plains, N. Y., has been given another twist by the arrival here of Grace Kepler from White Plains. She swore out a warrant for his arrest on a delicate charge and he gave bail for his appearance at court. This makes three separate charges against the doctor here—one being for aiding this same Kepler woman to escape from a deputy sheriff last summer. She subjected herself to imprisonment in order to obtain his arrest on this last charge and is now confined in jail.

O'Malley Resorts to Bribery.

Chicago, Dec. 10.—The police have discovered that State Senator O'Malley who shot cab driver Sheppard has attempted to bribe witnesses not to appear against him.

Charles Wurck Surrenders.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 10.—Charles Wurck, surrendered himself to the police and was placed under arrest, charged with the shooting of William Bowden.

Fifty-two Officers Indicted.

Sioux City, S. D., Dec. 10.—The grand jury has indicted fifty-two county officials who are charged with stealing $200,000.

IN THE QUEEN'S BEHALF

Another Plot To Overthrow the Hawaiian Republic.

Further Reports from the Islands Confirm the Story Told by Corporal Katzer of the Schemes To Seize the Government—An American Soldier as a Royal Conspirator.

San Francisco, Dec. 10.—Further information received here tends to confirm the story told by Corporal Katzer that Queen Lil may be seated upon the Hawaiian throne at any moment. There is a widespread royalist plot on foot, and even the next steamer may bring word of the downfall of the republic.

Corporal Stephen M. Katzer was a soldier at the Presidio here. He has just returned from Honolulu, where he had some interesting experiences as a conspirator in the latest revolution.

Katzer says that is there had been a competent leader the royalists would now be in power in Hawaii, as the plan was feasible and only needed fifty men of good nerve to carry it through.

He declares that the plotters had the positive assurance of British Consul General Hawes that if they held the palace three hours he would land English marines from the Hyacinth and make their possession of the government sure.

Katzer, after his discharge by Uncle Sam, went to Honolulu. On the steamer, he became acquainted wth Sam Parker, and told Parker he wanted a job as fighting man for the queen. He was engaged, with good pay and lodgings adjoining the Hawaiian hotel. Several plans were formed for overturning the government. The leading royalists were Rickard, vice president of the Hawaiian Patriotic league; W. H. Cornwall, one of Queen Lil's ministers and Judge Widemann. All three talked frequently with Katzer.

Finally it was decided to capture all the inland steamers, but this plot was betrayed and had to be abandoned. Then Katzer got a place in the palace guard, and he noted the arrangements for defence. He found that these were faulty and that if a force of twenty good men could be placed by stratagem inside the palace yard they could capture the place.

All plans were made for the night of Oct. 20, but only ten men could be secured on whom Katzer could rely, whereas he needed sixty at least for complete success, and he gave up the job in disgust and returned here.

British Consul General Hawes, Katzer says, is eager to see the queen restored, as he wants to see England get supremacy on the islands. Hawes was cautious, and would meet none of the conspirators except Rickard, but the latter declared Hawes could be counted on to uphold them if they once seized the palace and put Dole and his cabinet under arrest.

Katzer says that another plan was under way when he left, and may by this time have come to a head.

GOSLING A SCAPEGOAT.

England's Minister to Nicaragua Ordered Home from His Post.

Managua, Nicaragua, Dec. 10.—Minister Gosling leaves for England next week. Telegrams from London report that the negotiations between Envoy Barrios and Britain's foreign secretary are nearly completed. Senor Barrios announces that a successor to Minister Gosling has been chosen and will be gazetted soon.

The government has ordered Barrios not to acknowledge Hatch as a British consul, as he never was so regarded here.

Mr. Gosling's friends assert that he has invariably acted under instructions, and is now being made a scapegoat by Lord Rosebery and Kimberley.

THAT JAPANESE TREATY.

It Differs Materially from the One Entered into by Great Britain.

Washington, Dec. 10.—The text of the proposed treaty with Japan which will come before the senate for consideration at the next executive session, bears out in all particulars the preliminary analysis sent out in these dispatches December 7.

It is not a duplication of the British treaty entered into last July. On the contrary, it contains a distinct assertion of the rights of Japan to regulate her own tariff relations with the United States, while the British treaty imposes rigid restrictions in the matter of tariff with that country for several years to come.

Ambushed a Posse.

Aiken, S. C., Dec. 10.—Jesse Jade, the notorious negro desperado and leader of the Rouse Bridge rioters, is safe behind the bars in the Aiken jail. He was captured in Jacksonville, Fla., and brought back by Sheriff Aldernan. Jade and his companions ambushed a posse of white men who went to serve a warrant on him for some petty offense. One of the posse was killed and others were wounded.

MUCH WORK TO BE DONE

Committee Plans for Business in Congress.

Senator Morgan Will Begin an Aggressive Campaign for the Nicaragua Canal Bill and Mr. Morrill Will Attack Mr. Peffer's Populistic Measures—Proposed Legislation.

Washington, Dec. 10.—There will be no well defined business policy in the senate until the democratic steering committee has carried out the instructions of the recent caucus. This will probably be done early this week, but no real effort will be made to get down to persistent work until after the holiday recess.

Without waiting for the steering committee, Mr. Morgan will begin the consideration of the Nicaragua canal bill and will address the senate upon that measure this afternoon. His remarks will doubtless call out others as he proposes to keep the subject actively before the senate uptil some action is taken.

Mr. Morrill will on Wednesday submit some remarks on the several bills introduced by Mr. Peffer and others relating to proposed financial legislation, and Mr. Hunton has given notice that the next day he will call up the bill to establish a national university.

The order in which the measures of proposed legislation endorsed by the democratic caucus may be presented to the senate will be agreed to at as early a date as the steering committee can get together, but a prominent member of that committee is authority for the statement that it has been practically agreed that the bankruptcy bill shall have precedence over all others.

The policy of the republicans is causing the majority some concerns and the fear has been expressed that a system of filibustering may be inaugurated.

This, however, is denied by republican leaders. It is understood they will not make any objection to the appropriation for the enforcement of the income tax, for the reason that they believe its enforcement will only result in making the law the more unpopular.

The republicans have assumed the position of favoring the passage of the various appropriation bills and adjourning; beyond this they will lend their opponents no assistance.

In the house, although Mr. Patterson (dem., Tenn.), in charge of the railroad pooling bill, has given notice that he will ask the house to vote upon its passage to-morrow afternoon, the fate of the bill primarily depends upon the action of the appropriations committee. If the urgent deficiency bill, which the committee is now working upon, shall be ready to report to the house when it meets on to-morrow, Chairman Sayers says he will present it then, and urge immediate consideration.

It is believed that such a request will be seconded by the house, and the pooling bill will be laid aside. But if the appropriation bill shall not be ready a vote on the pooling bill may be taken, and the general opinion is that it will pass, possibly so amended as to give the interstate-commerce commission final jursdiction of the proposed contracts between the companies.

Mr. O'Neill (dem., Mass.) has announced his intention to call up the pension appropriation bill for 1895. This will evoke discussion of the pension pension policy of the administration and may occupy the time of the house for more than a day. In that case it will meet the antagonism of Mr. Brown (dem., Ind.), chairman of the committee on elections, who will on Thursday ask consideration of the Williams-Settle contested election case from the fifth North Carolina district, which came over by agreement from last session.

The second week of the session promises to witness a fierce struggle over the income tax in connection with the appropriation to be incorporated in the urgent deficiency bill to provide for the collection of the tax, which begins Jan. 1, 1895.

Mr. Bartlett, of New York, is at the head of the opposition to the appropriation, and although the opposition is not considered strong enough to defeat the appropriation it is expected that the debate will abound in acrimonious references to the late election, and that much bad blood will be manifested.

The consideration of the income tax appropriation may consume several days.

EXPOSURE OF AN AMERICAN MEDIUM IN PARIS.

The Bulky Princess Clad Only in Tights Makes a Desperate Fight to Free Herself From the Grasp of a Vigorous Young Man, and then Cries Fraud.

The details of the exposure in Paris of the notorious Mrs. Mary E. Williams, the spirit medium of West Forty-sixth Street, New York, has just been given to the press by Mme. de Laversay, who is one of the leaders of the spiritual movement in France, and witnessed the affair. She says:

"Mrs. Williams went into the cabinet wearing an elegant silk dress of the latest fashion. The lights were turned out, leaving a feeble glimmer from a lamp at the far corner of the room. Before retiring Mrs. Williams gave a short address of a religious character, claiming that all she did was by the direct assistance of the Almighty, and by her directions we were kept singing pretty much all the time. After awhile her guide came out, just visible in hazy white outline, and gave us her blessing in a deep masculine voice.

"Then more forms came out, singly or in pairs, and, as they gained confidence, advanced a good way into the room. Finally a pair came out, who, Mme. Roulot explained, were Mr. Cushman and his daughter. Suddenly the young man by my side sprang up and pounced upon Mr. Cushman, who struggled violently in his grasp and emitted scream after scream of decidedly feminine shrillness. At the same moment another man jumped up and took possession of Miss Cushman, who made neither resistance nor sound.

"The two men simultaneously seized Conductor McDonald, and the fifth struck a light. My goodness! What a sight it was that met our astonished eyes!

"There was Mme. Williams in most extraordinary attire, struggling violently in the grasp of Monsieur, screaming her loudest, with one hand grasping his throat and with the other hitting out wildly at him. He was between her and the cabinet, clasping her from behind, and evidently not strong enough to master such a powerful woman.

"My first impulse was to jump up and protest, as I knew what fearful mischief might be done by the sudden seizure of mediums in this way, but the spectacle of her astonishing get-up rooted me to my seat.

"She was dressed in black tights with a man's short lounge jacket, white collar and front, and some dark material across her breast to do duty for a waistcoat. Her bunch of false hair—bang it is called in America—was off, and on her head was a tight-fitting black cap, which kept the hair close down, and appeared to be tied with a string under her chin. She had also a small black mustache attached to her upper lip, and, finally, was without boots.

"Anything more comical than the appearance she presented it would be impossible to conceive. As for Miss Cushman, a glance sufficed to reveal that she was nothing but a great doll, a painted mask with a lot of flowing white drapery attached to it, and evidently held out by Mrs. Williams at arm's length as she advanced into the room. Turning to the conductor, who had sat at the corner of the room furthest from me, I saw him struggling in the clutches of a couple of men and flourishing in the air a chair, which at the first alarm he had snatched up with the idea of defense. All was in the greatest confusion, and in the midst of the screams and shouts Madame's voice could be heard exclaiming that it was a plot to ruin her, and that the doll had been brought into the house by M. Leymarie.

"Mme. Williams was allowed to put on her dress, which hung on a peg in the cabinet, and then all the people demanded their money back. Some had paid ten francs, some twenty, some more. People who had been at the previous sittings and who had been invited by Mme. Roulot to come to the exposure, which had all been carefully planned, crowded into the room and clamored for what they had been defrauded of. Macdonald had already given up every sou about him, and when he declared that he had no more, a big, heavy money bag was brought out of Madame's trunk, and for some minutes there was the sound of counting out francs, mingled with threats from the angry victims. Finally, all were satisfied, and the conductor, such a solemn, unctuous hypocrite as he had been, but now so crestfallen and woebegone, looked sorrowfully at the lightened bag and sighed and gazed around at the angry faces with a look that said, 'In spite of all, I forgive you.'

"As long as I live I shall never forget that night. Mrs. Williams never ceased to protest that she was the victim of a plot, but no one paid the least attention to her. In fact, Mme. Roulot, another lady and myself were the only persons in the room who could understand what she said: and you may be sure that, after the tights and all the rest, her protestations had little influence upon us except to make us laugh. The end of it all was that madame and her confederate were turned out of the house that very night to go where they might, leaving behind them as spoils to the victors the doll, draperies, white and black wigs, beards, wire, and I cannot tell you what."

When Mrs. Williams reached London she promptly made a statement of the exposure to the spiritualistic publication, Light. After giving a sketch of her career, she characterized the exposure as a plot. She said that the men who exposed her brought with them the masks and other paraphernalia to use as evidence against her.

"They tore down the curtain that formed the front of the cabinet," she said, "and jumped on me sitting entranced in my chair. They had already torn off part of my clothing and my shoes when I recovered consciousness, and their evident intention was to strip me naked and to expose me in that condition to the audience, as their fellow ruffians have frequently treated mediums in America and elsewhere in times that are past.

"I was, however, fortunately strong enough to resist successfully, but not without a struggle, as my bruised and scratched arms attest.

"At the same moment they made the attack upon me, three of the conspirators seized and held Mr. Macdonald, but he saw some of the others throw things into the little closet that served me as a cabinet, and I also was aware that this was done."

The first building and loan association in the country was organized near Philadelphia in 1831.

AUSTRALIA'S RABBIT WAR.

Man's Almost Hopeless Struggle Against the Pest.

Men have been canonized for a variety of reasons—some more worthy than others. There is, or was a man who, could his name be ascertained to-day, would receive a left-handed canonization by the general acclamation of at least four millions of his fellow men. He may have done it innocently; he may have done it thoughtlessly; he may even have done it with the best intentions—but he introduced wild rabbits into Australasia! It is certain he could not have dreamed of the results, as even now the mischief he has wrought can hardly be comprehended by the rest of the world. What he actually did was to risk the destruction of a continent.

Less than thirty years ago some one, happily unknown, set at liberty in the colony of New South Wales and in the south island of New Zealand, a few English rabbits. He is supposed to have done this for sporting purposes.

It was several years before much notice was taken of the new colonists. Then little, by little, the rapid increase of the newcomers began to be talked about.

Runholders in southern New Zealand were the first to feel the scourge. So rapid was the increase of the evil after this that within a year or two it became the subject of a parliamentary inquiry in the colonial Legislative Assembly. The runholders, who generally lease their land from the State, represented that if the new plague continued to increase at the same rate for a very few years the State property would be almost, if not quite, valueless as sheep runs, and would therefore bring in no rents.

The colonial Legislature took alarm and was both prompt and decisive in its action. A law was at once passed to compel each landowner, or leaseholder, under heavy penalties, to destroy the rabbits within proclaimed districts.

Various plans were adopted, but the one found most successful in New Zealand was to keep packs of trained dogs to hunt the rabbits. This was carried so far that on one large run no fewer than 240 dogs and a considerable staff of men were maintained for some years until the evil was greatly reduced. Some owners introduced ferrets, weasels, and stoats for the same purpose, but the Legislature interfered to protect the birds of the country by preventing these animals being set at liberty.

With energy and enterprise which, among the colonies of Australasia, are characteristic of the people of New Zealand, a use has been found for the rabbits, large quantities of which are now canned in various forms for market, while their skins are exported in quantities which give an idea of the extent of the plague. Last year the export of rabbit skins was officially reported as between seven and eight millions. These are said to be worth about two cents each.

A MILE A MINUTE AT SEA.

A Welch Inventors Ideas of the Possibilities of the Old-Time Paddle.

To cross the Atlantic in less than three days. To travel a mile a minute at sea!

It is considered by many that the maximum rate of speed in Atlantic steamships has been reached now that the Campania and Lucania can go from land to land in a few hours more than five days, but Mr. George Augustus Haig, of Pen Ithon, Newton, Montgomeryshire, Wales, maintains that steamers can be built that will make the voyage in two or three days.

Mr. Haig, who is the senior partner of a London firm, has devoted much of his leisure to the study of steam navigation, and has now prepared plans which demonstrate the practicability of driving a vessel through the ocean at the rate of sixty miles an hour.

Mr. Haig says that the risk of crossing the Atlantic in a well built, well planned steamer at the rate of sixty miles an hour is considerably less than the risk run by the Flying Dutchman or the Flying Scotchman—fast English trains—day after day. As to the enormous expense of obtaining a high speed at sea, he thinks it is because shipowners have rigidly adhered to the use of the screw propeller placed only at the stern of the ship, by which the propelling surface has of necessity been made very much smaller than the resisting surface, and, therefore, much too small even in fine, calm weather, while there has been no reserve to overcome head winds and the action of the waves.

By the plan Mr. Haig proposes he contends the propelling surface can be enormously increased, so that it would greatly exceed the submerged cross section of the ship, and consequently there would be a large reserve of propelling power to overcome the intermitting obstructions of the waves and violent head winds.

Mr. Haig says: I shall no doubt surprise many shipowners when I suggest that shipbuilders should give up the screw propeller and return to the long discarded paddle wheel, but then it will be made in a very different position. Heretofore no one ever thought of utilizing more than two paddle wheels to propel a vessel at sea. The larger the vessel the larger the wheels, and those wheels were put in the worst possible position, that is outside the ship, one on each side at the broadest part and just dipping into the water at the very spot where the rolling of the vessel was sure to immerse the paddles too deep at one moment and leave them a few seconds after with almost no grip of the water, while if there was a head sea on every passing wave did the same. Why no more than two wheels, one on each side, were used, I cannot conceive, unless it was thought, as many scientific men still think, that the wheel makes a current in the water, and that one wheel behind another would be useless. That, however, is an utter fallacy. If a wheel makes a current then each separate paddle makes its own separate current.

No paddle wheel steamer ever had more than two paddle wheels, one on each side. But I have no such hallucination about one paddle wheel interfering with the action of another wheel behind it any more than six oars on each side of a rowing boat interfere with each other.

Therefore, my plan is to put a great number of paddle wheels, one behind the other, in the very centre of the ship's length and breadth, in a fore and aft line, making them work into a water channel between the stem and stern of the ship, just above the ship's bottom.

ASK THEM Why?

Ask the men who are making imitations of COTTOLENE, the new vegetable shortening, why they give up lard and try to trade on the merits of COTTOLENE? Perhaps you can guess why.

ASK HIM Why?

Ask the grocer who attempts substitution, why he tries to sell an imitation when people call for that pure, palatable and popular vegetable shortening, COTTOLENE? Perhaps you can guess.

ASK YOURSELF Why?

Why should not YOU use COTTOLENE, instead of lard or any other compound, for all cooking purposes? It has the highest possible endorsement; from Physicians as to healthfulness; from Cooking Experts as to superiority; from housekeepers as to economy. Use COTTOLENE and stick to it.

Sold in 3 and 5 pound pails.

Vanity

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. Cleaning or dyeing makes it possible to use soiled or faded garments. And there's where our ax comes in. We are in the Cleaning and Dyeing business. Our cleaner is ready, and our dyer has his fall shades mixed.

Ask for our little booklet "Re-Freshing Thoughts." It tells about cleaning the men's clothing.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Frank Stover spent yesterday in Newark.

Mrs. Potter of Park avenue is visiting Philadelphia friends.

Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Slevin have returned from their wedding trip.

Wm. H. Bohl will break ground on Stone street tomorrow for a new house.

Edwin J. Douglass of Washington avenue recently started West on a business trip.

M. F. Elderton of The Courier-News staff is on duty again, after a few-days illness.

A tea will be given at the home of Miss Abbott, Central avenue, Saturday, December 15.

Miss Truslow of New York is visiting her sister, Mrs. A. W. Haviland of Rockview avenue.

Victor Lawton has issued invitations for a party to be held at his home Thursday, Dec. 13.

Miss Graff of Newark, Delaware, is a guest at the home of C. W. McCutchen of Rockview avenue.

Julius Williams of Elmwood place has returned from a business trip, and will spend the holidays at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Arthur Tilney are home from their wedding trip. They will make their home in Boston.

Miss Louise Holmes of East Front street will receive a few friends at her home Friday evening, Dec. 14.

Mrs. J. C. VanDyke of East Front street is assisting in decorating for the fair at the New Market Baptist Church.

Mrs. John Scott and little daughter left for Augusta, Ga., to remain the Winter in hopes of regaining her health.

Mr. and Mrs. Lemuel W. Serrell, Jr., were guests at the home of Mr. Serrell's father on West Front street yesterday.

George B. Titsworth, who has been seriously ill, is slightly improved. A consultation of doctors was held yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fisk entertained a few friends at their home on Seventh street Saturday evening. It was delightful informal affair.

Miss May Hayden, daughter of the late Morgan S. Taylor, was quietly married at her mother's home this morning to Edward Taylor Wilson, Rev. Dr. Yerkes officiating.

William Cooper, son of John C. Cooper of Warrenville, Somerset County, returned home from the West last evening, after a trip of two years in the interests of the Phœnix Bridge Company.

Rev. D. W. Morehouse of New York, Secretary of the Unitarian Conference of the United States and Canada, preached to an attentive audience in All Souls Church yesterday on "The Mystery of Life's Disappointments".

Among the many valuable gifts at the Sattels-Young wedding reception, Wednesday, much admiration was expressed for the beautiful upright mahogany Behr Bros. piano, presented by the firm of Vanderbeek & Sattels to the bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry W. Marshall of East Fifth street, at whose home the next tea of the Ladies Christian Work Society of Trinity Reformed Church takes place this week Thursday evening, have prepared a very entertaining musical programme for the occasion. A large attendance and an enjoyable evening are promised.

A second series of "Poverty Luncheons" has been inaugurated by another set of young women, the first one of this set being held Saturday at the home of Miss Munger of Washington avenue. The limit of expenditure for each luncheon, two dollars, gives so much food for economic reflections and skillful devices on the part of the hostess, while at the same time, it gives so much food for expectation in addition to the substantial viands to the guests, that these social functions prove novel, charming and eminently satisfactory.

Thomas H. Keller has returned from the South, bringing with him a beautiful basket of rare japonicas from the plantation of his Georgian host, Capt. Charles Cunningham, whose home on the Ogeechee river is one of the most ideal places in the South. Snipe, duck, quail and woodcock, with splendid fishing, make it a paradise for his sportsmen friends; and as he himself is a thorough sportsman and a fine Southern gentleman of the old school, he enjoys to the fullest, with his friends, all the region's delights.

For Judge of the Supreme Court.

(From The Summit Record.)

At the risk of seeming a little premature, the Record ventures to suggest, that in the selection of a successor to the lamented Judge Abbett, Governor Werts can choose no worthier a jurist and can display no greater wisdom in exercising the powers conferred on him, than by appointing to that post the Honorable Robert Stockton Green, of Elizabeth.

Ex-Governor Green's services to his State, are very little, if any, less eminent than those of the Judge whose unlooked for death has plunged New Jersey into mourning, and these very services, as well as his high standing before the bar of New Jersey, would make it practically certain that the Senate, notwithstanding its Republican majority, would confirm the nomination of ex-Governor Green.

There would be a peculiar fitness in the appointment as Judge Abbett's successor on the Bench, of the man who succeeded him in the Executive chair at Trenton, less than seven years ago, and Governor Werts, the successor and firm friend of both Executives, will increase the respect for himself, that the character of his judicial appointments has already awakened in every part of New Jersey, by the nomination to the vacant place on the Bench of Robert S. Green.

Death of Mrs. Siebrecht.

Distressing to all Plainfield was the news received yesterday of the death of Mrs. Henry A. Siebrecht, Jr., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Titsworth of this city.

The death occurred at 9:30 Saturday night at her home in New Rochelle. Her mother was in attendance. The young wife's sad death was caused by spasms.

Decedent was warmly beloved by a wide circle. The funeral will take place as announced in another column. Mother and infant daughter will be laid at rest together.

Last of the Ragans.

H. H. Ragan's lecture course terminated Saturday evening with "The Yosemite and The Yellowstone", which was in many respects the most interesting of the series. The views were fine, and the lecture was replete with entertaining anecdote and instructive narrative. Mr. Ragan in saying good-bye said he hoped to meet the Plainfield people again, and was given a vigorous outburst of applause, testifying to the affection in which he is held. The audience was large despite the bad weather. Mr. Ragan has gone on a tour through New England.

Her Devotion to Home Was Fatal.

Mrs. Henry Mellman of Webster place, who died Saturday night, probably hastened her end by an eccentric a . When first taken ill, she was removed to the Muhlenberg Hospital. While there, home matters seemed to prey upon her mind, and one morning, without the consent or knowledge of her nurse, she left the hospital and walked to her home. In her weakened condition the shock was too much for her to bear, and her end soon followed. She leaves a husband, daughter, and an aged mother, to mourn her loss.

A Pole Improvement.

Rev. J. P. Taylor, owner of the building at the corner of Park and North avenues, occupied by Grocer F. W. Dunn, asked Superintendent McClurg of the Electric Light Company to remove the old gaslight post that had so long stood by the electric light pole at that corner; and Mr. McClurg, desiring to please Mr. Taylor, had his men remove the old lamp-post, as requested. The letter-box is attached to the new electric light pole at the same spot, and the corner looks better.

Gas Wanted.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—It appears by occasional notices in your paper that the gas company are laying pipes in different sections to accommodate a few new customers. Wonder if they know that residents of West Seventh street have been waiting two years for gas; or have they determined to ignore that locality entirely? It looks that way. ONE OF THEM.

—Announcement was made yesterday by Rev. Dr. Richards of a home missionary praise meeting to be held in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church Friday afternoon at 3:30. Tea will be served during the session.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Adam Blair has purchased a team of horses from A. D. Thompson.

—Infant baptism was celebrated in the Trinity Reformed Church at the morning service yesterday.

—The North Plainfield fire gong got stuck again last night and was fifty seconds getting loose.

—Vano, the great healing power, appears in Reform Hall tonight. He will effect a number of cures free.

—The Manhattans of North Plainfield will go to Somerville this evening and bowl a game with the latter club.

—The meeting at the Third Street Mission last evening was conducted by Mr. Marcley, and was an excellent one.

—At 8 tonight the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor will meet in the lecture room of Trinity Reformed Church. Visitors are always welcome.

—The Plainfield Bowling Club will bowl the Arthur Kulls in Elizabeth this evening. Anyone wishing to go can meet them at the 6:04 train.

—Every member of John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, is urged to be present this evening at the meeting. Election of officers will take place.

—Detective Corsa is proving a faithful servant of the Jersey Central. He has unearthed another gang of junk thieves, in Somerville, and arrested several of them.

—Peter Anderson, simply drunk, who was arrested on North avenue Saturday night, and who works in the glove factory, was discharged this morning, sentence being suspended.

—The cases of E. W. Hedges against Babbitt, E. W. Hedges against McDonough, and E. W. Hedges against West, all on contract, are returnable in Justice Newcorn's Court Dec. 20.

—Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes preached a very forcible sermon yesterday morning in the First Baptist Church on the "Influence of the Home". The musical part of the service was a feature.

—The reception and dance to be given by the Sons of Veterans, New Year's Eve, in the Olympia, will be conducted in a first-class manner, and those attending are assured of an evening of pleasure.

—A special Christmas musical praise service is announced for Sunday evening, Dec. 23, at the First Presbyterian Church, at which P. Ludwig Conde and his orchestra will render selections appropriate to the occasion.

—A concert and fair under the auspices of the Earnest Workers of Bethel Chapel, assisted by the auxiliary, will be given Thursday and Friday evenings, Dec. 13 and 14. Concert first night, admission, 25 cents; fair second night, admission, 10 cents.

—M. M. Crosbie of Asbury Park finds on visiting Plainfield today that his house on Halsey street near West Third has been badly treated by malicious boys. All the glass has been broken, and the property has been otherwise injured. Police protection is needed.

—Fresh from Vienna and Paris are the styles shown at the dressmaking parlors of Madame Gottheil, 1040 Arlington avenue. This skilful modiste is prepared to receive patrons Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. Her terms will be found reasonable, and her service satisfactory.

—The grand romantic opera "Carmen" is in four acts. The work is full of melody, and exceedingly dramatic in character. All the famous prima donnas of the day are now anxious to sing the role of "Carmen". The Duff Opera Company is the only organization singing it in English. It will appear in Music Hall Friday night.

—Mrs. Smalley, widow of Daniel I. Smalley, with George Egel as her manager, still continues to supply nearly all of North Plainfield with the choicest cuts of meats, poultry, etc. Her prices are as low as can be for the quality of goods sold, and she asks those readers of The Daily Press who do not patronize her to give her a trial order.

Old People.

Old people who require medicine to regulate the bowels and kidneys will find the true remedy in Electric Bitters. This medicine does not stimulate and contains no whiskey nor other intoxicant, but acts as a tonic and alterative. It acts mildly on the stomach and bowels, adding strength and giving tone the organs, thereby aiding nature in the performance of the functions. Electric Bitters is an excellent appetizer and aids digestion. Old people find it just exactly what they need. Price fifty cents per bottle at L. W. Randolph's Drug store.

—Walter Sanford's elaborate production of the great English facing play "The Prodigal Daughter", which had such phenomenally long runs in London and New York, comes Wednesday night to Music Hall, where it will be presented in all its entirety.

Secret Meeting.

The Class of '95, North Plainfield Public School, held a secret meeting, last week, to ascertain what the class colors should be and to transact other business. The meeting was held in the library of the school, but as the boys were absent and the girls could come to no understanding the meeting was adjourned till some time in the near future.

Miss E. Clark of Lebanon, Hunterdon County, is the guest of Miss Krymer of West Second Street.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her and she says it saved her life. Mr. Thos. Eggers, 139 Florida street, San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption, tried without result everything else then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medicine in coughs and colds. At L. W. Randolph's Drug store. Regular size 50c and $1.00, our price 45c and 90c.

Shiloh's Cure, the great cough and croup cure, is in great demand. Pocket size contains 25 doses, only 25c. Children love it. Sold by all druggists.

Vaccinated Land.

Impoverished land is now "vaccinated" on the continent of Europe. It is generally known that land is enriched by planting it occasionally with a luguminous crop like clover or lucerne, the roots of which absorb more nitrogen than they take from the ground. Where the nitrogen came from was the problem. Messrs. Hellriegel and Willfarth have discovered that the absorbtion is due to minute organisms, a sort of disease in the roots, which, when the supply of nitrogen in the soil begins to fail, appear as an excrescence, draw nitrogen from the air, and so enrich the soil again. Experiments have been made in France and Germany to hasten the growth of the disease by sprinkling the fields with soil in which tuberculous crops have been grown or with water in which they have been steeped. In Prussia a field was sown with lupins; one part of it was then treated in the ordinary way, the other inoculated from an old lupin crop; the yield in the latter part was five and a [illegible] as in the other.

Where Spreckles' Check Went.

San Francisco, Dec. 10.—There has been much speculation as to what became of the $1,500,000 for which Claus Spreckels drew his check recently on the Nevada bank in favor of the Bank of California. Assistant United States Treasurer Berry declared that the talk about Spreckels buying the beet sugar plant at Chino, and the 40,000 acres of land surrounding it, is all nonsense. The million and a half, Berry states, was paid in the sub-treasury here for the account of the syndicate which recently purchased the big issue of United States bonds.

Not To-Day.

An English lady, traveling in New Zealand, waxes enthusiastic over the beauties of the country, especially in its mountainous parts. She tells a funny little story about the sharp-witted driver of the public coach in which she made some of her expeditions. At one point where the steep road overhangs the river, Davis, the driver, always took the opportunity to lighten the load for his horses. "Gentlemen," he would say in an insinuating tone, "the prince of Wales always gets out and walks here." It is to be presumed that he had usually found his "fares" quite ready to follow in the footsteps of so distinguished a predecessor, but one day a man, who had already heard the speech more than once, stole a march upon the wily Davis. The ground was wet, and the passenger was not in a mood for climbing; so as they approached the spot, he anticipated the driver's hint by remarking: "Davis, the prince of Wales isn't going to walk to-day."—Youth's Companion.

HE KEPT THE UMBRELLA.

Whether He Did Right or Wrong There Was Nobody to Decide.

The ethics of meum and tuum are elastic as regarded by most individuals. One man thinks it his duty to keep what another man will feel it a sin not to render up, and where the responsibility ends in the search for an owner of lost property is an undecided question. One man formed his decision in public the other day in this regard, and no doubt came out the better for it.

He had stepped down the staircase of the Third avenue "L" at the Grand Central station, and been whacked on the shoulders by an excited woman with a very genteel umbrella.

"It belongs to the lady in red," she screamed, and the man, who was a gentlemanly, middle-aged individual, forged ahead, gripping the umbrella, which he offered to the young woman in crimson, already carrying a white parasol.

This young woman disclaimed it, and the man, casting about for another woman in red, lit on a portly female well on in front, with a wealth of red roses in her bonnet.

This second also refused it, displaying her own black gloria, and then the perspiring, breathless gentleman fled on, panting and pinning his hope on a vestige of red which he saw in a far-off young woman's collar.

She didn't own it, either, and then beneath the blazing afternoon sun the overworked man stood and looked to every side of him for one other woman with a glimmer of red, but he couldn't see any. Then he felt he had discharged his duty and his face assumed an expression not only of pleasure, but of hope.

He unfurled the umbrella and stroked the silk appraisingly. He regarded the handle, then the ferule, raised it, eyed it approvingly, closed it again, stuck it under his arm to see how it felt when it wasn't raining, then opened it finally again, and, thrusting it with an air of well satisfied possession between him and the sunlight, strolled down Forty-second street.

And there was no one to remark as to whether or not his duty might have been considered to end, or that there was any such place as a lost property office.—N. Y. Herald.

UNDER THE OCEAN WAVE.

Uncle Sam will Build a Boat to Run Submerged.

A ship that can plough the waves of the sea, or safely plunge into its depths and there be navigated and returned to the surface at will, has been the dream of inventors and the theme of imaginative fiction writers; but now the dreams and flights of wild imagination are to be practically realized.

From the time of the experiments of Robert Fulton the problem has been worked on with varying degrees of success, all falling short of the ideal; and the great governments have been slow in launching the people's money on the uncertain sea of problematical submarine navigation. But now the intensely practical and very matter-of-fact Navy Department is about to have constructed a craft that is able to safely cruise beneath the surface of the water, and be the most formidable instrument of naval warfare yet known.

After a long delay, which has been occupied by careful examinations, experiments and many postponements, Secretary Herbert has approved the recommendations of the Board of Bureau Chiefs of the Navy Department to construct a submarine torpedo boat on the plans and designs furnished by the Holland Torpedo Boat Company.

The boat is a cigar shaped steel structure, 80 feet long and 11 feet in diameter, with a total displacement of 138.5 tons, having quadruple expansion engines, with a speed capacity of sixteen knots an hour, when running light, and eight knots an hour when running submerged. Slightly forward of the centre of the vessel there is erected an armor turret. When the superstructure is awash and three feet of water covering the hull, fifteen knots an hour will be made. The boat is provided with two expulsion tubes and five automatic torpedos. Two additional torpedos can be carried if desired.

Petroleum is the fuel used, and the boat can make 1,200 miles with one loading. It is independent of any particular station, and can operate from any point where fuel can be had. Besides the steam engines, the boat carries an electric storage battery, to be used for propulsion when submerged, and this battery can be recharged from a dynamo, which also furnishes electric lights.

The boat can be sunk to a depth of twenty feet below the surface of the water within twenty seconds after the order is given to dive, the boat at that time running light and running full speed ahead. The craft can be sunk to that depth in ten seconds if running at full speed with steam and having three feet of water over the hull. When submerged with three feet of water over the hull the pilot can obtain a view over the water by means of a camera lucida in a tube that projects over the surface.

The boat can be sunk to a depth of 70 feet and there operate at a speed of eight knots an hour. And this submergance is not very temporary, for it can be maintained continuously for three days. At this depth the crew can live quite comfortably, though their quarters are greatly restricted. They have plenty of good air to breathe, which is kept compressed into air chambers of seventy cubic feet capacity, and held there at a pressure of 2,000 pounds to the square inch, until needed. This pressure means that the air chambers hold 133 volumes of atmospheric air.

A GREAT PREACHER DWARFED.

Objects to Publication of His Sermons Without Permission.

The Rev. Dr. Joseph Parker, pastor of the City Temple, London, has been expressing high indignation because some newspaper printed extracts from a sermon without permission. The irate preacher of the Gospel of Christ even declared: "The man who reports a sermon without the preacher's permission is a thief." He explains frankly that the preacher may desire to sell the sermon or preach it elsewhere on the next Sunday. "A Dick Turpin of a reporter," prevents this.

This strong language provokes many unkind remarks about the gentleman, who, since Spurgeon's death, has been considered by many as London's greatest pulpit orator. It really does seem that the soul-saving business like all other things English, has got down to a strictly commercial basis. Some rather awkard extracts from Holy writ, including quotations from the lips of the Preacher of the Sermon on the Mount, an authority usually held in quite high respect at the City Temple, have been brought to Dr. Parker's attention this week by the London press. Some, even of the parishioners of this gentle follower of Jesus, have been disturbed by his words. Thus one writes to the Times:

"Dr. Parker's letter causes me some qualms of conscience. A few weeks back I was able to pour consolation into the heart of an old friend, who was in great mental affliction and bodily weakness, by reciting to him some singularly beautiful sentences I had heard from the City Temple pulpit. I confess it quite escaped me that I ought to have charged my sorrowing friend three shillings sixpence or so for the use of the preacher's balm for wounded souls, and transmitted the money to the owner of such mental medicine. I think Dr. Parker will see that, even in these ungodly times, the public are not yet ready for viewing what they are told is the House of God as a shop, and the proclamation of the Everlasting Gospel as a trafficing in marketable goods. Doubtless Dr. Parker's letter will help the people to see him and his work in the right light."

Others put the pertinent inquiry whether Dr. Parker is greater than his Master. It is recalled by the newspaper men that in his earlier days he not only welcomed the reporters, but used to beg editors to send them, and when none came he was not above summarizing his sermons himself and sending reports to the newspaper offices. No man, in fact, knows better than Dr. Parker how to utilize the newspapers for gratuitously advertising himself. When, a few years ago, he aspired to fill Henry Ward Beecher's pulpit, he took immense pains to obtain the assistance of all the agencies engaged in the business of cabling news to the American Press.

MURDER IN COLD BLOOD

Hayward Deliberately Shot Miss Catharine Ging.

His Companion in Crime Gives All the Sickening Details of How the Young Lady Was Lured Out for a Drive and Shot to Death for the Insurance on Her Life.

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 10.—A confession has been made in the Catherine Ging murder case.

It has been the theory of the police that G. A. Blixt, the engineer of the Ozark flats, where both Miss Ging and Harry Hayward resided, committed the murder at the instigation of Hayward.

Blixt broke down and made a complete confession in which he charges Harry Hayward with committing the murder. According to his story he was sent by Hayward to the scene of the murder. Hardly had he arrived there when Hayward drove up with Miss Ging. When within fifty feet of him the shots were fired and Hayward alighted from the buggy.

"The deed is done", said he, "get in and drive it around until it is dead and then dump it out."

Blixt took Hayward's place in the buggy and drove along the road for about a mile until he become satisfied that Miss Ging was dead. Then he drove back and rolled the body into the road. He then drove the horse about a mile until he reached the Lyndale avenue car line. Then he turned the animal loose and rode in a car down town.

The murder according to Blixt, was committed shortly after 7 o'clock and as soon as he got into the buggy Hayward walked to the Hennepin avenue car line and then took the daughter of a prominent lawyer to the theatre.

Blixt claims that the murder was originally fixed for the preceding Sunday night, but circumstances were such that it had to be abandoned.

Hayward was to "slug" Miss Ging with a piece of railroad iron which Blixt had provided, the body was to have been thrown out near the curb at a street corner, the horse turned loose and the buggy wrecked for the purpose of giving color to the theory that the woman had been killed in a runaway. This plan, so Blixt says, could not be carried out successfully and it was decided to shoot her.

Blixt tells of several other jobs which had been proposed by Hayward, but which fell through, and says that after this job, for which he was to receive $2,000, or one fifth of the life insurance involved, he was to receive $400 for "doing" a Chicago man.

The cold blooded brutality of the crime has caused unusual excitement, and the act of Hayward in deliberately taking another woman to the theatre an hour after shooting Miss Ging may cause a lynching. If the young lady's friends can reach him he will be given a short shift for his life.

Blixt has collapsed completely and has been begging for mercy. He is a pitiable sight.

"I was drunk most of the time," he explained, "and didn't know what I was doing. I have been drinking steadily for two months."

Hayward is a cold blooded rascal, polished in address and of handsome appearance. He was graduated from an eastern college and stood high in society.

HARD TIMES THE CAUSE.

Pennsylvania's Factory Inspector Reports on Last Year's Work.

Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 10.—The annual report of Factory Inspector Watchurn has been submitted to Gov. Pattison. He says that the depression in business has resulted in fluctuating reports from the deputy inspectors owing to many establishments working irregularly.

He speaks of the upward tendency of present factory conditions and shows that there has been a marked improvement in many respects. Reference is made to the special inspection of the sweat shops in Philadelphia and Pittsburg, which disclosed conditions which ought to be remeded by legislation.

The report shows a falling off in the number of persons employed in factories during the year of nearly 16,000. During the last two months there have been unmistakable evidence of a return to normal conditions.

It is the opinion of the factory inspector that the sweating system should be reached by more stringent laws and that the semi-monthly pay law should be amended.

Found Arsenic in Her Body.

Williamsport, Ind., Dec. 10.—Several months ago Mrs. William Drollinger, living near Covington, died very suddenly, and there were suspicions that she had met with foul play. Some time in July the coroner ordered a postmortem, and as the result of this arsenic was found in sufficient quantities to produce death. Drollinger was indicted for wife murder. The accused is a well-to-do farmer. Several years ago Drollinger's first wife died under suspicious circumstances, as it is now alleged, and there is talk of exhuming her remains to discover if arsenic caused her death.

PEANUTS NO GO.

And American Popcorn, Too, a Dead Loss at the Antwerp Fair.

Americans eat a good many things unknown to Europeans and others which the people on the other side would not eat, even if they had a chance. Bananas, sweet potatoes, pop corn and peanuts are almost unknown in Europe says the Chicago Tribune.

A young Chicagoan did not know this and it cost him several thousand dollars to find it out. He has returned from the Antwerp Exposition, where he experimented with the sale of pop corn and peanuts, and the stories he tells of his experience are amusing.

"I knew the concessionnaires at the World's Fair in Chicago earned money out of nickel bags of popcorn and peanuts," he said. "The firm who had the concession here made something like one hundred thousand dollars. I had about $5,000 saved up for a good investment, and so when the fair closed here I made application for the sole concession of the sale of peanuts and popcorn at Antwerp.

"There were no competitors and I got the concession. Now I wished I had not. I bought up all the popcorn and peanut roasters left over from the fair, and went down South and purchased a car load of peanuts and made several contracts for several other carloads to be shipped later on. But I did not need them. The paraphernalia together with several hundred bags of old corn and peanuts, went over, and I followed it. After weeks of hard work I was ready for business. But there was none. Money is less plentiful in Europe than in the United States. Those people over there thought as much of five centimes as an American thinks of half a dollar.

"I saw I had to make a low price for my stuff, so I put the popcorn and peanuts on sale at fifteen centimes a bag, which is equal to three cents in American money. Well, I had my hopes built up, and before I started to sell I dreamed of bagsful of twenty franc gold pieces and what I would do with them when I got back to Chicago. You can imagine my surprise when I saw what the first woman did who had induced her companion to buy a bag of popcorn. She bit a piece in two looked scared and then exclaimed in French: 'Why, it is cork. The Americans want to poison us.'

"Her companion tasted the corn and jabbered something in French, and then took the whole bag and threw it away. When I saw this I was ready to faint. One after another the popcorn bags found their way to the floor. My hopes shattered, I still had confidence in the peanuts. But they did not like them either. They broke the shells took out the nuts, hull and all, munched them, and then cried, 'B-r-r-r!' and the peanuts went the way of the popcorn.

"How did I make out? I came out, and that is about all. I stayed there six weeks, and after I lost my money started to see some of the Continent. Now I am glad I am back in Chicago, and I don't want anything to do with peanuts and popcorn in Europe hereafter. It has been a lesson for me, and I paid $5,000 for it; still, I guess it is worth its price."

A Legal Levy.

The book peddler had called at the lawyer's office to sell him a book, says the Detroit Free Press, and the lawyer very peremptorily didn't want any book. The peddler insisted, and the lawyer continued to decline. At last the lawyer rose in wrath.

"Now, look here," he said emphatically. I've told you I don't want your book, and I mean what I say. Furthermore, my advice to you is to get out of this promptly or I'll throw you out."

The peddler was about to make a remark.

"And," interrupted the lawyer, "let me also say that if you hesitate I shall charge you for that advice and levy on your books to satisfy judgment. "Now, git," and the suppressed peddler got.

COULD HARDLY BREATHE.

Catarrh of the Nose, Throat, and Stomach—Life Made Miserable by Headaches, Pain and Cough.

Lida McCandless, No. 1230 South Thirtyfifth street, Philadelphia, in conversation with a reporter, said: "I had a very bad case of catarrh of the nose, throat and stomach, with frequent headaches, pain under the shoulder blades and a horrible cough. I had to keep my mouth constantly open day and night to breathe, and felt as miserable as one possibly could. I was advised to try Munyon's Catarrh Cure. I am happy to say that from the beginning I felt relieved and continued to grow better until now I am entirely well. I am so thankful that this remarkable remedy was ever discovered, and hope others will take advantage of my experience."

Have you Catarrh? Are you willing to investigate a treatment that cures Catarrh by removing the cause? If so ask your druggist for a 25c bottle of Catarrh Tablets. The Catarrh Cure will eradicate the disease from the system, and the Tablets will cleanse and heal the affected parts and restore them to a natural and healthful condition.

Munyon's Homœopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

Turkish Slaughter of Armenians Must End.

Ministers and Public Men in Every Civilized Nation on Earth Banding Together for the Purpose of Punishing the Fiends and Securing to the Patriots Religious Liberty.

Chicago, Dec. 10.—About 2,000 Armenians, men and women, met in Central Music hall to potest against the massacre of Armenian Christians in Turkey by government soldiers and to make an effort towards securing future protection for the persecuted.

The meeting was presided over by H. N. Higginbotham and was addressed by a number of Chicago's prominent citizens. Both the governor of the state and the mayor of the city were present.

The opening discourse was delivered by M. M. Mangasarian, a native of Armenia. Mr. Mangasarian reviewed the history of Turkey, reciting many past massacres by its "bloodthirsty soldiers" and saying that he had satisfied himself of the truth of the reports concerning its recent massacre of Armenians and that the true state of affairs was worse, if possible, than the wildest rumors which had reached this country.

"If the Armenians," he said, "would embrace the Moslem faith, they would enjoy the privileges and the liberties of the Turks and it is on account of their religion purely that they are persecuted."

Dr. F. G. Hirsch, the second speaker said that England did not speak for the Armenians for fear of precipitating a European war and that America was the only country in a position to command.

After short addresses by Judge A. N. Waterman and Mrs. Mary Holmes resolutions were adopted commending President Cleveland's acton in appointing an independent representative to investigate the outrages in Armenia, petitioning the president and congress to use the nation's influence in bringing to justice those responsible for the outrages, and tendering the state department support in any effort to secure better government for Armenia.

Baltimore, Dec. 10.—The ministers of Baltimore of all denominations will unite in a demonstration at Levering hall to-night to protest against the recent massacre of Christians in Armenia.

The Hon. John P. Poe, attorney general of Maryland will presde and there will be addresses by the Rev. Dr. F. M. Ellis, Rabbi Rosenau, Judge Harlan and the Rev. Dr. H. Filian, who was exiled from Armenia, his native country, by the Turkish govenment.

It is expected that resolutions will be passed calling on Secretary Gresham to demand protection for Christians in Armenia.

London, Dec. 10.—A correspondent in Constantinople says:

"The sultan has not assented yet to President Cleveland's proposals that Consul Jewett report on the Armenian inquiry independently to Secretary Gresham. This was not what the sultan desired.

"The arrest of Armenians in Constantinople continues. Three thousand Armenians met in Varna and a deputation afterward visited the consuls of the powers and asked them to enforce the Berlin treaty."

A Berlin correspondent says: "The Armenian Catholics have already sent a memorandum on the Armenian situation to the Asiatic department in St. Petersburg and the foreign office which are zealously studying it."

Vienna, Dec. 10.—It is reported here that the Armenian Catholics will go to St. Petersburg to do homage to Nicholas II, and to confer with M. de Giers as to the massacre in Armenia. A. W. Terrell, the United States minister in Constantinople has been instructed to protect the Protestant missionaries in Armenia. He has asked them to pacify the Armenian Christians as much as possible.

Paris, Dec. 10.—The Armenian community of Paris will send delegates to the mass meeting to be held by the Armenian society in London to protest against the Turkish outrages.

Constantinople, Dec. 10.—An official note communicated to the newspapers says that a commission has been ordered to inquire into the recent acts of brigandage in Armenia. The note contains no reference to the massacre of Armenians by Turkish soldiers.

New York, Dec. 10.—About 200 Armenians, residents of this city, headed by Revs. Haggooni and Michaelian and Dr. Abkarian, met in Calvary Baptist church, Fifty-seventh street near Sixth avenue, and, after discussing the recent Turkish atrocity, passed resolutions calling upon the president and congress to take some action towards protecting Armenians in their native land from the Turks.

Two Fatally Injured.

Binghamton, N. Y., Dec. 10.—John Burrows and a young woman named Campbell had been driving in the afternoon and while crossing the railway tracks at Jarvis street, were struck by passenger train No. 11, of the New York Lake Erie & Western railway bound west, and both were fatally injured.

Escaped Prisoners Shot.

Perry, O. T., Dec. 10.—A fight occurred between officers of Grant county and five escaped prisoners in the Creek nation, in which Dr. Bowman, a noted outlaw, was killed and two other prisoners and one officer were wounded. All the fugitives were captured.

To Start with Non-Union Men.

Martins Ferry, O., Dec. 10.—The Buckeye Glass factory, which has been idle two years, will start up early in January. The glass wokers are excited, because an attempt will be made to resume operations with non-union workmen.

Florence Bradley Disappears.

Norwalk, Conn., Dec. 10.—Miss Florence Bradley started to deliver a pail of milk Friday to a neighbor at Eastern Centre, and has not been seen since. Foul play is feared.

SILVER MAY BE FAVORED.

Federation Delegates Will Probably Take Action on Free Coinage.

Denver, Dec. 10.—Notwithstanding that the delegates to the coming convention of the American Fedeation of Labor profess all ignorance as to the adoption by the delegates of a resolution favoring the free coinage of silver, it is very probable that such a resolution will be introduced as one was drafted some days ago and is now in the pocket of one of the Denver delegates. Secretary Chris Evans said: "It is a delicate matter to talk about. The workingmen of this country are the judges of what is best for their interests and I presume they have instructed their delegates accordingly.

"We of the east have not possibly had the matter so forcibly brought to our attention as you in the west, but it would be useless to deny that we have devoted no little thought to it.

"Have we formed any definte opinion? Well, that is hard to say. What concerns the workingmen of the east equally concerns our brethren in the west, and you know it might be possible that we would agree on any subject. But that is my individual opinion. I know no more than any other delegate what action will be taken."

The principal business to come before the delegates will be the adoption of a political platform.

MAY FIGHT A DUEL.

Georgia Legislators in Trouble over a Registration Bill.

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 10.—The probability of a duel between President of the Senate Venable and Speaker of the House Fleming is the outgrowth of a scene in a committee room.

The registration bill passed by the house has been hung up in the senate and it was to expedite its passage that Speaker Fleming appeared before the senate committee having it in charge.

In stating his case he declared that the rumors current in the capitol were that President Venable had bargained with the populists through Senator McGregor, the populist leader to kill the registration bill if the latter would help him pass through the house an insurance bill in which he takes great interest.

The charge repeated by so prominent a person created a widespread sensation. Both gentlemen, surrounded by their friends, are exchanging letters in which the matters assumes personal form.

Senator McGregor has violently denounced Speaker Fleming on the floor of the senate.

THEIR LOVE IN PRISON.

An Unusual Romance in a Wedding at a Missouri Prison.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 10.—A remarkable wedding has occurred at the Kansas state penitentiary at Lansing. The contracting parties were Arthur Winner and Miss Charlotte Moore. Winner, who is a brother of Willard E. Winner, of Kansas City, promoter of the Winner bridge across the Missouri river at this point, was sentenced to life imprisonment from Sedgewick county, twenty-two years ago, for murder, arson and robbery.

Charlotte Moore was convicted ten years ago as accessoy to the murder of Major Johnson, of Junction City, Kan. When she arrived at the prison she and Winner fell in love. It seemed then a hopeless love, but Winner was released last May and the woman in July.

Since then they have corresponded and finally agreed to be married in the penitentiary. Winner is now a traveling saleman for the shoes made in the prison. Many distinguished men who aided in securing the pardons were present at the wedding.

MUST STAND TRIAL.

Texas Is After Standard Oil Men in Earnest.

Fort Worth, Tex., Dec. 10.—Attorney General Henry declares that the difficulties in bringing standard oil officials to Texas will be overcome and that eventually the oil magnates will be prosecuted for violation of the trust law.

Any defects in the requisition papers sent to the governors of New York and Missouri will be remedied. Aside from these defects there can be no grounds for refusing to grant requisitions.

The efforts of the oil men to avoid coming to Texas, the attorney general declares will prove futile, as sooner or later they will be brought to trial and the law will be enforced.

Indians After Millions.

St. Cloud, Minn., Dec. 10.—A delegation including some of the most prominent members of the tribe of Chippewa Indians from the White Earth reservation is on its way to Washington to lay before the government a claim amounting to $7,000,000, arising from a breach of the terms of a treaty made in 1854.

Took His Life on Her Grave.

Pittsburg, Dec. 10.—Grief drove Henry A. Stocke, an aged German to commit suicide. His wife died two months ago. Stocke has brooded over it, and went to her gave in Homewood cemetery and shot himself through the heart.

Nearly Killed by Footpads.

Chicago, Dec. 10.—Lawyer Richard H. Towne, an old and well known practioner was nearly killed by three foot pads at Van Buren and Fifth avenue, within three blocks of a police station. The thieves secured $25.

Three Firebugs Caught.

Holland, Mich., Dec. 10.—Tim Slagh, Tim Smith and Cornelius Stephens, well known men were arrested here in the act of firing a hotel. They confessed to several similar crimes.

Sheehan Returns to New York.

New York, Dec. 10.—Police Commissioner Sheehan has returned here to face the indictment against him for failing to produce his books before the Lexow committee.

Reception to Mgr. Satolli.

New York, Dec. 10.—A reception was tendered here to Monsignor Satolli, by the Xavier deaf mute union, at St. Francis Xavier's college.

[Copyright, 1894, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

The duke of Tarentum, or McDonald, as his old comrades preferred to call him, was, as I could perceive, in the vilest of tempers. His grim Scotch face was like one of those grotesque door knockers which one sees in the Faubourg St. Germain. We heard afterwards that the emperor had said in jest that he would have sent him against Wellington in the south, but that he was afraid to trust him within sound of the pipes. Maj. Charpentier and I could plainly see that he was smouldering with anger.

HE WAS STANDING AT THE SIDE OF THE ROOM.

"Brigadier Gerard, of the Hussars," said he, with the air of the corporal with the recruit.

I saluted.

"Maj. Charpentier, of the Horse Grenadiers."

My companion answered to his name.

"The emperor has a mission for you." Without more ado he flung open the door and announced us.

I have seen Napoleon ten times on horseback to once on foot, and I think that he does wisely to show himself to his troops in this fashion, for he cuts a very good figure in the saddle. As we saw him now he was the shortest man out of six, by a good hand's breadth, and yet I am no very big man myself, though I ride quite heavy enough for a hussar. It is evident, too, that his body is too long for his legs. With his big round head, his curved shoulders and his clean-shaven face, he is more like a professor at the Sorbonne than the first soldier of France. Every man to his tastes, but it seems to me that if I could clap a pair of fine light cavalry whiskers like my own onto him it would do him no harm. He has a firm mouth, however, and his eyes are remarkable. I have seen them once turned upon me in anger, and I had rather ride at a square on a spent horse than face them again. I am not a man that is easily daunted, either.

He was standing at the side of the room, away from the window, looking up at a great map of the country, which was hung upon the wall. Berthier stood beside him, trying to look wise, and just as we entered Napoleon snatched his sword impatiently from him, and pointed with it on the map. He was talking fast and low, but I heard him say: "The valley of the Meuse," and twice he repeated: "Berlin." As we entered his aid-de-camp advanced to us, but the emperor stopped him, and beckoned us to his side.

"You have not yet received a cross of honor, Brigadier Gerard?" he asked.

I replied that I had not, and was about to add that it was not for one who hadn't deserved it, when he cut me short in his decided fashion.

"And you, major?" he asked.

"No, sire."

"Then you shall both have your opportunity now."

He led us to the great map upon the wall, and placed the tip of Berthier's sword upon Rheims.

"I will be frank with you, gentlemen, as with two comrades. You have both been with me since Marengo, I believe." He had a strangely pleasant smile which used to light up his pale face with a kind of cold sunshine. "Here at Rheims are our present headquarters on this, the 14th of March. Very good. Here is Paris, distant by road a good twenty-five leagues. Blucher lies to the north, Schwarzenburg to the south." He prodded at the map with the sword as he spoke.

"Now," said he, "the further into the country these people march, the more completely I shall crush them. They are about to advance upon Paris. Very good. Let them do so. My brother, the king of Spain, will be there with a hundred thousand men. It is to him that I send you. You will hand him this letter, a copy of which I confide to each of you. It is to tell him that I am coming at once, in two days' time, with every man and horse and gun, to his relief. I must give them forty-eight hours to recover. Then straight to Paris. You understand me, gentlemen?"

Ah, if I could tell you the glow of pride it gave me to be taken into the great man's confidence in this way. As he handed our letters to us I clicked my spurs and threw out my chest, smiling and nodding to let him know that I saw what he would be after. He smiled also and rested his hand for a moment upon the cape of my dolman. I would have given half my arrears of pay if my mother could have seen me at that instant.

"I will show you your route," said he, turning back to the map. "Your orders are to ride together as far as Bazoches. You will then separate, the one making for Paris by Oulchy and Neuilly, and the other to the north by Braine, Soissons and Senlis. Have you anything to say, Brigadier Gerard?"

I am a rough soldier, but I have words and ideas. I had begun to speak about glory and the peril of France when he cut me short.

"And you, Maj Charpentier?"

"If we found our route unsafe, are we at liberty to choose another?" said he.

"Soldiers do not choose. They obey." He inclined his head to show that we were dismissed and turned round to Berthier. I do not know what he said, but I heard them both laughing.

Well, as you may think, we lost little time in getting upon our way. In half an hour we were riding down the high street of Rheims, and it struck twelve o'clock as we passed the cathedral. I had my little gray mare, Violette, the one which Sebastiani had wished to buy after Dresden. It is the fastest horse in the six brigades of light cavalry, and was only beaten by the duke of Rovigo's racer from England. As to Charpentier he had the kind of horse which a horse grenadier or a curassier would be likely to ride, a back like a bedstead, you understand, and legs like the posts. He is a hulking fellow himself, so that they looked a singular pair. And yet in his insane conceit he ogled the girls as they waved their handkerchiefs to me from the windows, and he twirled his ugly red mustache up into his eyes, just as if it were to him that their attention was addressed.

When we came out of the town we passed through the French camp and then across the battlefield of yesterday, which was still covered both by our own poor fellows and by the Prussians. But of the two the camp was the sadder sight. Our army was thawing away. The guards were all right, though the young guard was full of conscripts. The artillery and the heavy cavalry were also good if there were more of them, but the infantry privates with their under officers looked like schoolboys with their masters. And we had no reserves. When one considered that there were eighty thousand Prussians to the north and a hundred and fifty thousand Russians and Austrians to the south, it might make even the bravest man grave. For my own part I confess that I shed a tear until the thought came that the emperor was still with us and that on that very morning he had placed his hand upon my dolman and had promised me a medal of honor. This set me singing and I spurred Violette on until Charpentier had to beg me to have mercy on his great snorting, panting camel. The road was beaten into paste and rutted two feet deep by the artillery, so that he was right in saying that it was not the place for a gallop.

I have never been very friendly with this Charpentier, and now for twenty miles of the way I could not draw a word from him. He rode with his brows puckered and his chin upon his breast like a man who is heavy with thought. More than once I asked him what was on his mind, thinking that perhaps with my quicker intelligence I might set the matter straight. His answer always was that it was his mission of which he was thinking, which surprised me, because, although I had never thought much of his intelligence, still it seemed to me to be impossible that anyone could be puzzled by so simple and soldierly a task.

Well, we came at last to Bazoches, where he was to take the southern road and I the northern. He half turned in his saddle before he left me and he looked at me with a singular expression of inquiry on his face.

"What do you make of it, brigadier?" he asked.

"Of what?"

"Of our mission."

"Surely, it is plain enough."

"You think so? Why should the emperor tell us his plans?"

"Because he recognized our intelligence."

My companion laughed in a manner which I found annoying. "May I ask what you intend to do if you find these villages full of Prussians?" he asked.

"I shall obey my orders.

"But you will be killed."

"Very possibly."

He laughed again and so offensively that I clapped my hand to my sword. But before I could tell him what I thought of his stupidity and rudeness he had wheeled his horse and was lumbering away down the other road. I saw his big fur cap vanish over the brow of a hill, and then I rode upon my way wondering at his conduct. From time to time I put my hand to the breast of my tunic and felt the paper crackle beneath my fingers. Ah; my precious paper which should be turned into the little silver medal for which I had yearned so long. All the way from Braine to Sermoise I was thinking of what my mother would say when she saw it.

I stopped to give Violette a meal at a wayside auberge on the side of a hill not far from Soissons—a place surrounded by old oaks, and with so many crows that one could scarce hear one's own voice. It was from the innkeeper that I learned that Marmont had fallen back two days before and that the Prussians were over the Aisne. An hour later in the fading light I saw two of their vedettes upon a hill to the right and then, as darkness gathered, the heavens to the north were all glimmering from the lights of a bivouac.

When I heard that Blucher had been there for two days I was much surprised that the emperor should not have known that the country through which he had ordered me to carry my precious letter was already occupied by the enemy. Still I thought of the tone of his voice when he said to Charpentier that a soldier must not choose but must obey. I should follow the route he had laid down to me as long as Violette could move a hoof or I a finger upon her bridle. All the way from Sermoise to Soissons, where the road dips up and down, curving among fir woods, I kept my pistol ready and my sword belt braced, pushing on swiftly where the path was straight and then coming slowly around the corners in the way we learned in Spain.

When I came to the farmhouse which lies to the right of the road just after you cross the wooden bridge over the Crise, near where the great statue of the Virgin stands, a woman cried to me from the field saying the Prussians were [illegible] their [illegible], she said, had come on that very afternoon and a whole division was expected before midnight. I did not wait to hear the end of her tale, but clapped spurs into Violette and five minutes later was galloping her into the town.

Three Uhlans were at the mouth of the main street, their horses tethered, and they gossiping together, each with a pipe as long as my saber. I saw them well at the light of an open door, but of me they could have seen only the flash of Violette's gray side and the black flutter of my cloak. A moment later I flew through a stream of them rushing from an open gateway. Violette's shoulder sent one of them reeling and I stabbed at another but missed him. Pang, pang, went two carbines, but I had flown round the curve of the street and never so much as heard the hiss of the balls. Ah, we were great, both Violette and I. She lay down to it, like a coursed hare, the fire flying from her roofs. I stood in my stirrups and brandished my sword. Some one sprang for my bridle. I sliced him through the arm and I heard him howling behind me. Two horsemen closed upon me. I cut one down and outpaced the other. A minute later I was clear of the town and flying down a broad white road with the black poplars on either side. For a time I heard the rattle of hoofs behind me, but they died and died until I could not tell them from the throbbing of my own heart. Soon I pulled up and listened, but all was silent. They had given up the chase.

Well, the first thing that I did was to dismount and to lead my mare into a small wood through which a stream ran. There I watered her and rubbed her down, giving her two pieces of sugar soaked in cognac from my flask. She was spent from the sharp chase, but it was wonderful to see how she came round with a half hour's rest. When my thighs closed upon her again I could tell by the spring and swing of her that it would not be her fault if I did not win my way safe to Paris.

I must have been well within the enemy's lines now, for I heard a number of them shouting one of their rough drinking songs out of a house by the roadside, and I went round by the fields to avoid it. At another time two men came out into the moonlight (for by this time it was a cloudless night) and shouted something in German, but I galloped on without heeding them and they were afraid to fire, for their own hussars are dressed exactly as I was. It is best to take no notice at these times and then they put you down as a deaf man.

It was a lovely moon and every tree threw a black bar across the road. I could see the country side just as if it were daytime, and very peaceful it looked, save that there was a great fire raging somewhere in the north. In the silence of the night time and with the knowledge that danger was in front and behind me, the sight of that great distant fire was very striking and awesome.

A HELPING HAND.

It Was Given Where It Was Needed and Appreciated.

A young woman endowed with all the advantages of beauty, wealth and position had occasion to visit the upper stories of a large mercantile establishment in this city. While waiting for the elevator to take her to the ground floor again she noticed a young girl trying to lift a large box of merchandise to a shelf above her head. The girl was slight and feeble-looking, and the heart of the other woman was stirred with indignation as she observed several unemployed men lounging near who did not offer to lend a helping hand. She herself stepped forward and said impulsively:

"I am taller and stronger than you; let me lift that box."

"Oh, madam, you are very kind," said the girl, dropping her arms wearily at her side, while the visitor lifted the box with ease and swung it on the shelf.

"You must belong to a ladies' gymnasium," continued the girl, admiringly, "or you could not have lifted that box alone."

"I belong to the Young Woman's Christian association," was the answer of her new friend, "and I did not lift that box alone. Love for my sisters, whoever or wherever they may be, inspires me with a strength that enables me to help bear heavy burdens. The Great Helper helped me."

The lady went away and the next morning received a brief note, written in a girlish hand, which simply stated the fact that the writer intended to find help from the same source, and thanking her for her interest in an unknown and friendless girl.

And the president of the Young Woman's Christian association has no dearer memento among her correspondence than this little thankful letter.—Detroit Free Press.

REMARKABLE CURES
Of Recent Date.

A Statement from Ex-Mayor John Corson, Esq., of Clinton, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

I acknowledge with the utmost pleasure the wonderful cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in my case.

I had been a sufferer from piles, which gave me constant pain and distress, during twenty long years, attended with frequent loss of blood and with great and painful protrusion of the pile tumors and rectum whenever my bowels moved.

I tried constantly to get relief from my sufferings, but to no purpose until Mr. Bryan, a friend of mine, who had been cured by Dr. Lighthill of the same trouble, recommended him to me, and he effected a complete and radical cure in my case also, and earned my lifelong gratitude.

JOHN CORSON.

THE CASE OF MR PETER G. EYCK, OF BISSELL, HUNTERDON CO., N. J.

Dr. Lighthill Effects a Complete Cure Where Ten Physicians Had Failed.

TO THE SICK, SUFFERING AND AFFLICTED:

For many years past I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. Every movement of the bowels was attended with loss of blood and with intense pain which lasted for hours and sometimes all day. My condition was aggravated by a prolapse of the rectum, which greatly increased my suffering and sometimes gave me most agonizing pains.

So great was my distress and so bad my condition that I sold my farm, not being able to work it any longer. At one time the protruding pile tumors became so highly inflamed and swollen that they could not be replaced, and I had to go to bed, applying hot poultices for three months before I could get relief.

I had been under the treatment of ten different physicians, some of New York City, Easton, Washington and elsewhere, without any benefit whatever, and had given up my case as hopeless when, luckily for me, I heard of Dr. Lighthill's skill and success in such cases, and went to him for treatment, with the happy result that he effected a radical and permanent cure in less than four weeks's time; and I am glad to say that the entire treatment gave me neither pain nor distress.

I consider my cure perfectly wonderful, and so do all my friends and neighbors. I am confident that there is no case of piles which Dr. Lighthill cannot cure.

A GREAT INSURANCE ORDER.

Leading Men of Plainfield Are Its Members, and They Elect a Strong Corps of Officers.

The annual election of Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, took place last night. The officers chosen were as follows:

Past Regent—P. A. Emmons.
Regent—A. M. Rea.
Vice Regent—H. C. Adams.
Orator—Murray Burtis.
Secretary—H. A. Thorne.
Collector—H. S. Mann.
Treasurer—D. W. Littell.
Chaplain—E. C. Pease.
Guide—A. W. Demarest.
Warden—A. I. Littell.
Sentry—J. K. Arnold.
Organist—F. J. Pope.
Trustees—A. W. Rand, F. S. Green, S. C. Baker.
Delegate—P. A. Emmons.
Alternate—F. S. Green.

The Royal Arcanum is a most excellent insurance order, composed of Plainfield's representative citizens, including four ministers of the Gospel. There was a very large attendance last night, sixty-five members being present, and the election of officers was made with complete harmony and no opposition, Regent Emmons in all cases casting the ballot.

At the outset strong pressure was brought to bear on Regent P. A. Emmons to serve another term, but he declined. He has made a most excellent Regent, and he and all his officers have labored the past year very successfully for the interests of the council solely.

After the business of the meeting was disposed of, Brother Burtis, the newly-elected orator, recited "Mahoney's Dynamite Cat" to the amusement of all, and Brother James H. Rogers told of the "Moaning of the Tide" in first-class style. Remarks were also made by H. E. Bowen, Rev. Dr. Rodman, and others.

What an Italian Says.

The $1,000 lawsuit brought in the sewer matter is by Bresha Bros., of New York, who act as procurers for Cook & Co. They claim breach of contract on the part of the Cooks, and laid off the men in consequence.

John Dyola, a leading Italian resident, stated to The Press that an unsuccessful attempt had been made early in the season to induce Cook & Co. to employ some of the Italians of Plainfield and vicinity. Those who have been employed through the New York agency, he says, have to pay $2 each for the job, and are charged exorbitant prices for stale bread and other necessaries, which have to be purchased through their bosses. He complains bitterly that this practice should be permitted when there are deserving men in the community who are without work.

TO ARM THEMSELVES.

Sons of Veterans Will Drill Like Regular Soldiers.

There was a large attendance of members at the meeting of John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, last evening.

The election of officers took place, and resulted as follows:

Captain—W. C. Dobbins.
First Lieutenant—W. V. Sutton.
Second Lieutenant—C. F. Stephens.
Camp Council—Frank Clarkson, George Whitely and Clifford Compton.
Representative-at-Large to State Encampment—H. C. McVoy.
Representative—H. S. Thatcher.
Alternate Representative-at-Large—C. F. Stephens.

The rest of the officers comprising the staff are appointed by the captain.

E. T. Bowman, H. C. McVoy, Edward Smith, John Naylor, George Whitely and Samuel Terry were appointed a committee to arrange for the collation to be given at the public installation in January.

The first of the year, uniforms will be secured by the members. It is also the intention to get arms and go into drilling. The committee on New Year's reception and dance reported that everything had been arranged and the invitations would be out this week.

Invitations will be sent to both Grand Army Posts and the Women's Relief Corps to attend the public installation.

THANKS TO ALL.

Y. M. C. A. Directors Express Their Heartfelt Gratitude.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Young Men's Christian Association held Thursday evening, Dec. 6, the undersigned were appointed a committee to convey to all who so kindly took part in the fair the sincere thanks of our association and its appreciation of their efforts.

We therefore, on behalf of the Young Men's Christian Association, most cordially tender our thanks to all who have in any way contributed to the success of the recent festival in aid of our furnishing fund. First, to the Ladies Executive Committee for their deep interest, wise counsels and untiring efforts that so largely contributed to its success. Second, to the ladies and gentlemen who took part in the drills, assisted at the booths, or in the restaurant, and in any of the various departments of the fair. Third, to those who so liberally made contributions of money, articles for sale, supplied refreshments, and to those who gave the materials and also their labor in erecting and decorating the booths. Fourth, to the city papers for the liberal use of their columns, also to the generous public, whose presence and liberal patronage made the occasion so marked a success, and to all our friends who in any way by their gifts, by their time, or labor, shared in this Festival of Nations, which will long be remembered by all our members as an evidence of the good will entertained by the citizens of Plainfield towards our association. In conclusion we realize that what has been accomplished will be of permanent good, because of the large number of people who will be introduced to the new home and to the work of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Charged with Illegal Selling.

Information was lodged with Judge Moore Friday that a house on South avenue in Fanwood Township was disorderly by reason of liquor being sold there without a license.

"Impossible;"—said the Judge—"but I will look the matter up."

The matter was looked up, with the result that Matthew Scheirafurth the proprietor of a house on South avenue was apprehended and admitted that he had sold liquor by the quart under what he claimed to be a Government license, but refused to swear to any statement, and asked an adjournment of the hearing for one week so he might be represented by counsel.

This was granted, and the case was set down for Monday next at 3 p. m., the defendant's recognizance being taken for his appearance.

THE BROWNIES.

They Disport Themselves Successfully in Fairyland.

LOCAL TALENT WELL RECEIVED.

Production Beautifully Staged and Appropriately Costumed—The Little People Reflect Great Credit on Themselves and Their Teachers.

The stage last evening at Music Hall was banked with ferns and flowers, and seemed in very truth a scene from fairyland, as the bright-eyed and prettily costumed little men and women flitted across the stage, sang sweet melodies, or formed in beautiful panorama. Throughout the evening the audience were generous in their appreciation, and not without just cause, for all the little actors acquitted themselves most creditably, and the entire production spoke volumes for painstaking endeavors of both teachers and pupils. A slight nervousness was of course apparent on the part of all, which, however, did not mar the pleasure of the evening, and when the Goddess, in replying to the burning words of Love from the Prince, placed her hand on the right side to cover her heart, a quiet smile was enjoyed by those who noticed it. Of course this was readily accounted for by the fact that her heart was undoubtedly in her throat at that precise moment.

Standing out most prominently among the embryo Thespians who had "their exits and their entrances" last evening might be mentioned Miss Luckey, as the Queen; Miss Pond, whose sweet singing as Aesthetica won the hearts of her audience; the "Prince Aldebaran" of Master Schutt, whose voice was clear, and whose stage presence was excellent; the make-up of Master Mills as the Dude; and the ludicrous capers of Tutti and Frutti, the Brownie twins, back of whose funny faces stood Masters Waring and Green. The Queen's Ladies in Waiting made a decided hit in the beautiful chorus, "A Perfumed Fan", and responded to a generous encore. The tableau "Mending the Nets" also was well received.

The W. C. T. U. should consider themselves fortunate in securing the services of two such competent and painstaking directors as Messrs. Bruen and Decker, who managed the performance of last evening. The audience last night was large considering the weather, and a crowded house for "Brownies in Fairyland" is expected this evening.

Following is the complete cast of characters:

THE "BROWNIE" TROUBLE.

MANAGER VARIAN SECURED ITS ADJUSTMENT IN NEW YORK.

The Copyrighters Insist, However, that the W. C. T. U. Publicly Acknowledge that the Production Is the Fairyland Variation.

As stated exclusively in The Daily Press last evening, Jefferson, Klaw & Erlanger, the New York theatrical managers, feeling that their interests were injured by the announcement that Palmer Cox's "The Brownies", which is their exclusive property, protected by copyright, was to be given here by local talent, took steps to prevent the production, and papers asking for an injunction were actually in their lawyer's hands when Manager Varian of Music Hall arrived at their office yesterday afternoon. Had it not been for his prompt action in the matter, the papers would doubtless have been served.

Mr. Varian has had close business connection with their office for years. He pointed out that the women of the W. C. T. U. were wholly innocent of intent to infringe on the copyright of "The Brownies", and showed that they believed last night's production to be Palmer Cox's, which in truth it is, and they felt justified in advertising it as they did. The facts are these: Palmer Cox has written a number of "Brownie" stories, all of which are dramatized and protected by copyright. Jefferson, Klaw and Erlanger hold the copyright of "The Brownies, a grand theatrical spectacle and Messrs. Bruen and Decker own "Brownies in Fairyland". These are two separate and distinct productions. Jefferson, Klaw and Erlanger, becoming convinced of the fact that a simple error had been made by the women, as set forth by Manager Varian, withdrew the papers, and said they would be satisfied if public acknowledgment were made of the mistake over the signature of the President of the W. C. T. U.

President Peck Explains.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS: Kindly insert the following in order to verify Mr. Varian's word given in New York yesterday to Jefferson, Klaw and Erlanger that the explanation would be made in the Plainfield papers concerning the advertising of "The Brownies in Fairyland" by Palmer Cox. I desire to add to the statement made before the curtain rose at Music Hall last night.

When the entertainment course of the W. C. T. U. was made public, "The Brownies in Fairyland", by Palmer Cox, was announced. Over a thousand copies of season programmes have been circulated, while large cards with the same announcement have been hanging in the stores for weeks.

Items in both papers have continually appeared referring to "The Brownies in Fairyland". When the items for the amusement column was sent to the papers the matter of expense and space was considered, for the expenses of this entertainment are very heavy.

So the general and popular term for the numerous productions of Palmer Cox was given, viz: "Palmer Cox's Brownies".

From this accidental withholding of the words "In Fairyland" all this disturbance and annoyance to those already overburdened with the work of bringing out this entertainment has come.

That another play of a different character was being produced in New York at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, we well knew.

It is not the intention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to infringe upon the rights of any one.

CARA L. PECK, Pres't. W. C. T. U.

NEW YORK, Dec. 10, 1894.

Mr. I. C. Varian, Plainfield, N. J.

DEAR SIR:—We recognize the fact that you are a client of this office, and the force of your argument that the advertisement in dispute was the result of a misapprehension on the part of the ladies, although you must agree with us that this does not excuse the flagrant violation of our copyright. If you will advertise in tomorrow's Courier-News and Press the following we will take it as an evidence of good faith on the part of yourself and the ladies in question and shall instruct our attorney not to interfere in this instance.

"The advertisement of Palmer Cox's Brownies to take place at Music Hall, Dec. 11 and 12, was an error. The performance to be given on those nights is the Brownies in Fairyland, a cantata designed for children, which has no connection whatever with Palmer Cox's Brownies, the spectacle now running at the 14th Street Theatre, New York. The latter is a pretentious theatrical production, while the former was designed for churches and school exhibitions exclusively. Yours truly,

KLAW & ERLANGER.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE

—The kitchen in Grace M. E. Church is being enlarged.

—Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., elect officers this evening.

—Pretty and useful are the tinted chamois sold by Leggett at 89 cents.

—The Crescent Wheelmen are leading in the voting contest for a silver set, at the Westfield fair.

—The Board of Governors of the Crescent Wheelmen hold their regular monthly meeting this evening.

—A children's fair will be given at 315 East Second street, Friday, Dec. 14, to purchase a ton of coal for an aged woman.

—Go to Reform Hall tonight and see Mlle. Belladonna Agramonte, the Spanish magnetic wonder, in extraordinary experiments in hypnotism. Admission free.

—An elegant Miller banquet lamp makes a fine Christmas present, and a fine line of these can be seen at Gavett's. The stock in selection and quality is better every year.

—John Jones of Chatham street, met with a misfortune yesterday. His shoes being wet, he placed them in the oven of the kitchen stove, and his mother not seeing them shut the door. When he went to look for them they were burned to a crisp.

—A special meeting of the Westfield Town Committee will be held tonight to consider a proposition from the Cranford Town Committee relative to connecting with the proposed Cranford sewer to tidewater. The outcome will probably be that Westfield will build its own sewer.

—"Jane,"—said Mrs. Matronly to her maid—"where can Mr. M—— and the family be? Here it is after 6 o'clock, and not a soul here for dinner." "Well ma'am,"—said Jane—"I expect the whole family are down at Peck's store looking at the holiday goods. If there is anything that would make a person forget to eat, it's the elegant goods Peck has for Christmas."

—Of all the so-called racing dramas, "The Prodigal Daughter" is the leader, and justly so, for, apart from the spirited steeplechase scene, the play is one of intense human interest and arouses the sympathies of the entire audience. The cast is a large one and contains many well-known players. The scenic and mechanical effects are among the most elaborate and perfect ever seen on any stage. This great production comes to Music Hall Dec. 12 and 13.

Jersey Justice in Plainfield.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS: The verdict of the coroner's jury in the last shooting case was probably a surprise to most people who have read the account of the tragic occurrence, which deprived a worthy family of a husband and father. Who did not know that when the doctors failed to find the bullet death would be the result? But one cannot help thinking, if Michael Evans had been a rich man, or a relative of one of those jurymen, would the verdict have been the same? No doubt those boys, (one of whom at least looks to be 20 instead of 15 years old), thought it was fine fun to have a Jew for a target. Yet the dear Saviour was a Jew. Now let those jurymen or somebody else start a subscription for the widow and the fatherless children, who are in destitute circumstances.

Is there not a city ordinance which prohibits or restricts the use of firearms?

Two other instances of Jersey justice occurred a short time ago. One man was sent to jail for 30 days, for stealing coal from the railroad; another man was seen to take a can of goods from a grocery, but was not even arrested, because he was "respectable". MRS. DE F.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Mrs. C. M. Fine is confined to her home by illness.

Robert Douglass of Sycamore avenue is suffering from a sprained wrist.

Miss Sloat of Middletown is the guest of Miss Patton of LaGrande avenue.

Miss Morse of Franklin place is spending a few days with friends in New York.

B. A. Hegeman, Sr., of Sycamore avenue, has not been to business this week on account of illness. He is much better today.

A charming luncheon was given by the Misses Coard of East Ninth street yesterday to their guest Miss Blakesley of Albany.

E. B. Shoemaker of Hartford, representative of the Pope Manufacturing Company, was the guest last night and today of F. L. C. Martin.

W. H. Miner, formerly chorister of Holy Cross Church, has been appointed instructor of music in the Naugatuck, Conn., public schools. He is also organist of the Congregational Church there, and choir-master of the Episcopal Church.

The marriage of Miss Maude Saltzman, daughter of Auguste Saltzman of Westervelt avenue, to Andrew S. Fritts, son of Dr. J. T. Fritts of Park avenue, has for some time been known to intimate friends of the contracting parties; and the effort of another paper to make a sensation of the matter is a deplorable affront to two highly esteemed families. The union of these popular young people was sanctioned by the parents, and the ceremony quietly took place Oct. 1, 1893, at the Presbyterian parsonage, New Vernon, Morris County, Rev. E. B. Murgatroyd officiating. The witnesses were Mrs. Murgatroyd and George W. DeMeza.

Helping the Plainfield Church.

B. W. Hand of West Front street attended the meeting of disciples held in the 56th Street Church, New York, last evening. Seventy ministers were present and about 35 delegates from various churches. A great deal of interest was shown in the First Church of Christ of this city, and they decided to pay one-half of the rent for them this year. $36 was given Mr. Hand for his church to help defray expenses.

The members of the church feel much encouraged in receiving this assistance, which no doubt will result in freeing them from debt.

Santa Claus Tonight.

An electric light fuse in Edsall's Commercial Palace burned out last evening at 7:30, leaving the front of the store in total darkness. As the store was filled with customers, this was very annoying, but resulted in a novelty being added to the unique window display, which was turned into a night scene, miniature lamps being placed on the moving figures. Tonight the other large show window will be trimmed with novelties in bric-a-brac, over which Santa Claus will preside.

(From The Westfield Standard.)

LET THE EAGLE SCREAM.

THE STANDARD GOT IN ITS FINE WORK.

(From the Unpublished Copy Hook of the Westfield Standard.)

The Republicans may have carried the earth. But Westfield Prohibitionists are in it with both feet!!

Twelve year ago Westfield cast 732 Prohibition votes!

In 1892 she cast twelve (12)!!

Yesterday she cast (3)!

Heaven bless the good cause. The Standard will never call a halt!!!

[We copy the above mis-statement from the Plainfield Press, wondering where the author got his load. The jocularity of his vein indicates the highest kind of spirits. After the author has had his morning dose of bromo-seltzer, we would like to have him come around and look at our copy hooks again; likewise at our brand-new steel twenty horse power boiler; just put in place to meet the requirements of our increasing business. This lays over the still and furnishes motive power to enlighten the world rather than subtle distillation to degrade it. The principle of saloon prohibition is as sound today as it ever was.

The Standard while contending for that principle has lived down the reputation of being a Prohibition party organ. We understand that we are now classed as a Populist organ. People are finding out, however, that The Standard advocates right principles without reference to party. There may be some connection between this fact and the new boiler. Always out for an "ad", we hope that our good-natured neighbor under the hill will poke some more fun at us.—Ed. Standard.

"It is a pleasure to sell Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," says Stickney & Dentler, druggists, Republic, Ohio, "Because a customer after once using it, is almost certain to call for it when again in need of such a medicine. We sell more of it than of any other cough medicine we handle, and it always gives satisfaction." For cough, colds and croup, it is without an equal. SEELY CAUGHT AT LAST

New York's Great Thief Is Arrested in Chicago.

Betrayed by a Man Named McFarland, He Is Taken at a Fashionable Boarding House and Locked Up at the Central Station—Made an Attempt at Disguise.

Chicago, Dec. 11.—Samuel C. Seely, wanted in New York for forgery and the larceny of $354,000 while an assistant book-keeper in the National Shoe & Leather bank of that city, is under arrest in Chicago. He is passing under the assumed name of Frank J. Dale and denies that he is the man wanted, but his appearance coincides so minutely with the description of Seely that there is no doubt of his identity and in addition to this he carries papers which prove him to be the man almost beyond doubt.

He is a man 40 or 45 years old, five feet eight inches high, weighs 130 pounds, has prominent cheek bones, fair complexion, light hair and mustache, his left eye turns out, his eyes are blue and his ears are exactly as described in the bulletin sent out offering a $5,000 reward for the arrest of the New York embezzler.

Seely has changed his appearance somewhat by cutting and dyeing his mustache and by cutting his hair short but it has been of no avail and makes little difference in his looks. He has even filled his hair with cosmetics to make it smooth. He is noncommittal and will have nothing to say. On his person, when arrested, was found a receipt paid for sleeping car fare on the Pullman car Donegal on Nov. 18, the day Seely disappeared from New York. The ticket reads J. C. to Wh. and is supposed to be Jersey City to Washington. He also had in his pockets over one hundred dollars in money and a package of newly printed cards bearing simply the name Frank J. Dale. He also had in his pockets a letter from Dakota about some real estate and a letter from New York about the mortgage on his home there, the letter being addressed to him under his assumed name of Dale.

Seely was taken from a fashionable boarding house at 496 La Salle avenue where he has been boarding for the past two weeks. He has been living quietly going out very little and apparently had no business to attend to. He was considered a gentleman of wealth and the keeper of the boarding house, Mrs. Clayton, considered herself very fortunate in having such a boarder. Nothing was too good for Mr. Dale. It was a surprise and shock when he was so roughly hauled away.

This arrest came about in a very peculiar way. A man of small build and partly under the influence of liquor came into the Central police station and asked if the police department did business at that time of night. The officer whom he first accosted did not consider him worth wasting time on and referred him somewhere else for information. The unknown man then walked over to the desk of a sergeant and said:

"I want a man to arrest Seely of New York. I've been with him a week and now I want to give him up."

The sergeant told him all right, he would send some officers with him if he was sure he had the right man. The sergeant then brought out a picture of Seely but the man said:

"I do not need any picture of the fellow. It's him all right. But see here, if you arrest the fellow I'm to get the $5,000 reward."

He was assured that the reward would be all right if he carried the officers and then told the sergeant that he would find his man at 496 La Salle avenue, stopping under the name of Frank Dale.

Officers O'Donnell and Allmendinger of the Central detail were sent out and went up to the place directed. They were met at the door by Mrs. Clayton. Being asked if Mr. Dale boarded there she replied in the affirmative. The officers told her that they would like to be shown to his room. Mrs. Clayton was inclined to object to this and wanted to call the gentleman down but on being told that the officers were old friends she allowed them to go to his room which was on the second floor in the rear of the house.

Officer Allmendinger rapped at the door and upon being answered opened the door and went in. The minute he saw the man he felt convinced that the fellow was Seely and putting his head out of the door, beckoned for O'Donnell. When O'Donnell entered he said:

"Hello Sam, don't you know me?" Seely turned deathly pale and staggered. If Allmendinger had not caught him he would have fallen to the floor. Seely had been sitting in a large easy chair in the centre of the room reading a copy of a New York paper. He was dressed in a new suit of clothes, having his coat, however, on a chair by his side. He was puffing a cigarette and taking things easy.

O'Donnell said: "Well, Seely, we've got you now so you had better put on your coat and come along." Seely replied: "What do you mean? Where shall I come?" The officer responded:

"Oh, its no use playing the innocent, the bank wants you to go back to New York. The game is all up now so you had better get on your coat and come along." Seely said he did not know what he was wanted for and did not see why he should be so interrupted, but that he supposed he would have to go. So he pulled on his new light overcoat and went along with the officers. When he reached the central police station he was carried before the lieutenant and captain of the station who searched him and tried to learn from him something of his doings since he left New York. He was compared with the picture received from the New York police department and identified. Seely was sharply questioned but refused to answer.

The man who had Seely arrested gave his name as H. E. McFarland. Some things in his remarks lead to the belief that he is a detective and comes from New York. He said that Seely had told him who he was. McFarland and Seely met at the Lincoln hotel and saloon on North Clark street near Seely's place of residence and went to the races at Roby together.

In that way they became confidential and over the wine Seely told the story of his identity.

Seely told McFarland that he had planted $10,000 with his lawyer in New York and could get his hands on it at any time. All he secured out of the $354,000 was that amount.

CAUGHT IN THE SOUND.

Fishermen Capture a Forty Foot Whale Near Fisher's Island.

New London, Conn., Dec. 11.—A sperm whale, 40 feet long, was captured in Fisher's island sound, off Quoimbaug, by George Denison and George Wilcox, and was towed into Stonington, where it will be cut up and dried out for oil.

The whale was seen at sundown by George Denison his attention being attracted to it while attending to fishermen, with the result that they decided to be on the lookout for the leviathan. They saw him off shore half a mile. A boat was at hand, equipped with harpoon and lines, and a quick start was made, the men rowing up to the whale, and Denison threw the harpoon into him. He ran a short distance and then dived, the boat being drawn after him at terrific speed.

When he stopped 1,800 feet of line were run ashore and by means of a yoke of oxen the whale was towed to the beach. Later the schooner Mattie and Lena made fast to it and towed the carcass to the old whaling port of Stonington, where the try pots can be had for trying out the blubber.

This will be the first time the try pots have been used in a generation, as no whaling vessels have sailed from that port for many years. It is believed that the whale will net its captors a big sum of money.

MINERS MEET OPERATORS.

A Conference Held at Columbus To Discuss the Union Scale.

Columbus, O., Dec. 11.—The coal miners and operators interstate board of arbitration met here to consider the further continuance of the national scale. An organization was effected and J. S. Morton, of Ohio, elected chairman. A resolution was adopted abrogating the inter-state contract and agreement on mining rates from June 18, 1894, to May 1, 1895, so far as it relates to the Pittsburg district, to take effect after December 17.

The meeting was harmonious. It was stated that the two Pittsburg coal companies that had refused to sign the inter-state agreement had been mining coal for about 55 cents per ton while the others had been compelled to pay 69 cents per ton and in this way their trade had been captured.

THORNE AND LEA ELECTED.

They Will Next Year Captain Yale and Princeton Elevens.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 11.—The election of a football captain for the Yale team took place in the apartments of Captain Hinkey, and, as was expected, S. B. Thorne, of New York, was selected for the position.

He was immediately after his election given a royal ovation by his fellow players, who paraded the campus cheering for him. The only dissenting vote was cast by Mr. Thorne himself, and it was voted to make his election unanimous.

Princeton, N. J., Dec. 11.—At a meeting of the members of the Princeton football team, the captaincy for 1835 was given to Lea, '96, by acclamation.

SEVEN SKATERS DROWNED.

Rotten Ice Causes Wholesale Death in an Iowa Town.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 11.—News has reached here of the drowning of seven persons at the town of Littleton, in Independence county.

George and Hannah Cook, went skating on the mill pond near the village and on their failure to return home search was instituted.

A crowd gathered round an air hole, through which it was supposed the children had fallen, when suddenly the ice gave way and twelve persons were precipitated into the water.

Seven were rescued by by-standers but the other five were taken out dead. The remains of the Cook children were also found.

Yale Made No Charges.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 11.—A denial that the Yale football association has preferred charges of professionalism and ineligibility against members of the University of Pennsylvania football team, has been made in an official letter by President Cable, of the Yale football association, to the University of Pennsylvania faculty conference committee.

Roasted to Death in the Street.

New Orleans, Dec. 11.—Joseph F. Jaworek, an Austrian, believed to be from St. Louis, was roasted to death on Canal street in the presence of a large crowd, by a broken electric light wire which fell upon him. Jaworek was a large furniture dealer and was a prominent witness in the case against Mayor Fitzpatrick.

FOR THE GOOD OF LABOR

Leaders and Delegates in Conference at Denver.

The American Federation Convention Opened with Addresses by John Burns, President Gompers and Other Prominent Men—Congressional Methods Denounced.

Denver, Dec. 11.—The feature of the first day's session of the fourteenth annual convention, American Federation of Labor, aside from the annual address of the president, Samuel Gompers, and the reports of the treasurer and secretary was the earnest and forcefully and impressive remarks made by John Burns, M. P., of England, in response to the seating of him and David Holmes as delegates upon the floor by the convention. It was given with all the fire and impetuosity which has made the name of John Burns famous, and it was received with tumultous applause from the 75 delegates who constitute this congress of workingmen. Mr. Burns said:

"Delegated by the Trades Union congress of Great Britain, Mr. David Holmes and myself have come in response to the invitation which the American Federation of Labor so kindly extended. We represent a constituency of one and a quarter million of organized workers, and the largest congress of labor delegates, numbering 400, which met in Norwich not many months ago. That congress was the most representative one held for 30 years. Out of 400 delegates there were over 100 members of parliament, magistrates, members of school boards, town and county councils, which indicates to you what a footing the trades unions have in England. We shall be greatly pleased if in America you shall obtain in the next ten years something of the same standing. Beyond the 100 delegates so attending we have scattered over the land on local, magisterial and arbitration boards and in parliament, over 100 bona fide members and accredited delegates to the trades unions of England. We come from an industrial country."

President Gompers of the American Federation of Labor then delivered his address. He referred to the industrial stagnation, and then reviewed the Pullman strike, but blamed neither side. He considered the immigration question and said the laws should not be assailed in a wholesale manner, but that they could be revised in the workingmen's behalf. He said that congress would pass the bill for government ownership of telegraph lines, and he reviewed the work of congress in matters relating to workingmen. He advocated the dependent political action by labor of affiliation with the dominant party.

Mr. R. Kenchan of the Denver trades assembly, then delivered a graceful address of welcome.

Hon. Thomas M. Patterson, of Denver, delivered an address upon the subject "Labors rough but noble struggle." Among other things he said:

"It is mockery to say that in this country the people rule and it is peoples government. Less than 500 men in congress make laws for 70,000,000 of people. Capital secures the election of a goodly number and it always purchases enough of the remainder to procure the defeat of whatever legislation it desires."

The credentials committee reported the seating of all delegates except the contesting delegates from rival painters associations upon which question more time was given. The delegates will go to Silver Plume to-day over the famous loop and a reception will be tendered the party in Georgetown by the miners.

State Grange Will Meet.

Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 11.—This afternoon the state grange, Patrons of Husbandry, will meet here in annual session with an attendance of at least 800 representatives. It seems to be understood that the proposed new revenue bill as prepared by the committee of the state tax conference will be satisfactory to the farmers and will be endorsed.

Died After Being Pardoned.

Philadelphia, Dec. 11.—Hugh O'Neill, who was pardoned from the Eastern penitentiary last Friday by President Cleveland, where he was serving a sentence for conspiring to make a fraudulent election return in this city, died to-day. O'Neill was attacked with consumption soon after he was sentenced, in August, 1893.

Killed by a Landslide.

Oil City, Pa., Dec. 11.—A freight train on the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad was wrecked near here by a landslide, and Engineer Kirkland was killed.

Clark Elected President.

Hazleton, Pa., Dec. 11.—At a directors meeting of the Lehigh Coal & Navigation company, held at Mauch Chunk, E. W. Clark was elected president.

LIFE WAS A BURDEN.

A Pain-Racked Sufferer Tells an Interesting Story—How He Was Tortured for Years and Finally Cured by Munyon's Remedy.

Charles Wark, of 14 N. Twenty-fourth St., Philadelphia, has been a constant sufferer from rheumatism for years. He was cured by the use of Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. This is his story:

"I was afflicted with rheumatism in the righ shoulder and suffered the most excruciating agony. Sharp shooting pains darted through it so intense I could not sleep night. Even the weight of the bedclothes was more than I could bear; neither could I lie on the right side or my back. Life became a perfect burden to me. I could not raise my hand to my head, and when I attempted to put on my coat or any article of dress, the torture was enough to drive me wild. Many remedies were suggested and tried, but none did me the slightest good, and I began to despair of ever being able to obtain relief. Some time ago, however, I procured a bottle of Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. It afforded me relief after the first few doses, and by the time the little 25 cent bottle was gone I was entirely free from pain. I have had no return of my old enemy, and I feel satisfied I am permanently cured. It seems so wonderful I can hardly realize it, and can only show my appreciation of the merits of the Cure by recommending it to other sufferers."

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure is guaranteed to cure rheumatism in any part of the body. Acute or muscular rheumatism cured in from one to five days. It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. It is guaranteed to promptly cure lameness, stiff and swollen joints, stiff back, and all pains in the hips and loins. Chronic rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago or pain in the back are speedily cured.

Munyon's Homoepathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggist, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

A BIRD CAGE MAKER.

In a town of the ancient kingdom of Cascile there lived in former ages a youth called Bartolo, who tried to eke out a living by making cages for birds and taking them round to sell at neighboring villages. But his trade was a poor one and he judged himself in luck if he sold one cage in a day, and, as may be supposed, he knew what sorrow and privation were.

One day, as he was proceeding to a village, he heard sounds of revelry, the buzz of many people and the strains of a band of music. This merry-making was a procession of children dressed in white carrying in their midst a beautiful child crowned with roses, in a chariot covered with white satin and ornamented with acacia and myrtle. The procession was in honor of Maya, the personification of Spring, and took place to announce the entry of Spring. In front of the little chariot some children danced, and held in their hands the platters for contributions, and, as may be imagined, all, or nearly all, the spectators dropped their coins into them.

Bartolo moved away in a desponding mood, saying to himself as he walked on, "Is this the justice of the world? There they are, flinging their money into these platters just because these children come in procession to announce to them that it is the month of May, as though they could not know it by looking at an almanac. They barter and grind me down to the lowest price for my cages, even when I chance to sell one!"

Full of these bitter thoughts he walked on sadly, for the voices of two importunate enemies were making themselves heard within him—these were hunger and thirst; the one clamored for food and the other for drink. Bartolo had nothing in his wallet but his clasp knife, and had had naught for his breakfast but hope, and these made him sharp and active.

He had reached a plantation when he perceived a well dressed individual coming toward him. Pressed by hunger, Bartolo, taking his cap off respectfully, approached and said:

"Excuse me, sir, but could you kindly give me a trifle? I promise I will return it as soon as I earn some money."

"Don't you think that it is a shameful thing for a man like you, young and with a good healthy appearance, to be demanding charities from people? Does it not strike you that you have a duty to earn your own living by working at your trade?"

"Yes, sir, certainly, but my trade does not fulfill its own duty. Most people like to see the birds flying about free rather than in cages, and, therefore, day by day, I find myself poorer than before."

At first the stranger doubted what he had heard, but the bird cage maker gave him so detailed an account of his work and the small profits he derived that he became interested and sympathized with his ill-fortune. Bartolo was a man who always knew how to excite great interest in himself.

"Come, come," the stranger said, smilingly, "I will do something for you. As I cannot find customers for your cages, I will afford you a powerful means by which you shall never more want."

He then blew a whistle, and Bartolo saw flying before him a bird blue as the sky, which came and perched on one of his cages.

"See here," added the stranger, "what will compensate for all your past misery? From this day forward you have only to formulate a wish and say slowly and distinctly: 'Bluest of blue birds, do your duty!' and your wish will be granted to you."

"By my faith!" cried the bird cage maker, "but I will try it at once. For the last twenty years I have wished to kill hunger. Bluest of blue birds, do your duty!"

Scarcely were the words out of his mouth than he saw suddenly spread before him on the grass a breakfast fit for a prince, laid on a service of exquisite silver and glass and the whitest of cloths. Bartolo, astonished, flung himself upon his knees to thank his benefactor, but he raised him up, saying:

"I am the good genius of the honest workingmen of Castile. Sit down and eat without fear. Take advantage of your lucky star," and then suddenly disappeared.

Bartolo reverently bent down and kissed the spot upon which he had stood, unable to find adequate expression of his gratitude.

He then sat down and ate his breakfast. After his meal Bartolo judged that a man who had feasted in such an elegant manner ought to have other and better clothing than his well-worn working-suit, and, lifting his staff, he cried to the bird:

"Bluest of blue birds, do your duty."

In an instant his old suit became transformed into one of richest velvet, embroidered in gold and silver, and his rough staff into a splendid horse, fully caparisoned and having round its neck a collar of silver bells.

More astonished than ever, Bartolo suspended to the saddle the cage with the blue bird, leaped on the horse, and went his way, as proud of his dress as a donkey of its ears.

Setting spurs to his horse, he soon reached the gates of a splendid castle. Some feast was taking place within; the guests were all seated under a shady bower, deploring that they had been disappointed of the minstrels who were to have played.

Bartolo, on learning this, advanced to the bower, and after elegantly saluting the lord and lady of the castle, in a most refined voice said:

"If it be right for a simple knight to offer his services to such a distinguished company of rank and beauty, I think I could promise to provide what you are requiring."

"Oh do so at once, please!" cried all the ladies, who were longing to dance.

"Bluest of blue birds, do your duty!" said Bartolo.

Suddenly, in the distance, was heard the noise of many feet, and a troop of musicians with their instruments appeared, to the great delight of the company.

The lord of the castle thanked the stranger, and desired him to open the ball with his eldest daughter, a maiden fair and lovely like a snow bird.

When the ball was at its height, the bird cage maker ordered an elegant banquet to be served, during which the bluest of blue birds was commanded to sing some songs, which were very much admired.

Games of chance followed, and Bartolo, taking advantage of his good fortune, distributed among the ladies pearls, bracelets and rings of precious stones. All those present were surprised beyond measure, because the lord of the castle was known to be extremely niggardly and mean.

The lord of the castle, who knew how all this had been done through the agency of the bird, and being himself of an inordinately avaricious nature, thought he might do a fine stroke of business were he to purchase the bird. Hence, calling his unknown guest away to his study, he proposed to him to purchase the bird for what price he should quote.

"You would never give me my price," replied Bartolo.

"For it I would give my castle with its nine forests," said the lord of the castle.

"It is not enough!"

"Very well, I will add my olive plantations and vineyards."

"That is still insufficient!" cried Bartolo.

"I will add the orchards, gardens and houses."

"I want something else!"

"What, still more? Why, man, you must want paradise itself!"

"Not so; I want what you can give me this very moment. I want your daughter with whom I danced just now. Let her be my bride."

"What! my daughter?" cried the old miser, in an ecstasy of joy. "By my faith we shall soon conclude the bargain. Why did you not say so before?"

He went to seek the girl, and told her of the engagement he had entered into. But his daughter, in utter amazement, cried out:

"But what if he is a wicked elf and all he does be witchcraft?"

"You have an amulet of coral hanging from your neck; it is an antidote against all witchery."

"And what if he be Satan himself?"

"I will give you a piece of blessed candle, and he will have no power over you," replied the unrelenting father.

Taking her hand, he led her to the stranger, who was already on his horse, and assisted her to mount behind her future husband. Taking the cage with the bluest of birds, he watched the retreating forms of the pair as the horse carried them away swifter than the wind, and when out of sight he proceeded to join his guests. The company were all gathered in knots discussing the extraordinary powers of the bird and all the events which had taken place.

"Peace! peace!" cried the lord of the castle as he entered; "I will perform more marvelous things than ever he did. I have given him my daughter to wed in exchange for the bird, and this blue bird will render me more wealthy than the King of Aragon. Approach and see the wonders I will work with it."

He took the cage, and lifting it up to look at the bird, was astonished to find that it was not blue at all, but a large gray bird, which turned to stare at him in an insolent manner, gave a fierce peck at the door of the cage with its beak, flung it open, and flew out of the window uttering a terrible screech.

The lord of the castle stood with open mouth, not knowing what to do or say. His guests broke out in peals of laughter at his discomfiture and the well-deserved punishment for his unseemly avarice of exchanging his beautiful daughter for a worthless bird.

Meanwhile, Bartolo was galloping on with his bride to the nearest town to be married, and, when he arrived at the first hostelry, he wished to dismount and engage the most splendid suite of apartments for his intended bride, but he found himself utterly penniless.

He had not calculated that in parting with the bird he had parted with his luck, and therefore as soon as he dismounted the horse disappeared, and his elegant dress became changed for the shabby one he had worn before he met the kind individual who had wished to befriend him. When the beautiful daughter of the lord of the castle beheld the transformation that had taken place she ran back to her father as fast as she could, fright lending wings to her feet.

Bartolo had to return to his old life of making cages and to his miserable existence.—From the Spanish in the Strand Magazine.

A Housekeeping Club.

In Kansas has just been started a new club, formed by young women, whose object, as stated in the preamble of the club's constitution, is to promote good cookery, master the details of housekeeping, and remove the prejudices which, among American born girls, commonly exist against service in the kitchen. Admission to this club is difficult, for the test required of applicants for membership is peculiar and exacting. The young woman who applies for membership is required to prepare a dinner for six persons. The arrangements of the table, the disposition of the course, the entire dinner is under her charge. The judges enjoy the dinner as guests, and the applicant presides as hostess. Certain articles of the club are indicative of its honesty of purpose and its praiseworthy efforts to do good and necessary work of reform. One of those articles declares that the young woman who is ashamed to work in the kitchen has not earned the right to play in the parlor. The good results of such a club may be especially looked for in the uplifting which it will give to household labor, and in elevating the standard of service in the home.

The Question Still Unsettled.

"H'mph!" ejaculated the exchange editor, making a jab with his shears at an item in a scientific exchange. "Why does a cat always alight on his feet? That's too easy for anything."

"A cat," said the financial editor, "always falls on its feet because of the claws in its constitution that——"

"Scat!" exclaimed the other. "If you can't treat the subject with gravity drop it."

"That's exactly what I was about to do. I was going to drop it on its feet."

"A cat," resumed the exchange editor, raising his voice, "always alights on its feet because it has a right to take its turn——"

"Paws! You don't tumble to it at all."

"Well, why does it?" demanded the financial editor, the real estate editor, the railway editor, the obituary editor and the answers to queries editor, rising as one man.

"Because," answered the exchange editor defiantly, "because it is a cat's nature to get its back up."

Whereupon the meeting broke up in great confusion, with the question still undecided.—Chicago Tribune.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Miss Marguerite Yerkes of Central avenue is expected home this evening after a visit of one month with friends in Philadelphia.

Miss Pauline Root, M. D., will speak in the Congregational Church tomorrow evening at 8. Dr. Root served for 10 years as medical missionary in Madeira.

Mrs. C. W. Kimball of Vineland will spend the Winter with Mrs. C. H. Schermerhorn of 147 East Fifth street, where she will be pleased to see the friends she has met on former visits.

Business Mail Deliveries.

When the postoffice changes its location, it is to be hoped that frequent deliveries will be extended to all of our business streets. For instance, North avenue has four deliveries, while Watchung avenue, one block away, with a number of business houses, has only two. Other business streets are similarly served. This is a matter deserving attention.

—An evening sociable is to be given at the large house, 838 East Front street, tomorrow evening.

—Roars of laughter at Reform Hall tonight. The little Spanish wonder, Mlle. Agramonte, will produce extraordinary mesmeric phenomena. Free admission to adults.

—After the recall last night the hook and ladder truck was obliged to go down Plainfield avenue to Seventh street owing to the condition in which the intervening streets had been left by the sewer contractors.

—Engine 212, pulling a loaded coal train of 115 cars from Phillipsburg, bound for Jersey City, was unable to handle the heavy load when she reached Grant avenue at 2 p. m. today. Drill Engine 200 was pressed into service, and helped 212 over the Fanwood hill.

—The alarm from Box 43 at 10:10 last night was for a blaze in the Serrell printing office at the rear of 126 Plainfield avenue. The fire started in a box of rubbish stored in the loft in the second story. The extinguishers were found sufficient to put out the fire.

—Owing to the refusal of the Consolidated Traction Company to adjust the claim of Truckman Frank Randolph for damages received several weeks ago, as cited in The Press, suit was entered against them yesterday by W.L. Hetfield, counsel for the plaintiff.

—Nothing definite was done last evening at the meeting of the Ministers Association at the home of Rev. Dr. Richards in regard to the services to be conducted by Frank Wright, Indian evangelist, in January. The matter was informally discussed. Dr. Richards presented a paper on "Ecclesiastical Law", of much interest.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her and she says it saved her life. Mr. Thos. Eggers, 139 Florida street, San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption, tried without result everything else then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medicine in coughs and colds. At L. W. Randolph's Drug store. Regular size 50c and $1.00, our price 45c and 90c.

WONDERS AT REFORM HALL.

Something to Marvel At—Vano the Wonder-Worker.

A distinguished audience greeted Vano the great healer in Reform Hall last night, and were greatly interested in his descriptions of the wonderful cures that he has made and is now making.

He cures persons suffering with rheumatism and other ailments that are almost miraculous, many of them desperate cases that had been given up by physicians as incurable. John Richey of Bound Brook, who has been unable to to walk for two years, was cured last week by Vano. This man, who had been a helpless invalid for a long time, had been pronounced positively incurable. Yet, in fifteen minutes, by the application of Vano's wonderful electric fluid, he was able to walk. Mr. Richey shed tears of joy, and his neigbors said, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow".

It is impossible for pen to picture or the mind of man to conceive the grandeur and solemnity of the scene which a cure like this produces. It is wonderful grand, and awe-inspiring, awaking and playing on every emotion of the human heart. It is a fruition of the power of a divinity itself. Vano was the talk of the whole town and his office at the Hotel Bound Brook was literally jammed with patients from morning until night.

A prominent woman residing in Washington Park, who has been a sufferer from rheumatism for a long time, and who was quite lame, was treated by Vano this morning so successfully that she can now walk as well as ever. She had given up all hope of ever being cured, and it is hardly necessary to state she is one of the happiest women in Plainfield. Her name will be given to any responsible person. Six other curse equally wonderful have been made by Vano and his assistants.

Vano will lecture tonight at Reform Hall, and no person should fail to attend and see these modern wonders performed. A few rheumatic cripples with sticks or crutches will be publicly treated, to show the extraordinary power of these new remedies. A few of the worst cases will be cured, free of charge, providing they call at once at Reform Hall. Don't delay; go tonight, or on Wednesday. The hall is open all day. Vano will remain in Plainfield only a few days. He gives advice free.

"Those Female Ills can be cured. I suffered long and severely. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me. I advise any woman who suffers with any form of female weakness to try it." —Mrs. WALTER WILCOX, 736 West St., Philadelphia, Pa.

—Anchor Lodge will have an election and collation tonight.

35 CENTS All Around.

Have you seen those handsome pictures in our window? No! Well, that's too bad. They are there for inspection, and for one week only we will sacrifice them at the low figure of 35c. These pictures are nicely framed and glass fronts. You pay 50c for the same picture in New York. They are an ornament to any one's room and to get the choice ones we would advise you to select yours before they are all gone. This price will positively be for one week only. The size of these pictures is 14x22.

China Silk Sale.

To the many that were disappointed in not being able to get any of that 35c China silk which we were selling for 25, we will inform them that we have just received 10 pieces more and will continue the sale for another week at the same price, 25c. It takes us to introduce bargains, and we will see that the public is pleased.

Toys Toys Toys

Toys of all descriptions and at hard times prices Pay our basement a visit and bring the little ones with you; look at the pretty things that will make them happy.

Old People.

Old people who require medicine to regulate the bowels and kidneys will find the true remedy in Electric Bitters. This medicine does not stimulate and contains no whiskey nor other intoxicant, but acts as a tonic and alterative. It acts mildly on the stomach and bowels, adding strength and giving tone the organs, thereby aiding nature in the performance of the functions. Electric Bitters is an excellent appetizer and aids digestion. Old people find it just exactly what they need. Price fifty cents per bottle at L. W. Randolph's Drug store.

IN A SARATOGA TRUNK.

A Pennsylvania Woman Escapes Justice in the Depths of One.

Mrs. Ada Hamlin, alias Burt, may not be a model for her sex in the more important details of character, but she has won renown by exhibiting a certain shrewdness and agility which in themselves were admirable.

Mrs. Hamlin, while she lived in Allegheny, was engaged in the occupation of selling whiskey. This seems scarcely a womanly profession, and in her case it was not a lawful one, for she sold without a license and to minors. For these offences she was arrested, but having a good neighbor, a lady who perhaps had enjoyed her potations, she was bailed out.

Thereupon she promptly disappeared, greatly to the regret of her friend. She went to Pittsburg, where she was traced. Being of a cautious disposition, however, she escaped arrest for some time. Finally an alderman and two constables came over from Allegheny and discovered her hiding place. They demanded an entrance in the name of the law, but when they got in Miss Hamlim had disappeared.

They searched thoroughly, but the dealer in spirituous liquors was not to be found. They were disgusted, but they went back by and by and repeated their fruitless search. Mrs. Hamlin, in the security of a Saratoga trunk, laughed softly at their unavailing efforts.

Under the very eyes of the constables and detectives an expressman carried the trunk downstairs, dumped it roughly into his wagon and drove off. In a remote corner of the city where he had been ordered to deliver it, he set it on the pavement, a friend unlocked it, and the adventurous Mrs. Hamlin stepped forth. She has successfully eluded the officers ever since and has left the place where she once flourished, going to more congenial regions further West.

DETAILS OF HIS SCHEME

Secretary Carlisle Explains the Currency Plan.

He Appears Before the Committee on Ways and Means and Answers All the Questions Put to Him—Mr. Morgan on the Nicaragua Canal—In the Senate and House.

Washington, Dec. 11.—The important feature in the senate proceedings was Mr. Morgan's speech on the Nicaraguan canal. In the house most of the day was spent in the discussion of matters relating to the District of Columbia, although several fairly important bills were passed.

Mr. Morgan declared that the government of the United States in controlling the operation of the canal, would not interfere in the least with any treaties between Nicaragua and Costa Rica and foreign governments; that no foreign government had indicated any objection to the control of it by the United States. That it would not be a departure frm the Monroe doctrine, or an abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; and yet that it was the nearest possible approach to government ownership of the canal.

Mr. Mitchell (rep., Ore.) also supported the bill, but had doubts as to the extent, to which the United States should become involved.

Resolutions were offered by Mr. Call (dem., Fla.) looking to the independence of Cuba and the settlement of the Japanese-Chinese war. The senate then went into executive session and adjourned.

In the house the appropriations committee agreed upon the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. The amount carried is $2,139,195. The principal items are as follows: Public printing and binding, $100,000; re-coinage of silver, $100,000; expenses of collecting the income tax, $245,095; expenses special examiners, pension offices, $250,000; eleventh census, $300,000; expenses of United States marshals, $140,000; fees of jurors, United States courts, $130,000; fees of witnesses, $500,000; support of United States prisoners, $340,000.

During the day Secretary Carlisle appeared before the ways and means committee and explained in detail his currency plan. All the members were present and many questions were asked. To Mr. Johnson (dem., O.) Mr. Carlisle said that one great advantage of his plan was that it would furnish an elastic currency. The entire national bank deposit would not be filled up to the limit of the plan unless the business of the country required it.

Under the present system, if a national bank desired to retire its circulation it must send to the treasury lawful money of the United States of the requisite amount; but it was not allowed to withdraw this amount for circulation under six months. Under the new plan a bank might retire its circulation to-day and increase it to-morrow.

Mr. Walker (rep., Mass.) wanted to know whether Mr. Carlisle had drawn a bill embodying his views. Mr. Carlisle said he had a sketch of such a measure, and he promised to furnish the committee with a complete bill as soon as he had perfected the draft he had dictated.

Continuing his explanation of the provisions of his plan, Mr. Carlisle took up the fourth suggestion of the plan, providing for the imposition of a tax of one-half of 1 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, upon the average amount of notes in circulation to defray the expenses of printing notes, official supervision, &c. He explained this in a few words and passed on to the fifth suggestion as follows:

"No national bank note to be of less denomination than $10 and all notes of the same denomination to be uniform in design, but banks desiring to redeem their notes in gold may have them made payable in that coin.

"The secretary of treasury to have authority to prepare and keep on hand ready for issue upon application a reserve of blank national bank notes for each banking association having circulation."

Mr. Carlisle said this suggestion would have the effect of placing the silver certificates of small denominations in circulation. The idea was not to issue national bank notes of less denominations than $10.

To Mr. Sperry (dem., Conn.), Mr. Carlisle said his plan contemplated the ultimate retirement of greenbacks and notes issued under the Sherman law, and there would then be no other paper of the government redeemable in gold.

"We should then be on a silver basis," said Mr. Sperry.

"No," said Mr. Carlisle, "on a gold basis."

Mr. Sperry also wanted to know if, should the time ever come when there was no paper of the government redeemable in gold, the debt of the government would not be paid in silver. To this Mr. Carlisle said that there would not be enough silver to do this.

Mr. Walker spoke up and said he thought the state banks should be required to differ more completely than proposed in the appearance of their notes from the United States notes and certificates and national bank notes. It was not well, he held, to allow state bank notes not differing greatly from those of the government to be circulated until unthinking people would accept them as government notes.

Mr. Carlisle made no definite answer to Mr. Walker, saying that the government proposed to lessen, so far as possible, its relations with the state banks.

The committee took a recess until afternoon when Mr. Eckels, the comptroller of the currency, appeared. Mr. Eckels, in explaining his views to the committee, said the banks should be made to give something in return for the valuable franchise of issuing legal tender notes.

Tried the Ammen Ram.

Bath, Me., Dec. 11.—The Ammen ram was given a preliminary trial here. Her machinery worked well and the boat promises to be fast.

Mr. Bissell Visits Buffalo.

Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 11.—Postmaster General Bissell has arrived in Buffalo to attend to a little private business.

USED OCCULT POWER.

Harry Hayward Charged With Hypnotizing His Victim.

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 11.—The grand jury has begun consideration of the Ging murder case. It is possible that no indictment will be returned against Andray Hayward. The principal witnesses against Harry Hayward and Blixt will be Mayor Eustis, Sheriff Ege, the city detectives the deputy sheriffs and the other persons who have had a hand in working up the case.

When Harry Hayward, who is confined in the St. Paul jail, for fear of mob violence, was shown the morning papers containing the confession of Blixt, he became quite blasphemous. The confession, he declared, was a tissue of falsehoods.

"It has been worked up by the mayor, the county attorney and the sheriff," said he, "and I have been shown a paper this morning with the idea that I might be induced to say something. But even if I had anything to confess it could not be wrung from me in any such way as that. But I'll get even with the whole lot of them yet. My time will come and when it does, there will be some fun."

No one is allowed to see the Haywards except their attorney, even their parents being denied admission. Harry is putting on a bold front and shows no signs of weakening.

The belief is growing that Harry Hayward made use of hypnotism to gain so strong an influence over his victims. Blixt told the officers that Hayward had controlled him with hypnotic power, as he had Miss Ging. He said whenever Harry told him to do anything and he refused, Harry would make a few passes at him with his hands and the result was that he did whatever Hayward told him. Andray Hayward in his confession alluded to the terrible influence Harry had over him. It is known that Harry had a wonderful influence over the dead woman and he often boasted to Andray that the girl would do exactly as he told her to do.

FIVE BLOWN TO PIECES.

A Boiler Explodes with Terrific Effect at Washington, N. C.

Washington, N. C., Dec. 11.—Ex-mayor E. N. Short's big steam saw mill was wrecked by the explosion of one of the big boilers. The shock was felt five miles in the country. The bursting boiler was blown into a thousand pieces. Parts of the ironwork were thrown blocks away, demolishing everything in their path.

Mr. Short had just gone into the boiler room to find the reason for the lack of steam. The water was low and the engineer turned on cold water. The explision was instant. Mr. Short the engineer, two firemen and a drayman were killed and two other operators were injured. The bodies of two of the dead men were terribly mutilated.

CRISIS IN ST. JOHN.

Three Banks and Several Commercial Houses Close Their Doors.

St. Johns, N. F., Dec. 11.—This city is in the midst of a financial crisis, the outcome of which cannot, at present, be foreshadowed. The Commercial bank and five leading fish and sealing houses suspended, while the Union bank, after paying out gold for a short time, closed its doors temporarily in order to allow it to replenish its coffers.

So far its notes are fetching their full value and it is hoped that it will be able to resume business in a few days. The Savings bank did no business whatever but promises to open and pay its depositors a proportion of their deposits, the balance to be guaranteed by the colony.

SWEPT BY A CYCLONE.

A Storm Probably Fatally Injures Congressman-elect Skinner.

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 11.—A special from Westville, Fla., says:

"A terrible cyclone passed five miles north of this place early this morning. It struck the farm of Mr. J. N. Skinner the congressman-elect from Holmes county and demolished every building in the place.

"Every member of Mr. Skinner's family was injured and his wounds it is thought will prove fatal.

"It is impossible to obtain information as to the extent of the damage and how far the storm extended."

A Romance of the War.

Newark, N. J., Dec. 11.—Mrs. Andrew Stirling of Woodside, has discovered the whereabouts of her father, who was a sergeant in Company C. of the 23d New Jersey volunteers, and who disappeared during the war. His name is James Moan, and pension papers have been issued to him in Augusta, Ga.

TO PUSH HER CHANCES

Japan Will Attack Pekin and Wei-Hai-Wei.

Advices from the Scenes of the Fighting Show Continued Losses by the Chinese—Victories Celebrated at Tokio—Thousands of Coolies Hired To Transport Munitions of War.

Yokahama, Dec. 11.—The second Japanese army will make an early advance upon Pekin. The Japanese government has contracted for a force of 8,000 coolies to accompany this army.

A despatch from Chee-Foo says the Japanese seem to be concentrating for an attack upon Shan-Hai-Kwan, a squadron of sixteen vessels having appeared there.

The Chinese expect that the Japanese will try to effect a landing twelve miles southeast of that place, and troops from Chee-Foo and other points have been despatched to oppose them.

The Japanese victories were celebrated with great enthusiasm at Tokio. A detachment of 151 Japanese soldiers who were wounded at the capture of Port Arthur have arrived at Hiroshima.

A despatch from Shanghai says the Chinese are fearful that the Japanese will soon attack Wei-Hai-Wei. Men and guns are being hurried to Wei-Hai-Wei with all possible expedition. The foreigners there, although secure in the protection of a strong naval force are forming a volunteer force to further protect themselves against the disbanded and deserting soldiers whose numbers are largely increasing. Reports from Pekin say that a very strong anti-foreign feeling prevails there.

The Japanese are trying to float the Chinese warships Chao-Yung, and Yang-Wei which were beached and burned in the Yalu fight.

A despatch from Chemulpo says there are only a hundred Japanese at Seoul. Five hundred Tong-Haks are gathering in the province of Loan-Hai, a province hitherto free from rebels.

Tokio, Dec. 11.—Reports circulated here that Field Marshal Yamatha has been killed by a Chinese assassin are emphatically denied. Dispatches have been received from the officer since the date on which murder was alleged to have taken place.

Another call for troops has been issued. One hundred thousand are wanted. This leads to the belief that Japan will pay no attention to the overures for peace, but will humiliate China completely before ending the war. Recruits are pouring into army headquarters, and little doubt exists but that the army will be organized in a month or two.

THE "SICK MAN" SHAKES.

Turkey Cut Off from Diplomatic Relations—The Massacre Did It.

Vienna, Dec. 11.—All foreign diplomatic action at Constantinople has been suspended in consequence of the exchange of views which, on the initiative of Great Britain, is proceeding between the Berlin treaty powers with the view of taking joint action on the Armenian question.

The Porte is very anxious at this new turn of affairs, and has apprised the sultan of the exchange of views taking place among the powers. In consequence of this the Turkish ministry, assisted by Kiamil, Said and Chakir Pashas, sat continuously from noon on Saturday until noon to-day.

To Dedicate Battlefields.

Rockford, Ill., Dec. 11.—Commander-in-Chief Lawler, of the G. A. R., has received official notice that the dedication of the National Park at Chickamauga and Chattanooga, will be held Sept. 19 nd 20 next. The council of administration which meets in Louisville, Dec. 13, will arrange the next national encampment just prior to the dedication so that veterans can take in both events at the same time.

CookGang Loot a Bank.

South Enid, Okla., Dec. 11.—A United States deputy marshal, who has arrived here, states that the Farmers and Merchant's bank of Hennessy was robbed by highwaymen. They secured about $13,000. It is supposed to be the work of the Cook gang. The sheriff deputized a dozen men and left immediately in pursuit of the robbers.

The Brothers Byrne Stabbed.

Norristown, Pa., Dec. 11.—Frank Morgan, a stage carpenter, attacked and seriously stabbed Matthew and Andrew Byrne of the "Eight Bells" theatrical company at a theatre here.

[Copyright, 1894, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

But I was not easily clouded, for I have seen too many singular things, so I hummed a tune between my teeth and thought of little Lisette whom I might see in Paris. My mind was full upon her when, trotting round a corner, I came straight upon half a dozen German dragoons who were sitting round a brushwood fire by the roadside.

I am an excellent soldier. I do not say this because I am prejudiced in my own favor, but because I really am so. I can weigh every chance in a moment and decide with as much certainty as though I had brooded for a week. Now I saw like a flash that come what might I should be chased, and on a horse which had already done a long twelve leagues. But it was better to be chased onwards than chased back. On this moonlit night, with fresh horses behind me, I must take my risk in either case, but if I were to shake them off, I preferred that it should be near Senlis than near Soissons. All this flashed on me, as if by instinct, you understand. My eyes had hardly rested upon the bearded faces under the brass helmets before my rowels were up to the bosses in Violette's side and she was off with a rattle like a pas-decharge. Oh, the shouting and rushing and stamping from behind us! Three of them fired and three swung themselves onto their horses. A bullet rapped on the crupper of the saddle with a noise like a stick on a door. Violette sprang madly forward and I thought she had been wounded, but it was only a graze above the near fore fetlock. Ah, the dear little mare, how I loved her when I felt her settle down into that long easy gallop of hers, her hoofs going like a Spanish girl's castanets. I could not hold myself. I turned on my saddle and shouted and raved. "Vive L'Empereur!" I screamed, and laughed at the gust of oaths that came back to me.

But it was not over yet. If she had been fresh she might have gained a mile in five. Now she could only hold her own with a very little over.

"I LET VIOLETTE HAVE HER HEAD."

Moscow have I seemed to be in such peril. But for the honor of the brigade I would rather be cut down by a light cavalryman than by a heavy. I never drew bridle, therefore, or hesitated for an instant, but I let Violette have her head. I remember that I tried to pray as I rode, but I am a little out of practice at such things and the only words I could remember were the prayer for fine weather which we used at the school on the evening before holidays. Even this seemed better than nothing, and I was pattering it out, when suddenly—when suddenly I heard French voices in front of me. Ah, mon Dieu, but the joy went through my heart like a musket ball. They were ours—our own dear little rascals from the corps of Marmont. Round whisked my two dragoons and galloped for their lives with the moon gleaming on their brass helmets, while I trotted up to my friends with no undue haste, for I would have them understand that though a hussar may fly it is not in his nature to fly very fast. Yet I fear that Violette's heaving flanks and foam spattered muzzle gave the lie to my careless bearing.

Who should be at the head of the troop but old Bouvet whom I saved at Leipsig. When he saw me his little pink eyes filled with tears, and indeed I could not but shed a few myself at the sight of his joy. I told him of my mission, but he laughed when I said I must pass through Senlis.

"The enemy is there," said he. "You cannot go."

"I prefer to go where the enemy is," I answered. "I would ride through Berlin if I had the emperor's order."

"But why not go straight to Paris with your dispatch? Why should you choose to pass through the one place where you are almost sure to be taken or killed?"

"A soldier does not choose. He obeys," said I, just as I had heard Napoleon say it.

Old Bouvet laughed in his wheezy way until I had to give my mustache a twirl and look him up and down in a manner which brought him to reason.

"Well," said he, "you had best come along with us, for we are all bound for Senlis. Our orders are to reconnoitre the place. A squadron of Poniatowski's Polish lancers are in front of us. If you must ride through it it is possible that we may be able to go with you."

So away we went, jingling and clanking through the quiet night until we came up with the Poles—fine old soldiers, all of them, though a trifle heavy for their horses. It was a treat to see them, for they could not have carried themselves better if they had belonged to my own brigade. We rode together until in the early morning we saw the lights of Senlis. A peasant was coming along with a cart, and from him we learned how things were going there.

His information was certain, for his brother was the mayor's coachman and he had spoken with him late the night before. There was a single squadron of Cossacks—or a polk as they call it in their frightful language—quartered upon the mayor's house, which stands at the corner of the market place, and is the largest building in the town. A whole division of Prussian infantry was encamped in the woods to the north, but only the Cossacks were in Senlis. Ah! what a chance to avenge ourselves upon these barbarians, whose cruelty to our poor country folk was the talk at every camp fire. We were into the town like a torrent, hacked down the vedettes, rode over the guard and were smashing in the doors of the mayor's house before they understood that there was a Frenchman within twenty miles of them. We saw horrid heads at the windows, heads bearded to the temples, with tangled hair and sheepskin caps, and silly gaping mouths. "Hourra! Hourra!" they shrieked, and fired with their carbines, but our fellows were into the house and at their throats before they had wiped the sleep out of their eyes. It was dreadful to see how the Poles flung themselves upon them, like starving wolves upon a herd of fat bucks—for, as you know, the Poles have a blood feud against the Cossacks. The most were killed in the upper rooms, whither they had fled for shelter, and the blood was pouring down into the hall like rain upon a roof. They are terrible soldiers, these Poles, though I think they are a trifle heavy for their horses. Man for man they are as big as Kellermann's cuirassiers. Their equipment, however, is of course much lighter, since they are without the cuirass, backplate and helmet.

Well, it was at this point that I made an error—a very serious error, it must be admitted. Up to this moment I had carried out my mission in a manner which only my modesty prevents me from describing as remarkable. But now I did that which an official would condemn and a soldier excuse.

There is no doubt that the mare was spent, but still it is true that I might have galloped on through Senlis and reached the country where I should have had no enemy between me and Paris. But what hussar can ride past a fight and never draw rein? It is to ask too much of him. Besides I thought that if Violette had an hour of rest I might be three hours the better at the other end. Then on the top of it came those heads at the windows with their sheepskin hats and their barbarous cries. I sprang from my saddle, threw Violette's bridle over a nail post and ran into the house with the rest. It is true that I was too late to be of service, and that I was nearly wounded by a lance-thrust from one of these dying savages. Still it is a pity to miss even the smallest affair, for one never knows what opportunity for advancement may present itself. I have seen more soldierly work in outpost skirmishes and little gallop-and-hack affairs of the kind than in any of the emperor's big battles.

When the house was cleared I took a bucket of water out for Violette, and our peasant guide showed me where the good mayor kept his fodder. My faith, but the little sweetheart was ready for it. Then I sponged down her legs and leaving her still tethered, I went back into the house to find a mouthful for myself, so that I should not need to halt again until I was in Paris.

And now I come to the part of my story which may seem singular to you, although I could tell you at least ten things every bit as queer which have happened to me in my lifetime. You can understand that to a man who spends his life in scouting and vedette duties on the bloody ground which lies between two great armies there are many chances of strange experiences. I'll tell you, however, exactly what occurred.

Old Bouvet was waiting in the passage when I entered, and he asked me whether we might not crack a bottle of wine together. "My faith, we must not be long," said he. "There are ten thousand of Theilmann's Prussians in the woods up yonder."

"Where is the wine?" I asked.

"Ah! you may trust two hussars to find where the wine is," said he, and, taking a candle in his hand, he led the way down the stone stairs which led to the kitchen.

When we got there we found another door which opened onto a winding stair with the cellar at the bottom. The Cossacks had been there before us, as was easily seen by the broken bottles littered all over it. However, the mayor was a bon vivant, and I do not wish to have a better set of bins to pick from. Chambertin, Graves, Alicant, white wine and red, sparkling and still, they lay in pyramids peeping coyly out of the sawdust. Old Bouvet stood with his candle, looking here and peeping there, purring in his throat like a cat before a milkpail. He had picked upon a Burgundy at last, and had his hand outstretched to the bottle, when there came a roar of musketry from above us, a rush of feet, and such a yelping and a screaming as I have never listened to. The Prussians were upon us.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

"RENDEZ-VOUS!" HE YELLED.

There was one of them, a young boy of an officer, who was better mounted than the others. He drew ahead with every stride. Two hundred yards behind him were two troopers, but I saw every time that I glanced round that the distance between them was increasing. The other three who had waited to shoot were a long way in the rear. The officer's mount was a bay, a fine horse, thought not to be spoken of with Violette. Yet it was a powerful brute, and it seemed to me that in a few miles its freshness might tell. I waited until the lad was a long way in front of his comrades, and then I eased my mare down a little—a very, very little, so that he might think that he was really catching me. When he came within pistol shot of me I drew and cocked my own pistol and laid my chin upon my shoulder to see what he would do. He did not offer to fire and I soon discerned the cause. The silly boy had taken his pistols from his holsters when he had camped for the night. He wagged his sword at me now and roared some of his gibberish. He did not seem to understand that he was at my mercy. I eased Violette down until there was not the length of a long lance between the gray tail and the bay muzzle.

"Rendez-vous!" he yelled.

"I must compliment monsieur upon his French," said I, resting the barrel of my pistol upon my bridle arm, which I have always found best when shooting from the saddle. I aimed at his face, and could see, even in the moonlight, how white he grew when he understood that it was all up with him. But even as my finger pressed the trigger I thought of his mother and I put my ball through his horse's shoulder. I fear he hurt himself in the fall, for it was a fearful crash, but I had my letter to think of, so I stretched the mare into a gallop once more.

But they were not so easily shaken off, these brigands. The two troopers thought no more of their young officer than if he had been a recruit thrown

Palmer Cox's Queer People

Racing on a Bicycle.

The thousand and one pranks, comic adventures and mischievous escapades that Palmer Cox, in his flights of imagination, takes his Queer People through are wonderful in their variety, and most charming in their likeness to the exuberant fancies of childhood; and yet, in every thrilling story of adventure and exciting incident, the sweet sunshine of kindness is always present, and, while captivated with the fun is inspired with pure and good impulses, unconsciously the heart of youth sucked, there is more rollicking, jolly fun in Of all the Juvenile Books yet issued, there is more rollicking, jolly fun in one of these eight books than in any dozen others we ever saw

REMARKABLE CURES

Of Recent Date

A Statement from Ex-Mayor John Corson, Esq., of Clinton, N. J

TO THE PUBLIC:

I acknowledge with the utmost pleasure the wonderful cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in my case.

I had been a sufferer from piles, which gave me constant pain and distress, during twenty long years, attended with frequent loss of blood and with great and painful protrusion of the pile tumors and rectum whenever my bowels moved.

I tried constantly to get relief from my sufferings, but to no purpose until Mr. Bryan, a friend of mine, who had been cured by Dr. Lighthill of the same trouble, recommended him to me, and he effected a complete and radical cure in my case also, and earned my lifelong gratitude.

JOHN CORSON.

Dr. Lighthill Effects a Complete Cure Where Ten Physicians Had Failed.

TO THE SICK, SUFFERING AND AFFLICTED:

For many years past I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. Every movement of the bowels was attended with loss of blood and with intense pain which lasted for hours and sometimes all day. My condition was aggravated by a prolapse of the rectum, which greatly increased my suffering and sometimes gave me most agonizing pains.

So great was my distress and so bad my condition that I sold my farm, not being able to work it any longer. At one time the protruding pile tumors became so highly inflamed and swollen that they could not be replaced, and I had to go to bed, applying hot poultices for three months before I could get relief.

I had been under the treatment of ten different physicians, some of New York City, Easton, Washington and elsewhere, without any benefit whatever, and had given up my case as hopeless when, luckily for me, I heard of Dr. Lighthill's skill and success in such cases, and went to him for treatment, with the happy result that he effected a radical and permanent cure in less than four weeks's time; and I am glad to say that the entire treatment gave me neither pain nor distress.

I consider my cure perfectly wonderful, and so do all my friends and neighbors. I am confident that there is no case of piles which Dr. Lighthill cannot cure.

PETER G. EYCK,

A NEW COUNTY.

Morris County Citizens to Agitate the Scheme.

Morristown, Dec. 12.—Some of the people of this section of New Jersey are very desirous that the number of counties in the State shall be increased by one, and for that purpose a delegation will wait upon the members of the next General Assembly and try and get a bill through which will permit the citizens within the proposed new county to vote upon the proposition.

The measure of success they will receive in Trenton is doubtful, although they will have some good arguments to bring to bear upon the legislators.

The territory embraced within the limits of the proposed county lies within a radius of a ten mile circle from the town of Stanhope, which it is proposed to make the county seat.

It will include the towns and villages of Hackettstown, Allamuchy, Andover, Stanhope, Amity, Waterloo and Brooklyn, in Warren and Sussex, and Port Oram, Mount Arlington, Landing, Budd's Lake, Drakesville and Succasunna, in Morris County.

It is said that the people of that section are heartily in favor of the project, and there is no doubt of the result should the question come to a vote.

The proposition will take about 900 voters from Morris County, and much valuable property. The main argument in favor of the change is the great distance these people live from their county seats.

JUDGE ULRICH'S ILLNESS.

IT NECESSITATES HIS REMOVAL TO A RETREAT.

Taken to the Trenton Asylum Yesterday—Worriment Over Troubles the Cause.

Ex-Judge John Ulrich was taken to the State Asylum for the Insane, Trenton, yesterday afternoon, suffering from acute nervous prostration. Dr. W. H. Murray accompanied him. The Judge has been a mental sufferer for many months, owing largely to worriment over political and financial reverses; and it was deemed advisable by his physicians and friends to place him in a retreat where complete rest and change will, it is confidentially hoped, restore him in a few weeks to perfect health.

Few indeed are the men who display the mental activity exhibited by Judge Ulrich. A far-seeing politician, fully in touch with every move on the great checker-board of his State, a tireless worker and prominent officer in many secret organizations, the editor of The Royal Craftsman, New Jersey's Masonic journal, it is not to be wondered at that work and worry would in time display itself in the form cited above. His friends, and they are legion, echo in their hearts the prayer of the afflicted family that he may soon be among them again in perfect health.

OUR HOME-COMERS.

Great in Numbers, Their Wishes Should Be Consulted.

The Plainfield commuter goes each week-day morning and comes each week-day evening, not in scores, but by hundreds, almost thousands. At present he lines up in a residential sense along the four tracks of the Central Railroad, because, after riding twenty-five miles, he is not in a mood to tramp in all weathers very far inland. Five blocks is his limit. In the morning he lacks the time, in the evening the inclination, to become a long-distance pedestrian. As things are in this town, he must either live within easy walking distance of the Central Railroad, or keep a carriage, which involves an additional expense of at least $500 a year. The situation when analyzed is just this: live on small lots, in homes that almost touch each other, within the clamor of railroad trains, or else be prepared to establish a private cab line between home and station.

The result is quite plain, and it will be very plain when real rapid transit brings Harlem and the Annexed District within twenty minutes of Wall street and the Produce Exchange. We have all the commuters we can secure under present conditions, with an increasing disposition on the part of those already here to go where inter-communication is established on a popular and convenient basis. The five-block strip has accumulated its possibilities of population; and the questions the second and third wards are considering is: Shall the five-block line be pushed farther back, or shall we stand on what we have?

These questions may be said to be landlord questions, but they really interest a very considerable number of commuters who like Plainfield, its schools and various other advantages, and dislike to seek homes in other towns. If such men, irrespective of the landlords, would rise up in their might and demand additional and wholly reasonable trolley lines, the problem would be speedily solved to the satisfaction and profit of all.

Pythian Women Nominate.

At the regular meeting of Minerva Temple, No. 4, of Rathbone Sisters, the following nominations were made for the ensuing term:

M. E. C—Mrs. E. K. Cox, Mrs. B. F. Moore.
M. E (Senior)—Mrs. J. B. Higgins, Mrs. I. H. Boehm, Mrs. R. Mattis.
M. E. (Junior)—Mrs. E. T. Bowman Mrs. E. Hann.
M. E. M—Mrs. L. Pope, Mrs. J. Vosseler.
M. of Finance—Mrs. B. Thatcher.
M. of R. and C—Mrs. A. E. Dawe, Mrs. Wakefield.
P. of L—Mrs. C. W. Lines, Mr. Cline.
G. of C. T—Mrs. Eagan, Mrs. F. Haberle.
P. C—Mrs. E. K. Cox.
Organist—Mrs. A. L. Pope.

Two candidates were initiated, six elected and two new applications received last evening.

The Camera Club.

A new library case has been purchased by the Camera Club, and will be erected in the Directors room. It will contain works on photography, and will be for the use of the members. The work of furnishing the rooms is progressing favorably. Members of the club are working on the set of slides to be entered in the 1895 Interchange. A complimentary entertainment is in preparation, at which time the Plainfield slides will be shown. Next Tuesday evening the annual election of officers will take place.

—Putnam & DeGraw are offering excellent bargains for the holidays. All new goods; none left over from last year.

SOCIABLE BAPTISTS.

The Park Avenue Congregation Enjoys an Evening Gathering.

Despite the inclement weather, the parlors of the Park Avenue Baptist Church were well filled last evening with the congregation and their friends who came to attend the sociable of the church. During the evening instrumental music was furnished by Martin Sneider on his cornet, accompanied by Miss Elma Runyon at the piano. The selections rendered during the evening by the accomplished musicians were "A Little Footstep", "Why Does Mother Stay so Long?" "The Sailor Boy's Return", and the melody of "Mother's Song".

Mrs. H. E. Rider and Miss Adelia Runyon sang the "Wanderer's Night Song" and "Juette" accompanied by Mrs. Nelson Runyon on the piano.

After an hour of sociability and music, refreshments were served. Mrs. F. K. Fish, Miss Annie Wyckoff and Miss Heyniger were in charge of the refreshments assisted by Miss Mary Giles, Miss Henrietta Cuming, Miss May Thompson and Miss Nora DeMott. Mrs. J. W. Johnson and Mrs. James Middlecith presided at the tea table. A more elaborate programme had been planned, but owing to the storm it had to be given up.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Miss Eva Dayton of East Sixth street is ill at her home.

William S. Campbell is ill at his home on Rockview avenue.

Hiram Hornish is kept at his home on North avenue by illness.

The death of John D. Moore, age 78, occurred at 39 Chatham street yesterday.

Miss White of West Front street is kept at her home by slight indisposition.

H. H. Hoffman of West Front street is confined to his home with a strained back.

J. B. Cain and family of Duer street, will move tomorrow to Adamsville, Somerset County.

Miss Georgie Eick of East Third street has accepted a permanent position at the Commercial Palace.

Borough Marshal Zachariah Wilson and wife were sadly afflicted today by the sudden death of a young child.

Miss Keegan of Hackettstown returned home yesterday after being pleasantly entertained by Miss Minnie Smith of West Front street.

Cards are out for a tea to be given by Mrs. Anthony C. Vail of West Eighth street, to introduce her daughter, Miss Vail, Saturday, December 22, from 4 until 7.

Mrs. Samuel Burhans of Westfield will recite at the tea of the Woman's Christian Work Society of Trinity Church at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Marshall, East Fifth street, tomorrow night.

J. W. Murray of Central avenue will take up his residence in Brooklyn where he will represent several insurance companies on his own account after January 1, at which time he severs his connection with the German American Company.

Mrs. Lawrence Myers of East Front street has issued invitations for her friends to meet Miss Louise S. Houghton, Thursday afternoon, Dec. 20. Miss Houghton is editor of the McAll Record and will give an informal talk at 3:30 on the work of the McAll Mission in France.

Paris Green in a Pie.

Charles Vanderveer went before Justice Newcorn this morning and made complaint against Lewis Cuff, charging him with putting Paris green in a piece of pie with attempt to poison. Vanderveer submitted the substance to Dr. Tomlinson, who analyzed the pie and found that it contained Paris green. A summons was issued by the Justice, and a hearing will be held tomorrow morning at 11.

—The case of Morrison against Bacon was settled in Justice Newcorn's Court this afternoon, and in the case of Morrison against Beerbower judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff.

—Geo. Kirch, the North Plainfield grocer, has put in a post at the corner of Grandview avenue and Somerset street, for a much-needed letter-box which Postmaster Hetfield said he would place there.

—Articles lost at the Y. M. C. A. fair may be had by calling at the association rooms and describing the same.

—Thomas Pendergast of Bound Brook was killed at the Bound Brook station on the Jersey Central this morning. He was a track-walker, and had been employed by the Central 30 years.

—Charles Smith has placed two new National cash registers in his place, corner of Front and Somerset streets.

—An entertainment, supper and dance will be given by Mizpah Lodge, No. 1, U. O. of I. O. L., in Red Men's Hall, tonight.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. V. The prompt relief it affords is alone worth many times the cost, 50 cents. Its continued use will effect a permanent cure. For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

WESTFIELD SAYS NO.

SHE WILL NOT ACCEPT CRANFORD'S PROPOSITION.

Sewer Construction Still an Unsolved Problem in Our Sister Township.

A special meeting of the Township Committee of Westfield was held last evening in the town rooms to consider another proposition from the Cranford Township Committee in relation to uniting with their proposed sewer to tidewater. Some weeks ago the Cranford Township Committee offered Westfield an outlet to tidewater, through their proposed trunk sewer from the boundary line at Garwood, for $50,000. This offer was refused by the Westfield Committee, and they, being informally requested to make Cranford an offer, passed a resolution at a later meeting proposing to give Cranford $25,000 for a proper sewerage outlet to tidewater, through its proposed trunk sewer, of sufficient size to accommodate both townships from the intersection of South avenue and the township line at Garwood, with guarantee of permanet services and protection from litigation.

The Cranford Township Committee refused this offer, and last night they proposed to give Westfield the outlet for one-half the total cost of said sewer and expense thereof, of a yearly rental of $2 000 a year for the first five years; $2,250 from fifth to tenth year; $2 500 from tenth to fifteenth year; $2,750 from fifteenth to twentieth year; $3,000 from twentieth to twenty-fifth year; $3,250 from the twenty-fifth to thirtieth year; and the purchase price to be $40,000.

This offer was refused by the Westfield Committee last night, after a careful consideration. It is possible that the Westfield Township Committee will build a sewer of their own and have the disposal bed system.

The New Sub-Stations.

Postmaster Hetfield has requested The Press to again call the attention of the public to the sub-offices established at Grant Avenue and Netherwood which are fully equipped for the transaction of all business except such as relates to the Money Order or Registered Letter Departments. Just at this time when every office in the country is glutted with Christmas matter, it is especially important that each one should be careful that packages are properly weighed, stamped and addressed, as second-class is sent at once to the Dead Letter Office and no notification given, as is the case with matter of the first-class whenever possible. There will be fewer disappointments among your out of town friends on Christmas morning if you make a mental note of this article.

Commander Coriell.

The following officers were elected by Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., last night:

—The Odd Ladies will hold an entertainment and dance this evening in Red Men's Hall.

—Soft hands, white hands, may be yours by the use of Reynolds's lemon juice and glycerine.

—Business of importance will come before Franklin Council, No. 41, J. O. U. A. M., tomorrow evening.

—The Willing Helpers of Hope Chapel will give an entertainment next Thursday evening in the chapel.

—Dudley Miller is very tastefully arranging the Christmas decorations at L. W. Randolph's Pharmacy.

—A bowling tournament has been arranged on the Hope Chapel alleys. Twenty-seven members have joined.

—The Elizabeth Bowling Club will bowl the Plainfield team tomorrow evening in this city, in the Journal Bowling League contest.

—The yellow card has been removed from the house of James Welsh on West Fourth street, after the death of their only son.

—The portion of sidewalk on North avenue in the driveway of the United States Express Company is in a wretched condition.

—Those in charge of the Christmas entertainment in the German Reformed Church are making great preparations for the event.

—After the business was transacted in Somerset Council, J. O. U. A. M., last evening the members and their friends enjoyed a dance.

—The Christian Endeavor Society of the Dunellen Presbyterian Church will hold their regular monthly business meeting this evening.

—The Executive Committee of the Local Union of Christian Endeavor, will hold an important meeting Thursday evening in the Y. M. C. A. rooms.

—A special communication of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., will be held this evening, when the E. A degree will be conferred on two candidates.

—All but one of the fences between Franklin place and Richmond street on LaGrande avenue have been taken down, greatly improving the looks of the property.

—The Saengerbund Singing Society will give a dance New Year's Eve. On Christmas Day they will hold a festival in their hall, and gifts will be distributed among the children of the society.

—Those who have books belonging to the Y. M. C. A. Library are requested to return the same at the earliest possible date in order that the committee may rearrange the books for the new building.

—The (original) A. M. Tenney and Brunnell's fine candies are special favorites at L. W. Randolph's Pharmacy, and he has a choice line for the holidays. The former sells for 65 cents per pound, and the latter for 80.

—A parlor meeting will be held at the W. C. T. U. rooms, Watchung avenue, Thursday afternoon at 3:30. By special request, Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson will report on the meetings of the National W. C. T. U. Convention recently held in Cleveland. Tea will be served. Friends are cordially invited.

—Mr. Walsh, the popular New York dancing master, held his first reception of the season at the Olympia last evening. A large delegation was present from Cranford, where Mr. Walsh has another flourishing class. A most delightful evening was enjoyed by all, regardless of the inclement weather without.

—According to the Morristown Banner, immense beds of native concrete exist near Gladstone, on the Rockaway Valley Railroad. Frost makes no impression on it, and it is free from mud, dirt or friction. It is also claimed that the material found there is the same as that of which the finest road in the world—from Calcutta to Lucknow, India—is constructed.

—This evening at the Manhattan alleys, Somerset street, the second of a series of three games for prizes between the Somerville's and the Manhattans will be played. This game tonight will be of especial interest, owing to the fact that the Manhattan team will make every effort to wipe out the Monday evening score of 1474—1438 piled up against them by the Somervilles.

BUILDING UP MEN.

SUPERIOR ADVANTAGES OF THE Y. M. C. A. PHYSICAL DEPARTMENT.

D. A. MacPhie, Director, Gives His Idea of Physical Culture.

Perfect symmetrical development is rarely found in man or woman. Of course those who work with their hands and are much on their feet generally excel in form, but there is a tendency in all for limbs or parts of the body to become stronger and better developed than others.

Excluding from consideration that class given to hard manual labor we find that in the majority of men and women after the age of maturity is reached the upper half of the body does not reach and retain its relative development and strength as compared with the lower half. The solution is easy: the labor put upon the lower limbs is greater than that which is done by the arms. The business man when told by his physican that he must exercise insists that he has all he needs, for he is on his feet from morning until night.

We find these men usually strong on their feet but comparatively weak in their arms. Circulation in the lower half of the body may be good, but in the upper half it is less free, and less blood is attracted to it; and so the natural adjustment is to a very large extent destroyed.

Nature intends that a certain portion of the blood in the human body should enter and distribute itself throughout the whole muscular system. If, however, large muscles like those of the arms and trunk are insufficiently exercised, and as a consequence grow smaller, then the blood intended for them is diverted elsewhere. It must be taken up by one of the internal organs, and the liver is the one organ which from its peculiar construction will bear the greatest increase in the blood supply.

Only so much of the blood is intended for those parts. If more is sent to them they are to a greater or less extent congested. Hence we find that class of persons who appear to be on their feet enough, to experience sufficient exercise notwithstanding they do comparatively little labor with their hands proverbially suffer from disturbance of some internal organ or system of orders. To them dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation and the like are occasional if not frequent visitants.

It is easy now to grasp the truth of the matter that in internal derangements, all parts of the body must be exercised alike so as to draw the blood from the affected organs into the muscular system, and relieve them of their excess and consequent congestion.

Now this tends to show that with the growing interest in physical culture people must know more on the subject than they generally do, not only to receive the greatest possible benefit from exercise, but also to restrain them from injury which very often results from physical overwork and strain.

The classes in our Y. M. C. A. gymnasiums throughout the country were never so large as at the present time and they are not entirely made up of the young men, but many men even advanced in life are learning that physical exercise is a necessity and an absolute requirement for sustaining vital, physical power and endurance.

No only so, but the fact is being appreciated that judicious systematic exercise is a remedy for many of the diseases of modern life. One trouble is that people generally are too ignorant of the importance of physical exercise as a curative means.

Another is that they do not know how to apply it properly. If a patient consults his physician for a disorder due to insufficient muscular exercise, or in the treatment of which more work of a physical kind is absolutely demanded he is told to exercise, and too often the "means" and "appliances" are not within reach.

The gymnasium in the new Y. M. C. A. Building will be properly equipped with all modern gymnastic and anthropometric apparatus and appliances for all who wish to avail themselves of the opportunity of taking a regular course in physical culture and calisthenic exercises for the symmetrical development of the whole body.

D. A. MACPHIE.

—A list of some of the goods secured from the stock of E. S. Jaffray & Co., is given in White of Plainfield's advertisement.

—Fred H. Martin, the real-estate man of Sandford avenue, has staked out and will break ground tomorrow for three fine houses on Duer street near Linden avenue. William H. Brokaw is the contractor.

"It is a pleasure to sell Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," says Stickney & Dentler, druggists, Republic, Ohio, "Because a customer after once using it, is almost certain to call for it when again in need of such a medicine. We sell more of it than of any other cough medicine we handle, and it always gives satisfaction." For cough, colds and croup, it is without an equal. COAL MINES MAY CLOSE.

Ten Thousand Miners May Quit Work on Saturday.

Philadelphia, Dec. 12.—It is reported in local coal trade circles that the collieries of the Reading & Lehigh Valley companies will be shut down on Dec. 18, not to re-open until the first of the coming year.

This will be done, it is said, because of the desire of the officials of both companies not to exceed the share of the production of the month allotted to each.

While no confirmation of this report could be obtained it was given credence by the trade.

Reynoldsville, Pa., Dec. 12.—The situation among the 10,000 miners in the Dubois, Reynoldsville and Punxsutawney coal fields is such that they may strike against the reduction of five per cent. in wages ordered to take effect on Saturday, Dec. 15.

A notice signed by the United Mine workers has been posted calling upon the men to resist the reduction and to demand the restoration of the five per cent on Jan. 1.

Pittsburg, Dec. 12.—All miners look upon the breaking of the interstate agreement by the operators at Columbus as a challenge anticipating a general reduction of wages. This will be vigorously opposed. A great strike is likely.

LEGS FROZEN AND WOUNDED.

Pitiable Condition of Thomas Murth Found in a Haystack.

Newark, N. J., Dec. 12.—Thomas P. Murth, of Baltimore, was discovered lying in a haystack on a farm adjoining that of Thomas Vincent, at West Livingston, with both legs frozen and a bullet wound in his nose. The unfortunate man was taken to the Orange memorial hospital.

Dr. Rogers found that the bullet had come out through his throat. It was not a serious wound, however, and he gave his attention to the man's legs, which he found to be badly frozen.

The man was able to talk. He said he had traveled from Baltimore looking for work, and that he went to sleep in the hay stack about twelve nights ago.

The night he sought shelter in the hay stack was a very cold one, and the following morning he was so cold and exhausted from want of food that he could not move. He suffered great agony, he said, and last Thursday he removed a revolver which he had in his right hip pocket because it was uncomfortable to lay upon, and by accident it exploded and the bullet penetrated his nose. After a few hours he became unconscious, in which state he was found by a farmer.

AFTER THE GOLD AGAIN.

Millions of Dollars Paid by the Treasury for Legal Tender.

Washington, Dec. 12.—Gold continues to be withdrawn from the treasury in exchange for legal tender notes, over $2,500,000 having been withdrawn in two days.

Since Nov. 30 withdrawals by days have been: Dec. 1, $46,082; Dec. 3, $688,485; Dec. 4, $827,656; Dec. 5, $1,662,188; Dec. 6, $1,188,737; Dec. 7, $1,313,004; Dec. 8, $1,794,172; Dec. 10, $847,922; Dec. 11, $1,024,075.

The gold reserve at he close of business had declined to $106,821,428. The general balance which includes the gold reserve stood at $155,453,000.

LAST OF THE GREELEYS.

The Brother of Horace Expires at His Pennsylvania Home.

Jamestown, N. Y., Dec. 12.—Nathan Barnes Greeley, the last surviving brother of Horace Greeley, died at the old Greeley homestead in the town of Wayne, Erie county, Pa., Monday, aged 82 years.

He leaves a family of grown sons and daughters. He was a man of many peculiarties and a strong spiritualist belief. He was probably the best knnamwon , Ycednu-dfii oh 3SV m known however as the brother of Horace Greeley.

TILLMAN A SENATOR.

Elected To Succeed M. C. Butler from South Carolina.

Columbia, S. C., Dec. 12.—B. R. Tillman was elected United States senator, receiving 111 out of 155 votes cast. M. C. Butler received 21 votes, three negro members of the house voted—two for George Murray and one for W. D. Crum.

The vote stood in the senate, 29 for Tillman, 6 for Butler. In the house, 102 for Tillman, 15 for Butler.

Quail Killed by Cholera.

Cincinnati, Dec. 12.—The scarcity of quail on farm lands as well as in the rough hill section of Ohio has been a puzzle to hunters and farmers. There is evidence now, however, that the many covies were swept off by cholera through the long dry summer. Dead birds have been found by thousands and expert hunters now declare that a cholera epidemic has raged among the birds.

Held Up by Masked Robbers.

Arkansas City, Kas., Dec. 12.—Two masked men held up the north-bound Rock Island train near the Red River bridge on the frontier of the Indian Territory, and compelled the engineer and fireman to help break open the express car. The amount stolen is as yet unknown.

Morton at Albany.

Albany, Dec. 12.—Governor-elect Morton and Mrs. Morton accompanied by one of their daughters arrived here and were driven immediately to the executive mansion. They will be the guests of governor and Mrs. Flower for a few days.

Broke the Orange Cargo Record.

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 12.—The Clyde steamer Algonquin has sailed bearing thirty thousand boxes of Florida orages, thus breaking the world's record for an orange cargo by eleven thousand boxes.

MANY MAYORS ELECTED

Results of Massachustt's Municipal Contests.

Boston Elects Curtis, a Republican, Over Peabody, a Democrat, by a Large Majority—Returns from Towns and Burroughs Show a Falling Off of Votes—License Wins.

Boston, Dec. 12.—Municipal elections were held in eleven cities of the commonwealth, including Boston, and surprises were the result in several cases, both as regards candidates elected and the vote on the question of licensing the sale of liquors.

In Boston the early returns proved reliable in foreshadowing the election of Edwin U. Curtis (rep.), as mayor, over Col. Francis Peabody, jr., (dem.) The hottest fights were over the election of aldermen, the campaign having developed a number of warm personal contests. The vote for common council was very close in many of the wards and the count for members of both branches of the city government was not completed until late.

There were nineteen candidates for the eight vacancies to be filled on the school commission, the candidates being variyously endorsed by the republicans, democrats, independent women voters, and committee of one hundred. The city again voted for license by an

In Salem, Mayor J. H. Tearner and increased plurality over last year. the city government was elected on a non-partisan ticket and the city voted for license by a vote of 2,722 to 2,605. Last year it was no license.

In Medford the republicans carried everything, electing Lewis H. Lovering mayor and also having a large majority in the city government. Licenses vote: Yes, 665; no, 1,435.

In Newburyport Orrin J. Gurney was elected mayor on a non-partisan ticket and the city government is republican. License vote: Yes 1201; No 952.

In Boston with five precincts missing, which will not vitally affect the general result, Curtis (rep.) has 33,549; Peabody (dem.) 31,541; Curtis plurality 2,008.

Lynn republicans elected their candidate for mayor, C. E. Harwood, and a majority of members of the city government. License vote: Yes 5,503; No 4,006.

Chelsea citizens had but one mayoralty candidate to vote for, George H. Carter. The city government is nonpartisan. A majority of the members, however, are republicans. License vote: Yes 2,287; No 2,493. The so-called temple hall ticket (non-partisan), headed by Mayor William A. Bancroft was successful in Cambridge. License vote: Yes 4,500; No 5,099.

Beverly's first city election resulted in the victory of Hon. John I Baker for mayor. License vote: Yes 787; No 1,011.

Lowell elected William F. Courtney (dem.), as mayor, six democratic aldermen out of eight and 12 of the 24 common councilmen. The city voted for license by about 600 majority.

In Everett the citizens ticket headed by John F. Cate for mayor was elected and the city voted no license by a vote of 1,508 no to 712 yes.

CRASH IN THE TUNNEL.

One Man Fatally Hurt and Many Injured in a Cable Car Collision.

Chicago, Dec. 12.—In a collision between cable cars in the Washington street tunnel one man was fatally hurt, seven more people were seriously injured and a score of others more or less bruised.

The cars were set on fire by the stoves and for a time there was a fearful panic around the wreck. The most seriously injured are John Smith, internally injured and both legs broken, will die; George Newman, head and face badly cut, and William Joyce, right leg broken and severe bruises.

WALLPAPER IN FLAMES.

The Largest Plant of Its Kind in the Country in Ashes.

Buffalo, Dec. 12.—Birge's wallpaper factory, at Niagara and Maryland streets, was entirely destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $250,000, and the insurance is said to nearly cover the damage.

The office effects were saved, but stock and materials were all destroyed. The factory was the largest plant of its kind in the country, and perhaps in the world. The Birges did not belong to the wallpaper trust, having persistently refused to join. About 500 hands will be thrown out of employment.

Athletes Suffocated by Gas.

San Francisco, Dec. 12.—Charles Johnson and Gustave Wennerberg were suffocated by illuminating gas at their lodgings. Both men were prominent in athletic circles, and had participated in many contests as members of a Swedish team.

It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25c. per box. For sale by L. W. Randolph, druggist.

SEELY BREAKS DOWN.

He Confesses His Identity to the Chicago Police.

Chicago, Dec. 12.—Samuel C. Seely, the absconding book-keeper of the National Shoe & Leather bank of New York, has confessed he was the man they wanted and stated he was anxious for them to hurry the arrangements to take him back to New York.

He was trembling and filled with nervous excitement when brought to the inspectator's private office. Inspector Shea, Lieutenant Haas, Detective Almendinger and a number of newspaper men were present when he was brought in. The inspector asked him what he wanted.

"All I want to say, gentlemen, is that you have the right man. There is no use of my attempting to conceal it any longer. I am Samuel C. Seely, and I am the man wanted in New York."

Nothing more was said until the prisoner spoke again and said that he was ready to go back to New York as soon as the officers could arrange for it. He said further that he would make no effort to gain his release from the Chicago officers, and did not want an attorney, but preferred to wait until he reached New York, where he could consult his own counsel.

After Seely had admitted his identity Inspector Shea asked him if he had anything to say. He replied:

"I acted as a dupe for Baker all the time. I was a fool to do it, but its done now and its all over, and perhaps it is just as well. Its a tiresome business always dodging, and never having a friend and being afraid to see a face you know."

BLOWN TO ATOMS.

Horrible Suicide of Young Michael Davis with Dynamite.

Binghamton, N. Y., Dec. 12.—A special from Walton says: Michael Davis, son of Joseph Davis, living in Marvin Hollow, near here has committed suicide with dynamite, literally blowing his body into thousands of fragments.

About 9 o'clock in the evening he left the house saying he was going to kill himself and went direct to the quarry, and into the storehouse, built a fire and began thawing out a stick of dynamite.

This took about three-quarters of an hour, then returning to the house he left his watch and started for the fields nearby.

His father, who was in bed, on being informed of what young Davis had threatened, dressed himself as quickly as possible and just as he reached the door heard the explosion a few rods away.

Hurrying to the spot all that could be found was a large hole in the ground. The trees and bushes near were found to be covered with flesh, and at a distance and in different directions both legs, one arm and the head were found.

The head was found at a distance of about 500 feet, going nearly 300 feet before striking the ground the first time and bounding nearly a dozen times in the other 200 feet.

IN AID OF CHILDREN.

Annual Convention of the Boys' and Girls' Home Association.

St. Louis, Dec. 12.—The seventh annual convention of the Boys and Girl's Home & Employment association of the United States and Canada was called to order by President Alexander Hogeland in Memorial hall on Locust street.

After a brief prayer service, Mayor Walbridge made an address of welcome and President Alexander Hogeland of Louisville, Ky., responded. Then the discussions of the questions prepared for the consideration of the convention was begun.

The convention will remain in session for two days. Over 10,000 calls and invitations have been issued. Twenty eight states and eleven cities have appointed delegates.

President Hogeland presented the text of a bill prepared for action by state legislatures for the promotion of state industrial farms which shall provide for the education and improvement of youth while having no feature of enforced servitude.

Committees were appointed on legislation and to enlarge the association's influence.

GREAT STREET RAILROAD.

An Enormous System Organizing for Pittsburg and Vicinity.

Pittsburg, Dec. 12.—The details of the biggest street railway consolidation ever effected in this state have been completed.

The new system, under the name of the Second Avenue Traction company, will be in operation by January 1, and has a paid in capital of $5,000,000. There are four branches with a total of 60 miles of track.

The main line extends from Market street, Pittsburg to McKeesport, a distance of ten and a half miles. This distance will be traveled in 45 minutes, and the fare will be 20 cents.

A power house of 22,000 horse power is now nearing completion at Glenwood. On the line the company has purchased a large farm, which will at once be changed to a park. James D. Callery is president of the new company.

May Pay a Dividend.

Boston, Dec. 12.—Judge Putnam, in the United States circuit court has granted permission to Receiver Sullivan of the American Loan & Investment company a dividend of ten per cent. The company owes Massachusetts shareholders $250,000.

Last of the Chili Indemnity.

Washington, Dec. 12.—James Quigley, one of the Baltimore sailors assailed in Valparaiso has received $1,000 as his share of the indemnity, making the last of the payments.

Fatally Wounded by Robbers

Bellaire, O., Dec. 12.—Masked men crushed the skull of station agent John Hock and robbed the Cincinnati & Dayton railroad office at Woodsfield of $700. Hock will die.

Insurance Rates Increased.

Topeka, Kan., Dec. 12.—The fire insurance rate on Kansas farm property has been advanced 20 per cent and the policy holders are making a vigorous protest.

England's New Coal Station.

Madrid, Dec. 12.—Morocco has ceded the island of Peregil to Great Britain for a coaling station.

FIGHTING FOR LIFE.

A Suffering Woman Testifies.

Mrs. Henrietta Burton, of Janvier, N. J., writes: For a long time I suffered from a disordered stomach. My appetite was gone and what little I ate distressed me terribly. My health failed rapidly. I became very weak and feared I should never be well. After reading your "Guide to Health," I was encouraged to try Munyon's Dyspepsia Cure. Its action was so prompt that I soon felt like a new woman, and am now completely cured."

MUNYON'S STOMACH AND DYSPEPSIA CURE cures all forms of indigestion and stomach troubles such as constipation, rising of food, distress after eating, bloating of the stomach, palpitation of the heart, shortness of breath, and all affections of the heart caused by indigestion. It soothes, heals and invigorates stomachs that have been weakened by over-eating, or where the lining of the stomach has been impaired by physic and injurious medicines. Price 25 cents.

Munyon's Homœopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

RIGHTS OF CAPITAL.

MAY A MAN CONDUCT HIS BUSINESS AS HE PLEASES?

Labor Commissioner Carroll D. Wright's Thesis Upon the Labor Question—Capital and Labor Both Amenable to the Laws of the People.

Labor Commissioner Carroll D. Wright in the Forum, says:

The great employer of to-day, when asked to make some concessions to labor, or to arbitrate differences which have arisen between him and his employees, declares that in order to win success he must have complete control of his own affairs: and he asks, "Shall I not conduct my own business in my own way?" Under some circumstances the employee asks, "Have you the right to conduct your own business in your own way?"

Society has long since answered these questions in some important particulars. It says to the property owner, the manufacturer: "No property owner can do anything that will interfere with the rights and privileges of his neighbor, whether these rights and privileges come under the head of right to freedom from injury to property or the privelege of living without danger to health."

But the question, which is more far-reaching and which will inevitably be answered by society, relates to their material surroundings; and this question is: "Shall a man or corporation who does not, or is not able to conduct his or its affairs so as to avoid public disturbance, obstruction of trade, loss of wages, or the lowering of the standard of living, be free from the interference of society?"

All attempts of conciliation and arbitration, whether they work under the form of law through boards established by the State or by the mutual consent of the parties involved in an industrial dispute, emphatically declare that society has the right to interfere.

The stoppage of traffic, the hindrance of business, the general disruption of peaceful relations, the violence and crime which come logically in the train of an industrial dispute, are menaces to the welfare of society: and the State is in duty bound to do all in its power to prevent their recurrence. And, since the power which the State has comes from the people, it is bound to exercise that power for the good of all, even if the individual suffers as a consequence.

The enactments of the Interstate Commerce law, by which the Federal Government under certain circumstances, undertakes to regulate freight rates, is a clearly defined instance of Government interference to prevent the disturbance of trade. If it can interfere to prevent the disturbance of trade, can it interfere to prevent the disturbance of society? Cannot the State say to both labor and capital, "You must so conduct your affairs so as to leave people at peace?"

Labor would not contend so savagely against a reduction of wages under bad economic conditions if it felt morally certain that, with restored conditions its share of the profits, which it receives in the form of wages, would be restored.

It should be recognized that the man who works for wages has been taught to realize the conditions of a higher civilization, to appreciate, to understand, and to desire still greater mental, moral and social progress, and he now begins to comprehend that the labor question means simply the struggle for a higher standard of living. But, with all this, he finds that he still keeps the position of a wage-receiver in enterprises in which his skill as well as his hand is a necessity.

The answer (to labor questions) will not come through revolutionary changes, but by a recognition of the ever-increasing intelligence of the men involved in industry.

THE BELLOWS AT A SEANCE.

How Cold Drafts were Made to Order by a Bibulous Individual.

Mrs. Williams, the medium who was recently exposed in ridiculous fashion in Paris, evidently neglected one of her most successful schemes when giving exhibitions to the French people. When she was in New York she was looked upon as a marvelous medium by the faithful, and as one of the most skillful and inventive tricksters in the business by professors of legerdemain and other devotees of the science of making people's eyes deceive them.

A gentleman of wide reputation in business circles came dangerously near becoming a victim of Mrs. William's art. In speaking of it he says:

"The fault lay in the fact that she gave me the shivers too often. It is a very well known fact that the condition of the body has an important influence upon the imagination. It is pretty hard for any man to keep his wits about him when he is sitting in a half-darkened room, with his hands held out on either side of him by nervous, excited women, and all sorts of ghostly things going on in front of him.

"I do not shiver easily, but I discovered that I always shivered at these seances. I told Mrs. Williams that I always felt as though there was a draft of cold air on the back of my head. She replied, very composedly, that this draft was caused by the fluttering of the spirits as they moved about the room.

"On the second occasion, however, there was a strong element of whiskey in the draught, and without meaning to be hypercritical in any way, the scent of old rye was too much for my credulity. I took my son with me after that whiskey experience, and we discovered the reason of the chills.

"Mrs. Williams had a confederate in the person of a quiet and dexterous young man, who carried a well-greased pair of bellows. He wore felt slippers, and it was his duty to sneak around behind the row of chairs, where the inquirers sat holding one another's hands, with his bellows.

"He filled the bellows with cold air, at an open window in another room, and then gently puffed a draft down behind the necks of the seekers after truth. Take any man, put him in a dark room, string his nerves up to a high tension, and then blow a draft of cold air down the back of his neck, and it will do more to convince him that there are spirits about than anything else in the world. Nobody could hear the young man as he moved around back of the chairs, but one night he was peering down, in a near-sighted way, to locate my collar, and as he had taken a drink of whiskey before beginning his work, his presence was revealed to me. This was a trick that was worth all the wigs and tights that Mrs. Williams came to grief over in France."

WHAT AN OLD 'GATOR CAN DO.

A Florida Man's Experience with a Boat Painted Red.

Two years ago, during orange-packing time, not wishing to spare one of the men from work to go to town every day for mail, I made a small cypress boat not more than ten feet long. It was so light and easy going that I could cover the distance of one mile in nine minutes. After I had the boat finished I painted it red—"a strong, bright red," as the Dutchman said. Just as I was starting to town one day, Dr. Whitfield of Grand Rapids, S. D., who was seeking health by hunting 'gators, told me that a whopping big alligator had recently made a bed in the weeds on Shaw's grove near an old wharf.

"He's a whopper," said the Doctor, "and you watch out and report."

When I approached the place I went about 40 feet from the shore. I soon saw the monster, an ugly-looking fellow. He was about four feet above the water, partly hidden in the weeds. I noticed a slight motion as I passed, so I concluded to return, in hopes of seeing him slide into the water, as they usually do, and thus secure his dimensions. But I was greatly surprised to see the monster rise and plunge in the water like a man taking a header. It was an unusual performance. I had heard of such a thing, but in my ten years' residence on the lake this was the first plunge I ever really saw. This, together with his immense size, warned me that I had encountered a dangerous enemy.

He struck the water about 25 feet from the boat. As he passed under it, I felt and heard his rough scale-like hide rub on the keel. I thought my time had come; all the blood in my body rushed to my heart and it beat against my ribs as though it would come out. He came up about 25 feet on the other side and turned toward the boat. I knew he was mad and that he was determined to get at me. He came toward the boat with his jaws open at such speed that if he had struck it it would have gone to pieces. Death, a horrible death, was staring me in the face, and no help at hand. There were some people on the opposite shore watching the battle, but they had no boat, and if they had, could not reach me in time to be of any service.

I realized that I must keep cool if I would win the fight. As he came near the boat, I pulled on my off oar with all my might. This swung the boat around so we passed each other side by side. He was going at such speed that he went 15 or 20 feet before he turned, and then he had made a large circle, lashing the water into a foam. I tried to get away from him, but he was between the boat and the shore, and it would be folly to push toward the middle of the lake. He was disappointed, mad, furious, and came for the canoe with renewed vigor.

I again pulled on my off oar, and the other oar slipped from its lock and slid into the lake. There was no time to be lost in trying to recover it, for in another instant the battle would be won, man or 'gator. Quick as lightning I raised the remaining oar and brought it down with all my power, aiming for his eyes. It fell short of the mark, but struck him on the end of his nose. He spurted blood and hesitated. That was fatal to him, for the next instant I struck him across the eyes. He stopped and commenced sinking, and another blow sent him out of sight.

The spot was watched for some days, and at last he was found sunning himself in his old bed, when he was shot. He measured fourteen feet and was thought to be 80 years old. The old alligator hunters said he attacked the boat because it was red.

PRAY OR GO TO JAIL.

The Alternative a Williamsburg Justice Gives a Wife Beater.

Andrew Hertzel, a German 40 years old, who is employed in a Williamsburg slaughter house was charged by his wife with assault. Hertzel was about to be sentenced to the penitentiary for six months when the woman pleaded for mercy for the sake of her four small children.

After eyeing Hertzel for fully a minute Justice Watson called the Rev. Henry Orne, a clergyman who attends court every day and holds services there every Sunday afternoon, to the bar.

"What shall I do with Hertzel?" the Justice asked of the minister.

"I don't know, I am sure," said Mr. Orne. "The children will suffer, I suppose."

"That's it," exclaimed Justice Watson. "I don't consider the woman. It's the children I'm worried about."

Then looking at Hertzel the Justice said:

"Look here, Hertzel, I am going to let you go. This minister here, Mr. Orne, is going to hold divine services in this court room to-morrow afternoon. You come at four o'clock and report to him. Come next Sunday the same way and keep on coming as long as the services are held. Report to the minister every Sunday, and he will let me know. If you fail to attend on one Sunday, he will let me know too, and I will take these papers and send you to the penitentiary for six months. Mark what I tell you. Come every Sunday and bring your wife with you."

Hertzel was paroled in the custody of the minister, and as they turned away from the bar Justice Watson called to Hertzel:

"When you come here to church you want to pray long and earnestly and sincerely, because, otherwise, I don't thing there is much hope for you. There is a great efficacy in prayers, of which we have many instances in Dutchtown."

Stealing His Own Property.

A reckless man left an apple in a bag on his desk in a room where several people sit. An office boy peeped into the bag and hovered longingly around it, finally bringing another boy around to share the temptation, and asking if anybody owned the apple. And then, assured that the apple belonged to nobody in the world, promptly fell.

There seems to be something in the theory that crime, like misery, loves company, for the youngster divided the apple with the other boy, making him a party to the theft.

Not content with this, he placed a piece of coal in the paper, closed the top and replaced the bag on the desk. The rightful owner of the apple came in a minute later, and seeing the office boy and the bag containing the apple, as he supposed, he picked up the latter and held it out.

"Here's an apple I saved for you," he said, and he handed over the bag to the boy.

Honesty is the—but everybody knows what it is. And that office boy looked truly conscience stricken that he had divided the apple when he might have had it all!

AN INCIDENT OF FAIR OAKS.

A Confederate Father and Son Stricken in Battle Attended by a Union Captain.

"If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink," is a text which found many a fulfilment during our late war—on both sides.

The following example is quoted from the "History of the 106th Pennsylvania Regiment," and the occurrence took place after the battle of Fair Oaks.

During the day Adjutant Pleis asked Captain Ford to take a walk with him over the field. They had not gone far however, before the adjutant said:

"I cannot stand this; it makes me sick to see such terrible sights.

The dead lay piled on top of each other just as they had fallen, all mangled and torn, while the groans of the wounded and dying was agonizing to hear.

So the adjutant turned back; but the captain kept on, and soon came to an old man sitting up against a tree, while across his lap lay a young lad, whose fine features, pale face and light, waving hair would readily have been taken for a young girl's.

Addressing the old man, the captain inquired his regiment.

"Hampton Legion," he replied.

Being asked where he was wounded, he unbuttoned his coat and displayed an ugly wound in his right arm.

The captain asked the lad what regiment he belonged to, and he replied, "Hampton Legion."

"Then you know each other?"

"Yes, he's my boy," said the old man; "he fell, badly wounded in the leg, and I came to help him and was hit myself. I have tied his wound up as well as I can, but we have both lost so much blood that I'm afraid we can't stand it much longer."

He then told how he had dragged his boy to the tree, taken off his own shirt and torn it into strips, tied up the wound as well as he could, and then had sat down, with the boy's head in his lap, waiting to be taken to the hospital.

The captain explained that we had our own wounded to look after first, and as soon as possible they would receive attention.

He then made his way back to the hospital and related the circumstances to our surgeon, who gave him a stimulant to take to them. Thence he went to the pump, but here a guard was placed to prevent any but surgeons and nurses from taking water. At first they would not let Captain Ford have any, but he said:

"I want this for a Confederate; for a father and son lying out in the woods, both badly wounded and perhaps dying."

The guard immediately filled the cup; and accompanied by a nurse, whom the surgeon had etailed to go with him, the captain returned to the woods.

Raising the boy, he gave him half the contents of the cup, and the old man the remainder. The father thanked him and said: "Captain, you have saved our lives. I did not think a Yankee could be so kind.

An Audience of Five.

Matt Snyder, an actor and manager of long experience, tells of opening one night in a new town where the members of the company were compelled to fight their way through a terrific storm in order to reach the theatre.

When it became time to begin the performance the audience consisted of five men huddled together in the parquet.

The manager said he would give a performance, even if there wasn't a soul in the house. The play was a five act melodrama.

When the curtain went up the five men applauded loudly, and the first act was given with as much care as if the house had been jammed.

After the first act Mr. Snyder slipped on his overcoat and went into the bar, which was in the theatre building. There he found the audience taking five drinks. The audience complimented him on the play and promised to stay it out.

At the beginning of the second act the company could not at first discover the audience. The five men were seated in a line in the back row of the top gallery, from which distant eminence they continued to applaud.

After that act they went out again and when they came back they scattered. One sat in the gallery, another at the extreme left of the house, another at the right, the fourth was in the centre of the parquet and the fifth was in the rear of the family circle.

During the fourth act they sat in single file along the middle aisle from front to back.

When the fifth act was begun they were in the boxes, each man having a box to himself, and the performance closed in triumph.—Chicago Record.

RUSSIA'S YOUNG EMPEROR.

He Was Wholly Overcome by the Thought of the Weighty Task Before Him.

The story of the sudden evolution of an Emperor which was brought back to London by the witnesses of the Russian pageants of grief and joy is one of the strangest in the personal histories of great rulers. The members of the British court and the English correspondents who followed the funeral party from Livadia to St. Petersburg saw and heard some interesting things which it was not possible to describe in the despatches which were sent home.

It is learned that for several days after the death of Alexander III. the members of the Russian court were reduced to despair and distraction by the behavior of the young Czar. He was completely unnerved, not so much by grief at his father's death as by his sudden encounter with the vast responsibilities of the position. He became for some days a shrinking, cowering weakling. It was almost impossible to coax or spur him into the exercise of any of his imperial functions. Those whose duty it was to prompt him regarding the proper state and other formalities were at their wits' end, and the situation caused the greatest alarm in the court. When some simple course was urged upon him the young Emperor shrank back and begged that he be let alone. He even whimpered when the necessity of action was pressed upon him as imperative. He more than once burst into tears, and acted more like a terrified child than the ruler of an empire.

This continued for several days after the arrival of the Prince of Wales, and it was to him that the officials of the Russian court finally appealed. The Prince was equal to the occasion, and in the last three weeks he has done more for England than the whole British foreign office would be able to accomplish in a generation. He remained constantly by the young Emperor's side. He put heart and courage into him. Before the Czar reached St. Petersburg he was transformed. He not only became a man, but began to acquire some of the dignity of his rank. He soon astonished his advisers by displaying a genuinely intelligent comprehension of public affairs, with sound if not brilliant powers of judgment.

When the wedding day arrived he had developed an originality and independence of opinion which further amazed those around him. In other words, the attack of blue funk which at first caused the gravest fears for his capacity to govern has been completely conquered.

WASHINGTON'S BODY GUARD.

A Colored Man Who Has Been That for 53 Years and is Still.

Visitors to Mount Vernon and the tomb of Washington will remember the gray headed colored man who watches in front of the iron grating behind which repose the remains of the first Presidene of the country, together with those of his wife. The name of this colored man is Edmond Parker. He was born a slave of John Augustus Washington, and for 53 years he has been one of the fixtures of the Washington homestead. Except for about two years service in the Union army, this man since 1841 has been a constant and faithful servant about the spot which is dear to the heart of every American.

After the Mount Vernon estate passed into the hands of the present owners, Parker was designated to watch the tomb and during all these years he has kept this vigil as faithfully as the Virgins guarded the sacred fires on the altar of Vesta.

He has watched the coming and going of the thousands of visitors to this patriotic shrine, and he remembers with distinctness many notable incidents which have there occurred, including visits of noted personages, both native and foreign among them the Emperor of Brazil, the Prince of Wales, the Princess Louise, the Grand Duke Alexis of Russia, Charles Stewart Parnell, the Princess Eulalia of Spain, and also the various representatives of foreign countries who have from time to time been stationed at Washington. With much laquacity in native Virginia darkey dialect he tells of these events, and delights to recall how he dug the hole where the Emperor of Brazil planted a tree near the tomb.

Recently while at Mount Vernon, the writer asked Parker if he remembered the visits of any of the Presidents since the war, and he said he did not remember to have ever seen General Grant there, but did remember that Mrs. Grant and her daughter had been there on more than one occasion, and each time took much interest in the surroundings, always having a pleasant word for him.

President Hayes and wife were there several times, and once, about the time of the annual meeting of the ladies' association, they remained all night. He remembered to have seen Mr. Arthur there once, at least, and agrees with every one who speaks concerning him that no more elegant gentleman ever paid a visit there.

Speaking of Mr. Cleveland, he said he visited there twice during his first term, and each time stood with uncovered head in presence of the exposed marble sarcophagus of Sherman, Sheridan, Logan, Butler, Banks and Burnside of the Union army, Gens. Lee, Joe Johnston Gordon, and Buckner of the Confederate cause, he recalls as visitors.—Washington Post.

A BABY'S BODY FOUND.

An Italian Dug It Out of a Scotch Plains Manure Heap.

The body of a female child, apparently about 14 days old, was found yesterday on the premises of Vincent J. Sissor, formerly hotel keeper at Scotch Plains, by an Italian known as Jim, who was engaged in taking away manure from the stable. He at once notified John J. Cook who in turn called on Dr. Westcott.

Dr. Westcott and Judge Moore made an examination of the body and notified County Physician O'Reilley, who ordered Morgue-Keeper Casey to take charge of the body and notified the coroner to hold an inquest.

Mr. Sissor sold his business some time ago to a Frenchman, and took his departure for Yonkers. He took with him a young couple whose baby this is supposed to be.

Judge Moore telegraphed to Yonkers to hold the youthful couple for a hearing.

Coroner Horning with a jury viewed the body this afternoon and adjourned to Monday afternoon at 2, in the City Court room.

35 CENTS

All Around.

Have you seen those handsome pictures in our window? No! Well, that's too bad. They are there for inspection, and for one week only we will sacrifice them at the low figure of 35c. These pictures are nicely framed and glass fronts. You pay 50c for the same picture in New York. They are an ornament to any one's room and to get the choice ones we would advise you to select yours before they are all gone. This price will positively be for one week only. The size of these pictures is 14x22.

China Silk Sale.

To the many that were disappointed in not being able to get any of that 35c China silk which we were selling for 25, we will inform them that we have just received 10 pieces more and will continue the sale for another week at the same price, 25c. It takes us to introduce bargains, and we will see that the public is pleased.

REMARKABLE CURES

Of Recent Date.

A Statement from Ex-Mayor John Corson, Esq., of Clinton, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

I acknowledge with the utmost pleasure the wonderful cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in my case.

I had been a sufferer from piles, which gave me constant pain and distress, during twenty long years, attended with frequent loss of blood and with great and painful protrusion of the pile tumors and rectum whenever my bowels moved.

I tried constantly to get relief from my sufferings, but to no purpose until Mr. Bryan, a friend of mine, who had been cured by Dr. Lighthill of the same trouble, recommended him to me, and he effected a complete and radical cure in my case also, and earned my lifelong gratitude.

JOHN CORSON.

THE CASE OF MR PETER G. EYCK, OF BISSELL, HUNTERDON CO., N. J.

Dr. Lighthill Effects a Complete Cure Where Ten Physicians Had Failed.

TO THE SICK, SUFFERING AND AFFLICTED:

For many years past I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. Every movement of the bowels was attended with loss of blood and with intense pain which lasted for hours and sometimes all day. My condition was aggravated by a prolapse of the rectum, which greatly increased my suffering and sometimes gave me most agonizing pains.

So great was my distress and so bad my condition that I sold my farm, not being able to work it any longer. At one time the protruding pile tumors became so highly inflamed and swollen that they could not be replaced, and I had to go to bed, applying hot poultices for three months before I could get relief.

I had been under the treatment of ten different physicians, some of New York City, Easton, Washington and elsewhere, without any benefit whatever, and had given up my case as hopeless when, luckily for me, I heard of Dr. Lighthill's skill and success in such cases, and went to him for treatment, with the happy result that he effected a radical and permanent cure in less than four weeks's time; and I am glad to say that the entire treatment gave me neither pain nor distress.

I consider my cure perfectly wonderful, and so do all my friends and neighbors. I am confident that there is no case of piles which Dr. Lighthill cannot cure.

Which?

"Uncle Toby," a man for whom Bartlett's Creek has more attractions than the hot and grassy cotton field, not long ago took a day off in pursuit of his favorite amusement. He baited his hook, and long and patiently sat upon the bank of the stream, vainly waiting for a bite. At last, under the combined influence of the warmth of the day and the sluggish movement of the stream, Uncle Toby fell asleep.

Eternal vigilance is the price of trout, and while our weary angler slept an enormous fish took the bait and pulled him into the creek.

Of course this awakened the old man, and he was overheard to inquire, as he floundered about in the water:

"For de Lord's sake, Toby, am dis nigger a-fishin' or am dis fish a-niggerin'?"

Anyone who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cents bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. AGITATOR BURNS.

THE GREATEST OF ENGLISH LABOR LEADERS.

From Prison to Parliament. The Acknowledgements of a Self-Made Man. His Indomitable Perseverence and Untiring Energy.

Mr. John Burns is probably the most amazing man in all London. Ten years ago he was regarded as a dangerous agitator and demagogue and was prosecuted and imprisoned for sedition and riot, and was a man without recognition among men of standing or influence among the working people.

To-day Burns is the uncrowned king of the London working populace, a member of Parliament and of the London County Council, hobnobs with the statesmen and leading men of Great Britain, and is one of the most influential men in England. His achievements are solely the result of his indomitable perseverance and his tireless energy. In the strictest sense of the word, he is a self-made man, and, for that matter, self-educated.

Burns comes of Scotch blood, but was born in Battersea, London. Before he became known he worked as an engineer in a Battersea factory for 30s. a week. At night he used to read works on Socialism, the French Revolution, and the like. Then he began to harangue the street crowds of London every Sunday. He was always conspicuous when any strikes occurred and was almost the most fiery and incendiary of the labor orators.

In 1885 he had become well known enough to stand for Parliament. Andrew Carnegie was among the contributors to his campaign fund. He was defeated, however, and the next year was arrested for his bitter and seditious speeches during the West End riots, in which $50,000 worth of property was destroyed in an hour. The jury disagreed, however, and Burns got off. He was again arrested in a month or so for offering to "dynamite Balfour to heaven." Balfour was then Chief Secretary for Ireland. The evidence against Burns was insufficient and he was acquitted.

JOHN BURNS.

In the Trafalgar Square riots of 1887 Burns was a conspicuous leader and was sent to prison for three months for inciting to riot. Nothing could close his mouth, however, and he kept on speaking and haranguing the street crowds until he became one of the best known men of London.

When the new London County Council was organized Burns was elected a member from Battersea. His industry in this capacity was something prodigious. In three years he attended six hundred council meetings, and, besides that, was busy all day looking after the improvements and reforms which he succeeded in putting through.

It is due to Burns that his district of Battersea has become the model residential district for the working people of London. He has filled it with parks and given it clean streets and sanitary conditions and improved it in every way. Besides all this, he got the eight hour day established as the legal limit in all public works of London, and abolished contracting and subleting, and had passed a number of laws protecting workingmen, giving them better conditions under which to work and improving their condition generally.

He lives in an exceedingly modest way in Battersea, where he and his wife, who is almost as gifted as himself, occupy a couple of rooms in a little row of brick houses.

He has a fine library, which he laughingly says mostly represents the days he has gone hungry. That is to say, he used to go without his dinner in order to get money to buy the books he wanted.

And so he once remarked that such and such a book represented a pair of boots, another a hat that he needed, and so on down the list.

When the Messiah Comes.

Great diversity of opinion prevails among Hebrew doctors respecting the time of the Messiah's anticipated coming. Many believe the event to be delayed on account of the sins of the people of Israel.

A most unique idea was put forth by Rabbi Machir, who lived at the end of the fourteenth century.

He predicted that numerous strange signs and prodigies are to precede the great event. Then he declared that when Israel shall be gathered from all nations and brought to the land of their forefathers, and the Messiah shall have rebuilt the city, He will celebrate at a gracious reception, at which every one will be seated at a golden table.

He will entertain himself and company at this feast with a great battle between Behemoth and Leviathan, Himself stepping forward with a great sword and slaying them both. Many still look forward to some such occurrence.

Lawyers Called Down.

Justice Gaynor of Brooklyn recently delivered a well deserved reprimand to one of the so-called attorneys in a divorce case. The Judge said:

"The motion to set aside the summons in this action, is granted. The time when the action is to be tried is not stated; neither is the name of the court mentioned in which such action is to be brought. Both the original papers and the copy are so disfigured and slovenly that no one could surmise them to be a grave process of the court. The copy of the complaint is no better. Not even the name of the plaintiff's attorney or his address is decipherable on either the summons or complaint. These papers are unworthy of the learned and honorable profession of the law, which I still trust is not to degenerate into a mere slovenly business."

THEY SCUTTLED A SHIP

Sank the Mysterious Star for the Insurance.

Captain Reed, of the Whaling Bark Petrel, Relates a Queer Tale of Marine Fraud—Chased Deserters Nearly Ten Miles—Evidently Making for the Cape Verde Islands.

New Bedford, Mass., Dec. 12.—Captain E. J. Reed, of the whaling bark Petrel, of this port, in a letter just received by his wife in this city discloses the incidents connected with the destruction of a noble and substantial vessel by her crew.

By a fortunate combination of circumstances he secured before the vessel sank evidence which convinces him that the sinking of the craft was carefully planned and premeditated.

In September the bark Petrel, which left this port in October, 1893, was in St. Michael's. Later she left on a whaling cruise. On October 22, in latitude 17:25 north and longitude 26:46, and in the vicinity of the Cape Verde Islands, Captain Reed saw the boats of a bark some distance away from his vessel lowered. His first though was that she was a whaler, and he ordered the boats on his own vessel lowered.

He took after the boats of the other vessel, and almost immediately their actions aroused his suspicion.

The men appeared to be trying to baffle and elude him. He gave chase and ordered his men to work at the oars as if their lives depended upon their exertions. He followed the other boats for nearly ten miles, and then became convinced that it was useless to attempt to overtake them.

He was satisfied that something was wrong aboard the vessel, and as soon as possible returned and went aboard the deserted bark.

It was clearly to be seen that she had been scuttled and in a very short time would sink. Captain Reed at once secured such evidence as he could of the crime. He found the vessel to be the Mysterious Star, of Liverpool. His first thought was of the ship's log and papers.

The crew, before deserting the craft, had taken nearly everything in the nature of document sand records. From what papers were left behind Captain Reed learned that the bark was bound for a Chilean port. He also ascertained that she was heavily insured.

Everything indicated that the arrangements for the bark's destruction had been made without haste and in such a manner that but for the appearance of Captain Reed's vessel the true fate of the craft would never have been known.

The story of the crew would no doubt have been accepted by the insurance companies, as no flotsam would have remained to dispute their recital.

They had chosen a propitious time for the carrying out of their nefarious purpose, and there was nothing to hinder them from reaching the Cape Verd Islands in their boats without accident.

So deliberate had been their departure that they had placed fenders over the sides of the vessel to prevent injury to the boats when lowered and had run the ladder down the side. She sank shortly after Captain Reed left her.

The Mysterious Star was of 363 tons burden, and was surveyed in Belfast in 1892. She was an able and seaworthy vessel, and was built in Sunderland, England, in 1867.

She was 121:9 feet in length, was 28:5 feet in breadth, and 17:5 feet deep. Her hailing port was Liverpool, and she was engaged by R. T. Telford.

CHINESE AGAIN DEFEATED.

The Japanese Put Them To Flight and Kill One Hundred.

London, Dec. 12.—A dispatch from Antong says that a Japanese division, on Monday, Dec. 10, defeated the Chinese near Kin-Kwa-Hu. The Chinese lost 100 killed and a large number wounded. The Japanese, whose loss was only 40 killed and wounded. They captured two banners, ten prisoners and a large number or rifles. Four thousand Chinese were engaged. The Chinese fled toward Tso-Hun-Kou.

Field Marshal Yamagata has started for home. A dispatch from Hiroshima says Field Marshal Oyama is still at Port Arthur. The Chinese are concentrating at Foo-Chow and a Japanese brigade under General Noge is marching to attack them.

Ten Mad Dog Victims.

Columbus, O., Dec. 12.—The excitement at Mount Vernon over mad dog scare continues. The persons bitten are: Earl Davis, Ed. Singer, Dr. Chase, George Brown, Mrs. William Rhoden, Fleming Jackson, Wille Wolfe, Columbus Mitchell, John Bunnell, and James Park. A dozen other persons were attcked, escaping with torn clothes. If it is concluded by the state board of health that the dog had rabies, the city will arrange to send all the persons bitten to New York.

Butchered Himself and Family.

Bethany, Mo., Dec. 12.—Dave Spragg, a farmer living eight miles north of this city, killed his wife and two children and then cut his own throat just after dinner. Two other children were horribly cut, but are still alive. The crime was committed through jealousy.

Will Restrain the Trust.

Waco, Tex., Dec. 12.—The state authorities will assume new tactics in its case against the Standard Oil trust. It is learned that an injunction suit against them to restrain them from doing business in Texas will be filed.

How the New Railroad Bill Passed the House.

Congressman Cannon of Illinois Delivered the Last Address Against It, While Springer Became Its Protector—Laughter in the Senate over Morrill's Attack on Peffer.

Washington, Dec. 12.—The time of the senate was taken up in speeches. No bills of importance were acted upon. In the house the railroad pooling bill was passed.

The venerable senator from Vermont, Mr. Morrill, entertained the senate with one of his witty speeches.

It was on the subject of populistic panaceas for financial troubles and on his motion all the bills introduced as such measures of universal prosperity and happiness were postponed indefinitely.

Other speeches were made by Mr. Berry (dem., Ark.) on the bill to organize the territory of Indianola, and by Mr. Dolph (rep., Ore.) in support of the Nicaraguan bill. Mr. Sherman (rep., O.) expressed his general approval of the bill, but said he was not satisfied with its provisions as to the compensation of the canal company which compensation, in his opinion, should be confined to the money actually expended by the company. The bill went over.

A message was presented from the president on the subject of the alleged Armenian atrocities in answer to the resolution asking him for information. He says:

"In response to said resolution I beg leave to inform the senate that I have no information concerning cruelties committed upon Armenians in Turkey, or upon persons because of their being Christians except such information as has been derived from newspaper reports, and statements emanating from the Turkish government denying such cruelties and two telegraphic reports from our minister at Constantinople."

At the end of a four hours' consideration of the bill to permit railroads to pool their earnings, the house passed the measure by a vote of 166 yeas to 110 nays. The closing speech against the bill was made by Cannon (rep., Ill.), while Mr. Sibley (dem., Pa.), Harter (dem., O.), and Black and Springer (dems., Ill.), advocated its passage. An effort was made by Dingley (rep., Me.) to secure additional debate upon the bill under the five minute rule, but Patterson (dem., Tenn.), in charge of the bill insisted upon his demand for the previous question, at 3 o'clock, in accordance with the notice he gave Saturday.

The vote seconding the demand—174 yeas to 100 nays—was something of a surprise even to the friends of the bill who did not expect more than 25 or 30 majority for the motion.

The opponents of the bill exhausted every parliamentary device to prevent the passage of it, but as they could muster no more than 111 votes at any time, they accomplished nothing. The substitute for the bill proposed by Cooper (dem., Fla.), giving the interstate commerce commission final jurisdiction over all questions relating to the operations of pooling arrangements, cutting off the right of appeal by the railroads from the decisions of the commission, was rejected—yeas 109; nays 175. The house also refused to recommit the bill, either with or without instructions.

Prior to the taking up of the pooling bill, Breckinridge (dem., Ky.) reported the urgent deficiency bill for the current fiscal year. A resolution was adopted ordering the printing of 20,000 copies of the report of the secretary of the treasury for the use of the house.

A resolution was also agreed to, offered by Mr. Dingley (rep., Me.), calling upon the secretary of the treasury for information as to the workings of the regulations prepared by the Paris tribunal of arbitration for the preservation of the Behring Sea seal herd and the cast of carrying them into effect. In connection with this Mr. Dingley presented a letter from Mr. H. W. Elliott, formerly of the Smithsonian institution, showing the necessity for making public the information sought.

An hour was also spent in further inconclusive discussion of the bill to provide a retired list for the officers of the revenue cutter service and thus promote its efficiency, three-fourths of which time was occupied by Mr. Clark (dem., Mo.), by a speech upon the heroism of the soldiers of the border states during the late war.

HER SIDE OF THE STORY

Turkey Gives Details of the Alleged Outrages.

Great Britain's Demand That She Be Allowed To Investigate the Outrages on Her Own Account, Hastily Allowed by the Sultan—Other Nations Will Support the Demand.

London, Dec. 12.—It is said that as the result of a conference between Lord Rosebery and Lord Kimberley yesterday, the British government demanded absolute freedom in the matter of reporting upon the situation in Armenia, and that the demand was at once conceded. Great Britain will immediately send to Armenia a special delegate, who will be selected by Sir Philip Wodehouse Currie, the British ambassador at Constantinople.

Washington, Dec. 12.—The Turkish legation has received the following communication:

"The Armenian agitators that made their appearance in the steep mountains of Talouri situated between Sassoun, in the southeast of Moush (Vilayet of Bitlis) and the district of Call, of the Mutessarifat of Guendji, combined their forces together at the instigation of a certain Hampartzoun, who, under the assumed name of Mourat, was already giving trouble those regions.

"This Hampartzoun, born in Hadjin (Vilayet of Adana), after having for eight years studied medicine in the Civil Medical school of Constantinople and participated in the disorders of Coum-Capon, fled to Athens and thence to Genoa. He afterward went disguised, and again under an assumed name, by way of Alexandretta, from Diarbekir to the neighborhood of Bitlis, and he began then and there his seditious agitation, together with five other individuals.

"Hampartzoun was giving positive assurances to credulous people that he was a foreign agent, backed by all the European powers in his plans to upset the Turkish authorities. He succeeded thus in gaining to his criminal ends the Armenians of the villages of Siner, Simal, Gulli-Guzat, Ahi, Hedenk, Sinank, Chekind, Elffard, Moussone, Etek, Akdjesser, as well as those of the small borough of Tolouri, comprising four districts.

"Now these insurgents, under the command of Hampartzoun, abandoning, toward the latter part of July last, their respective villages, and after having placed in inaccessible spots their wives, children and belongings and secured the co-operation of other armed insurgents that came from the valley of Moush and from the Cazas of Call and Selvan, assembled together, numbering more than 3,000, at a place called Endouk-Dagh. Five or six hundred of them decided to fall upon Moush. They began by attacking the tribe of Delikau, on the Mount Courlink, in the south of Moush, killed a few of them and robbed them of their belongings.

"All Mussulmans that fell in their and murdered in a most horrible fashhands were insulted in their religion. The regular troops of the neighborhood of Moush were also attacked by these insurgents, who, however, did not dare to attack Moush itself, owing to the strong military forces of the town.

"These rebels together with those assembled at Endouk-Dagh, organized their separate bands, which assailed ferociously the tribes close at hand, committing horrible crimes and depredations. They burned alive the nephew of Eumer Agha and assaulted and murdered Mussulman women of three or four houses of the village of Gulli-Guzat.

"They also tortured many Mussulmans, forcing them to kiss the cross, putting their eyes out, cutting their ears and submitting them to the most horrible indignities.

"The same rebels, at the beginning of August last, attacked the tribes of Favinar, of Bekiran and of Badikan, committing crimes similar to the above.

"The insurgents of the villages of Enlighemuk and of Yermouch, situtaed in the canton of Djenan, attacked in their turn the Kurds living there, as also the villages of Kaisser and of Tchatchat.

"Toward the end of August last the Armenians were attacking the Kurds in the neighborhood of Moush, burning three or four villages, including Gulli-Guzat.

"In relation to the agitators of Taouri, numbering more than 3,000, after having brought consternation and death among Mussulmans and Christians alike, they refused to surrender, and continued their criminal proceedings. Regular troops were sent to the spot to put down their rebellion.

"The chief Hampartzoun fled to a high mountain with eleven of his associates in crime. He was captured alive, not, however, without his killing two soldiers and wounding six. By the end of August last all insurgents' bands were dispersed.

"Women, children and invalids were treated with consideration and according to the dictates of Islam and humanity. The insurgents who fell were those who refused to surrender, and preferred to fight the lawful authorities of their country. The isurgents who were captured will be punished according to the laws."

Vienna, Dec. 12.—Dispatches from Constantinople indicate that the Armenian question is likely to lead to the resignation of the Turkish ministry.

The sultan is greatly excited over the movement of the powers in the matter and awaits the result of the commission's inquiry with concern.

It is believed that Russia, France, Italy and possibly Austria will support Great Britain.

Secretary Carlisle's banking bill was laid before the house banking and currency committee and later was introduced in the house by Representative Springer (dem., Ill.)

VARNER'S BELLING.

"If you do not mind," said the pedagogue, "I will tell you about the last time I went belling, when we belled old Joe Varner; that is, if you have no objections."

Having received our assent he cleared his throat and, in the pompous manner becoming one of his calling and tastes, began.

"I am not superstitious—far from it. Ill would it become one to whom for so many years was intrusted the education of our township, and once even that of the whole county, to give credence to the foolish rumors of haunts and charms, or to the strange believes current among some in our valley concerning the conversation of cattle on All Halloween, or to any like ridiculous fancies. But yet there is one point of which I must confess some timidity—that is to passing the small log house which stands just at the foot of the first ridge on the road running to Macedonia, on the night of Nov. 29, or indeed, at almost any time after sunset. Not that I am afraid—far from it; but strange stories have been abroad for the past thirty years regarding the doings there after nightfall. The sound of fiddles, they say can be heard, and the clanging of cow bells, interspersed occasionally with the dull report of a gun. This the young folks declare is the ghost belling Joe Varner.

"I have never heard the ghosts bell Joe Varner—not that I believe they do, but I did bell him once myself, and hence what passes now as a mere superstition is to me the reminder of a painful reality, and each recurring rumor of strang noises heard on the Ridge road recalls my last serenading adventure.

"Thirty years ago, Joe Varner's place, as it is called, presented a far different picture to the eye than it does to-day. Then all was scrupulously clean. Not a stone on the chimney top was out of place; not an iota of daubing was fallen from between the logs, nor was the smallest surface left unwashed. The surrounding garden was as neatly kept. No weeds disturbed the almost painful effect of its tidiness.

"Joe was proud of his home, and well might he have been. For twenty years he had lived his lonely life there, done his own housework, cared for his own garden, and only varied the monotony of the days by occasionally working on a neighboring farm.

"He was a strange creature, tall and gaunt in appearance, taciturn and surly in manner, speaking a cross word more often than a kind one, doing his bad deeds in public and his good ones in private, for his natural pride would not allow him to parade the latter before his neighbors. Yet, with all, he was at heart a kind fellow, spoiled simply by the loneliness of his way of living, even as his own mongrel dog grew testy from a lack of companionship.

"Why Joe had never married was an enigma to our people. He was not a native of our county, but had simply appeared one day, bought his secluded piece of ground, built his house, and stayed: Twice, leaving no word behind him, he had gone away, remained a week, and then as quietly returned to resume again the even tenor of his life. His return on each occasion was marked by a fit of melancholy, which attracted the notice, but repelled the curiosity of his nearest neighbors. That he had visited his old home in an adjoining county was all that we could ever learn.

"It was just 30 years ago this coming November, that Varner went away for the third time since his settlement in our midst. One week passed, and several men betook themselves to his house to see him. He had not returned. Two weeks passed, and he was yet absent. Strange rumors were current as to the cause of this unaccountable delay.

"When the third week had reached its end he returned with a weazened face little woman, who had a thin head of gray hair, hard features and a most slovenly appearance. This new personage was introduced laconically, but with an evident touch of pride, as his wife.

"Just who the wife was and where from no one knew, but the fact of her arrival quickly spread over the township, and many odd stories were current as to when, where and why old Joe had encumbered himself with such a helpmate.

"But strange as all this seemed, there existed no reason why he should be exempt from being belled. A seranade he should have, and a grand affair it should be.

"Never before were such great preparations made for a belling as for the one which was set for the night following Varner's return. Old guns, rusty from disuse, sleighbells of monstrous size and horns and drums were made ready, while myself and six others hid in the vicinity of the house three fine oak planks and three heavy boxes, together with a large quantity of rosin.

"The great night came. We met, fully fifty of us, men and boys, at my father's barn, a few hours after the sun had set, and in a body started for the scene of our operations. It seems almost useless to tell you of the walk of two miles before we reached the Varner home. It was a clear, crisp November night. The road, hard beneath, stretched a well-defined white band, across the country before us, lit as it was by the light of a full moon just rising over the eastward ridges. The wind swept mournfully through the leafless trees, rattling the limbs and stirring up the fallen foliage below. An occasional rabbit darted from beneath the crooked snake fences and flitted shadow-like across the road into the shelter of the brush beyond, followed for a moment by a few shouts and stones from our party and then allowed to escape in peace into the woods. Indeed, it was just such a night as this.

"After a walk of some forty minutes we trudged over the last hill, rounded the last turn in the road and came to a halt a short distance from Varner's home, which lay nestling desolately in the woods. A few dim rays of light shone through the crevices in the closed blinds.

"Our little party silently stationed itself around the house. Each of the planks, the edges of which had already been thickly coated with rosin, was seized by two young men, and gently, after the manner of a violinist tuning his instrument, drawn over the upturned edges of one of the boxes, which had likewise been smeared with the same adhesive substance. Backward and forward went the rude bows, at first making a scarcely audible murmur and then uttering low and almost unearthly groans, which increased in volume as the fiddlers bent to their work. Such notes as we heard during the trial convinced us that when the crude instruments were played with full force they would without doubt give forth that undescribable sound that has well earned them the name 'horse-fiddle.' The guns were loaded, and all was in readiness for the opening of the great belling, the result of which, we believe, would be to bring Joe and his wife to the doorway bowing, and, perhaps, to cause them to ask us in to a feast of sweet cake and old cider.

"The signal was given, and forthwith arose the greatest din that has ever been heard in our county. The ancient muskets banging viciously, the bells ringing, the horns tooting and above all the melancholy wail of the horse fiddle, made a tumult that would shame that which we have just heard. The result was not as anticipated. The light inside died suddenly out, and the house assumed a deserted appearance.

"We kept to our work bravely. A half hour passed, and a few impatient cries of 'Bring out the bride,' arose above the din, giving evidence that lusty lungs were fast coming to the aid of wearied limbs.

" 'Bring her out. Fetch out Mrs. Varner, Joe,' we began to cry almost in unison.

"An hour passed, and not a sign of life had come from the interior of the lonely dwelling. The noise weakened in volume, the owners of the guns grew chary of wasting their powder, and at last, much to our chagrin, we were compelled to retire to the woods to hold a consultation.

A thin stream of smoke poured steadily from the mouth of the great stone chimney, and the sight of it suggested the execution of a plan resorted to only on the most desperate occasions—that of smoking out the occupants of the house.

"It was the work of but a few moments to obtain a heavy board suitable for the purpose, and for one of the young men to climb on the roof, taking it with him. He made his way noiselessly up to the peak, laid his burden across the top of the chimney, and then crouched low to await the denouement. The smoke ceased to escape.

"Surely, we argued, if any one was within, they would have been driven out, or at least some noise would have been made in their efforts to quench the flames.

"Then the young man on the roof noiselessly removed the cover from the chimney. A dense volume of smoke poured slowly upward, showing that the fire had done well the work required. From beneath the doorways we spied a few faint wreaths come circling vaguely out.

"A chill of dread passed over us. We wondered if any mishap had happened. People are not usually when wide awake willing to be suffocated in their own homes. But the question as to whether they were at home arose. Some of us thought not. But the light that we had seen burning on our first approach seemed to augur something. Some one was at home and something had happened within, we decided.

"In another instant four stalwart fellows, holding between them a heavy log, approached the door.

"One blow—it gave way; not a sound was heard inside. Another crash—and the heavy oak fell backward from its hinges. The smoke, released from its prison, poured out so densely as to almost drive the excited bellers from the doorway.

"One young man dashed boldly across the room, which passed as living room and kitchen, and in another instant the window was up, the shutters thrown open, and the wind whistled through, driving before it the heavy veil of smoke that hid the interior from view; and the moonlight streamed in. Then what a sight met our eyes!

"There, sitting in a great wooden rocking chair, his feet resting almost in the fire, his head fallen low upon his breast, his stern, hard features calmly set as if in sleep, sat he whom we had come to bell, dead.

"By his side, on the spotless table stood a candlestrick from which the candle had burned away, only a small bit of charred paper remaining to tell us that Joe had in all likelihood died before we had reached his home and that the last spark of the unattended light had died out just as we began the hideous turmoil outside the house.

"Clutched in the dead man's right hand was the explanation of his solitary life, as well as the grewsome ending of the great belling. It was a soiled piece of cheap, lined letter paper."

The school teacher ceased his narration, drew out his pocketbook, and after fumbling a moment in its recesses seized a small, soiled piece of paper, which he handed to Jones, who gazed at it curiously for a time, and then silently passed it to me.

This is what I read:

" DEER JOE: You an' I was never ment for one anudder.

"I knowed that three weeks after we got maried 40 years ago and that's why i run away with si tomson you was good to take me back them 2 other times i left this last time i thought i was gettin old an' you had been so fergivin' i had better spend my last days with you i cant stand the quiet country livin' an' am gone back to harrisburg they aint no one with me this time forgive me i gess you'll be better off without yor old wife.

SARAH."

THE TWO WENDELLS.

When Philips Rebuked Holmes for Intemperance and Frivolity.

A Boston correspondent writes of an interesting incident in the life of Holmes: Paul Morphy had come to Boston and set us all aflame about chess. We already had a flourishing chess club, of which Dr. Richardson was president, meeting in a large upper room on Washington street. We resolved to give Morphy a dinner. Never, I should think, since chess was invented, had quite so much homage been offered to any of its champions as was then bestowed on the young genius from New Orleans, nor ever so many celebrities assembled in his honor. Holmes was asked to preside, and assented joyfully. When he did a thing, he did it from his heart. There came to the dinner the president of Harvard University, the Chief-Justice of the State, Professor Agassiz, and a score of oehers hardly less famous and dignified. The scene of it was the Revere House, and the incident has passed permanently into history, because it seemed necessary to Wendell Phillips, then as ever an enthusiast in the cause of extreme temperance, to address a public rebuke to all these grave and reverend seniors. Their offence was not in paying a compliment to Morphy, but in dining at the Revere House, and allowing wine to be put on the table. The philippic did not deeply disturb Holmes. "Wendell," he said, "holds a brief for the fanatics." The two men each spoke of the other as "Wendell." They were cousins more or less near, and liked each other—it was more than liking—an affection on each side.

Palmer Cox's Queer People

Racing on a Bicycle.

The thousand and one pranks, comic adventures and mischievous escapades that Palmer Cox in his flights of imagination, takes his Queer People through are wonderful in their variety, and most charming in their likeness to the exuberant fancies of childhood; and yet, in every thrilling story of adventure and exciting incident, the sweet sunshine of kindness is always present, and, while captivated with the fun unconsciously the heart of youth is inspired with pure and good inpulses. Of all the Juvenile Books yet issued, there is more rollicking, jolly fun in one of these eight books than in any dozen others we ever saw

[Copyright, 1894, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

Bouvet is a brave man; I will say that for him. He flashed out his sword and away he clattered up the stone steps, his spurs clinking as he ran. I followed him, but just as we came out into the kitchen passage a tremendous shout told us that the house had been recaptured.

"It is all over," I cried, grasping at Bouvet's sleeve.

"There is one more to die," he shouted, and away he went like a madman up the second stair. In effect I should have gone to my death also had I been in his place, for he had done very wrong in not throwing out his scouts to warn him if the Germans advanced upon him. For an instant I was about to rush up with him, and then I bethought myself that after all I had my own mission to think of, and that if I were taken the important letter of the emperor would be sacrificed. I let Bouvet die alone, therefore, and I went down into the cellar again, closing the door behind me.

Well, it was not a very rosy prospect down there, either. Bouvet had dropped the candle when the alarm came, and I, pawing about in the darkness, could find nothing but broken bottles. At last I came upon the candle, which had rolled under the curve of a cask, but try as I would with my tinder box I could not light it. The reason was that the wick had been wet in a puddle of wine, so, suspecting that this might be the case, I cut the end off with my sword. Then I found that it lighted easily enough. But what to do I could not imagine. The scoundrels upstairs were shouting themselves hoarse, several hundred of them from the sound, and it was clear that some of them would soon want to moisten their throats. There would be an end of a dashing soldier, and of the mission and of the medal. I thought of my mother and I thought of the emperor. It made me weep to think that the one would lose so excellent a son and the other the best light cavalry officer he ever had since La Salle's time. But presently I dashed the tears from my eyes. "Courage!" I cried, striking myself upon the chest. "Courage, my brave boy! Is it possible that one who has come safely from Moscow without so much as a frost bite will die in a French wine cellar?" At the thought I was up on my feet, and clutching at the letter in my tunic, for the crackle of it gave me courage.

My first plan was to set fire to the house, in the hope of escaping in the confusion. My second to get into an empty wine cask. I was looking round to see if I could find one, when suddenly in the corner I espied a little, low door, painted of the same gray color as the wall, so that it was only a man with quick sight who would have noticed it. I pushed against it and at first I imagined that it was locked. Presently, however, it gave a little, and then I understood that it was held by the pressure of something upon the other side. I put my feet against a hogshead of wine and gave such a push that the door flew open and I came down with a crash upon my back, the candle flying out of my hands, so that I found myself in darkness once more. I picked myself up and stared through the black archway into the gloom beyond.

There was a slight ray of light coming from some slit orgrating. The dawn had broken outside and I could dimly see the long, curving sides of several huge casks, which made me think that perhaps this was where the mayor kept his reserves of wine while they were maturing. At any rate, it seemed to be a safer hiding place than the outer cellar, so gathering up my candle, I was just closing the door behind me, when I suddenly saw something which filled me with amazement and even, I confess, with the smallest little touch of fear.

I have said that at the further end of the cellar there was a dim, gray fan of light striking downward from somewhere near the roof. Well, as I peered through the darkness, I suddenly saw a great, tall man skip into this belt of daylight, and then out again into the blackness at the further end. My word, I gave such a start that my busby nearly broke its chin strap. It was but a glance, but none the less I had time to see that the fellow had a hairy Cossack cap on his head, and that he was a great, long-legged, broad-shouldered brigand, with a saber at his waist. My faith, even Etienne Gerard was a little staggered at being left alone with such a creature in the dark.

But only for a moment. "Courage," I thought. "Am I not a hussar, a brigadier, too, at the age of thirty-one, and the chosen messenger of the emperor?' After all, this skulker had more cause to be afraid of me than I of him. And then suddenly I understood that he was afraid—horribly afraid. I could read it from his quick steps and his bent shoulders, as he ran among the barrels, like a rat making for its hole. And of course it must have been he who had held the door against me, and not some packing case or wine cask, as I had imagined. He was the pursued, then, and I the pursuer. Aha, I felt my whiskers bristle as I advanced upon him through the darkness! He would find that he had no chicken to deal with, this robber from the north. For the moment I was magnificent.

At first I had feared to light my candle, lest I should make a mark of myself, but now, after cracking my shin over a box and catching my spurs in some canvas, I thought the bolder course the wiser. I lit it, therefore, and then I advanced with long strides, my sword in my hand. "Come out, you rascal!" I cried. "Nothing can save you. You will at last meet with your deserts."

I held my candle high, and presently I caught a glimpse of the man's head, staring at me over a barrel. He had a gold chevron on his black cap, and the expression of his face told me in an instant that he was an officer and a man of refinement.

"Monsieur," he cried, in excellent French, "I surrender myself upon the promise of quarter. But if I do not have your promise I will then sell my life as dearly as I can."

"Sir," said I. "A Frenchman knows how to treat an unfortunate enemy. Your life is safe!" With that he handed the sword over the top of the barrel and I bowed with the candle upon my heart. "Whom have I the honoring of capturing?" I asked.

"I am the Count Boutkine, of the emperor's own Don Cossacks," said he. "I came out with my troop to reconnoitre Senlis, and, as we found no sign of your people, we determined to spend the night here."

"And would it be an indiscretion," I asked, "if I were to inquire how you came into the back cellar?"

"Nothing more simple," said he. "It was our intention to start at early dawn. Feeling chilled after dressing, I thought that a cup of wine would do me no harm, so I came down to see what I could find. As I was rummaging about, the house was suddenly carried by assault so rapidly that by the time I had climbed the stairs it was all over. It only remained for me to save myself, so I came down here and hid myself in the back cellar where you have found me."

I thought of how old Bouvet had behaved under the same conditions, and the tears sprang to my eyes as I contemplated the glory of France. Then I had to consider what I should do next. It was clear that this Russian count, being in the back cellar, while we were in the front one, had not heard the sounds which would have told him that the house was once again in the hands of his own allies. If he should once understand this the tables would be turned, and I should be his prisoner instead of he being mine. What was I to do? I was at my wits' end, when suddenly there came to me an idea so brilliant that I could not but be amazed at my own invention.

"Count Boutkine," said I, "I find myself in a most difficult position."

"Why?" he asked.

"Because I have promised you your life."

His jaw dropped a little. "You would not withdraw your promise?" he cried.

"If the worst comes to the worst, I can die in your defense," said I, "but the difficulties are great."

"What is it, then?" he asked.

"I will be frank with you," said I. "You must know that our fellows, and especially the Poles, are so incensed against the Cossacks that the mere fact of the uniform drives them mad! They precipitate themselves instantly upon the wearer, and tear him limb from limb. Even their officers cannot restrain them."

The Russian grew pale at my words and the way in which I said them.

"But this is terrible!" said he.

"Horrible!" said I. "If we were to go up together at this moment I cannot promise how far I could protect you."

"I am in your hands," he cried. "What would you suggest that we should do? Would it not be best that I should remain here?"

"That worst of all."

"And why?"

"Because our fellows will ransack the house presently, and then you would be cut to pieces. No, no, I must go up and break it to them. But even then, when once they see that accursed uniform, I do not know what may happen."

"Should I then take the uniform off?"

"Excellent! Excellent!" I cried. "Hold! We have it! You will take your uniform off and put on mine. That will make you sacred to every French soldier."

"It is not the French that I fear so much as the Poles."

"But my uniform will be a safeguard against either."

"How can I thank you?" he cried. "But you—what are you to wear?"

"I will wear yours."

"And perhaps fall a victim to your generosity."

"It is my duty to take the risk," I answered. "But I have no fears. I will ascend in your uniform. A hundred swords will be turned upon me. 'Hold!' I will shout. 'I am Brigadier Gerard.' Then they will see my face. They will know me, and I will tell them about you. Under the shield of these clothes you will be sacred."

His fingers trembled with eagerness as he tore off his tunic. His boots and breeches were much like my own, so there was no need to change them, but I gave him my hussar jacket, my dolman, my busby and swordbelt and my sabre-sash, while I took in exchange his high sheepskin hat, with the gold chevron, his fur-trimmed coat and his crooked sword. Be it well understood that in changing the tunics I did not forget to change my thrice precious letter also from my old one to my new.

"With your leave," said I. "I shall now bind you to a barrel."

He made a great fuss over this, but I have learned in my soldiering never to throw away chances, and how could I tell that he might not, when my back was turned, see how the matter really stood and break in upon my plans. He was leaning against a barrel at the time, so I ran six times around it with a rope, and then tied it with a big knot behind. If he wished to come upstairs he would at least have to carry a thousand litres of good French wine for a knapsack. I then shut the door of the back cellar behind me, so that he might not hear what was going forward, and, tossing the candle away, I ascended the kitchen stair.

"I SHALL NOW BIND YOU TO A BARREL," SAID I.

There were only about twenty steps, and yet while I came up them I seemed to have time to think of everything that I had ever done, and everything that I had ever hoped to do. It was the same that I had at Eylau when I lay with my broken leg and saw the horse artillery galloping down upon me. Of course I knew that if I were taken I should be shot instantly as being disguised within the enemy's lines.

THE DAILY PRESS

ESTABLISHED MAY 10, 1887. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1894. TWO CENTS A COPY. $5 A YEAR.

THE TWO VANS.

St. Nick Stopped to See Them, and They Bought Him Out of Business.

SANTA CLAUS came to Plainfield, and unloaded his pack in the corner store of the Babcock Building, and that's why The Two Vans who hold that corner have such a wonderful variety of everything to make home happy.

With VanEmburgh & Son offering Christmas bargains so rare and manifold, there is no need for Kris Kringle to continue in business, and this year he will be able to take a rest from the chimney climbing that so long he has followed.

The store of The Two Vans is Plainfield's Christmas centre for those who want to fill all stockings at hard times prices. Tastefully decorated, managed by two of the most genial and agreeable merchants in America, and equipped with a large staff of alert and attentive clerks, the always-busy store is just now doing a rushing trade.

The main show window is a beautiful example of artistic decoration. The gold background, and the careful arrangement of judiciously selected specialties, make a pleasant picture for the eye, and there is an absence of conglomeration that is refreshing.

Inside, the departments offer boundless choice of gifts for every member of the home. The store is a bright and happy picture, radiant with cheerfulness; and the pocketbook rejoices in the fact that its owner can suit his desires for little money.

Gifts useful, sensible, handsome, elegant—what you will—are to be bought at The Two Vans' store for so little money that the manufacturers themselves would be amazed. The illuminated picture books for the little ones, the toys, the games, the feminine finery, masculine adornments and housewives' delights, are here for sale in bewildering array, and if your limit of Christmas expenditure is only 1 cent the Two Vans will give you for it a book for the baby or a novelty for the home.

It is hard to specify examples from among such wonderful bargains, but as an idea note the dainty fairy night lamps of colored glass with complete fixtures, for 13 cents.

The Two Vans are a Santa Claus team.

A Venture Deserving Support.

Isaac C. Varian, manager of Music Hall, has engaged the J. C. Duff Opera Company to present Bizet's charming opera of Spanish life, "Carmen", tomorrow night.

The opera requires the services of sixty people for its proper production. This includes 18 soloists, a chorus of 30, and 12 trained musicians from the Metropolitan Opera House in the orchestra.

"Carmen" for the past 12 years has been a favorite opera, both in this country and Europe, with the music-loving people.

There have been several brilliant Carmens, among them Miss Minnie Hauk, Mme. Calve, and Mlle. Zelie DeLussan; and now comes another, Miss Nita Carrite, a pretty, graceful woman who possesses all the fire and grace necessary to portray the artful character.

The production of "Carmen" at Music Hall Dec. 14 will be beautifully staged as to scenery and costumes.

Mr. Varian strives hard to please the citizens of Plainfield, and in this instance he deserves the support and patronage of all his fellow-citizens to make this night of grand opera in English a success.

It costs the management of Music Hall $500 to bring this organization of artists to Plainfield.

Reserved seats can now be secured at the box office in person or by mail.

Boehm's Bargain Bazar.

What a wonderful brightener of homes are pictures! They are always welcome to the household, and Boehm has struck a popular fancy in displaying such a fine lot of beautiful prints, tastefully framed, at such a low selling price. Boehm's is just now the haunt of all money-saving shoppers. That means a big crowd, but in his enlarged quarters Boehm gives abundant elbow-room, and all can examine thoroughly his great stock of useful and ornamental goods of every description, for holiday gifts at easy prices.

WOMEN DON'T COUNT.

ASTONISHING TALES TOLD TO A PLAINFIELD AUDIENCE.

Dr. Root, a Medical Missionary, Relates Her Experience Among the People of India.

A large number were present at the Congregational Church last evening to listen to a talk by Miss Pauline Root, M. D., on the work of a medical missionary in India. After several hymns Rev. M. E. Dwight led in prayer, and Rev. C. L. Goodrich read a selection from the Scriptures.

Then Mr. Goodrich, after a few remarks, introduced Dr. Root, who said in part:

The missionary work in India is much the same as it is in other countries, but the medical work, especially for women, is almost entirely new. The male doctor reaches only the women of low caste, while the high-caste women are not reached. The female medical missionary reaches these women, and her influence is next to that of a mother's. The life of these secluded women is very indolent; they have nothing to fall back upon, nothing to think about. There are a very few cultured, cultivated women among them, but most are entirely uneducated.

Dr. Root then gave an example of an ordinary night call. Unless the woman was dying, everything in the house was as usual, while perhaps one or two persons were awaiting to lead the way to the sick one. If she was dying, then the paid mourners were already in the courtyard, moaning and weeping and tearing their hair. The doctor was led into a little room in which the sufferer lay—no bed, windows all closed, no air. Sometimes a paid nurse was in attendance, but usually there was no one. A little dish of rice and another of water were left at the door for refreshment of the patient, and a small charcoal fire was always kept burning, no matter what the temperature was outside.

The husbands of the women were very hard to get hold of, as they seemed afraid that they would have to talk over the case and then go and see their wives. The mother-in-law was usually left in charge, while the husband went to one of the neighboring houses to wait until the doctor had left, and it was only by the greatest exertions that she could find them.

Dr. Root told a very sad story of the dying of a very beautiful girl, the loved wife of a man who showed his great attachment for her in every way.

The men, when they are ill,—she said—have all the conveniences that can be procured.

Most of Dr. Root's work is done, not in going out, but at the dispensary. They have to get up early, often before 5 on account of the hotness of the day, the average temperature being 84 degrees. The first thing to be done is the answering of the numerous letters asking for advice, and then the doctor goes to the dispensary, where is a motley lot of people waiting for help.

After describing the different kinds of patients and relating several incidents that occured at the dispensary, she told of many little incidents in her general work.

After her talk, Dr. Root exhibited a dress of the kind worn by the Hindoo women, and showed the manner in which it is worn by the women of the different castes.

A collection was taken up for missionary purposes, after which the meeting was dismissed with the benediction.

His Goods a Household Delight.

As one passed from Park avenue into Front street last night a rich red illumination just beyond the postoffice held his attention, and the investigator speedily found himself reveling in the matchless display in Gavett's store. The holiday assortment there includes a great array of useful and luxurious goods, all artistic and elegant, and at prices which patrons say are less than metropolitan. If Gavett's goods look so fine in the store, they look finer yet and serve faithful purpose in the home. For use and ornament combined, Gavett's goods are superior.

Bowling Tonight.

Tonight the Elizabeth Bicycle Club team will have a chance to show what it can do away from home, for its game is scheduled against the Plainfields on the Trade Temple alleys. The team will be accompanied by a number of bowlers who have never visited the Plainfield alleys. They will arrive on the 7:34 train.

Midnight Marauder.

Mrs. Burns of Elm place was aroused from sleep late at night by a strange man who demanded admittance. He kept his face shielded by the folds of an umbrella, and when in reply to his terrifying threats she screamed for help he ran up the street and over the bridge.

Inventive Plainfielders.

L. W. Serrell has just patented an ice-making apparatus, and H. H. Baker has patented the street sign samples of which may be seen attached to Plainfield electric lamps.

MOTHER AND BABE AT REST.

Impressive Incidents of Mrs. Siebrecht's Life Touchingly Reviewed by Her Former Pastor.

Many friends and relatives of the late Mrs. Henry Siebrecht gathered yesterday afternoon at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Titsworth, Madison avenue, where funeral services were conducted by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis.

A quartette composed of D. E. Titsworth, Dr. Clawson, E. E. Runyon and A. L. Titsworth rendered an appropriate selection, and Rev. C. L. Goodrich offered prayer. The Scripture was read by Dr. Lewis, after which the quartette sang a favorite hymn of decedent, "I am Sweeping Through the Gates". This was sung by her just before she died. It was a beautiful selection and its rendition was exceedingly touching.

Dr. Lewis spoke briefly. The central thought was that we should turn away from earthly sorrow to the blessedness of the heavenly light.

He dwelt on the devotion of Mrs. Siebrecht to church and Christian Endeavor work, and read two selections from the Scriptures, both of which were sent by her to the monthly consecration meeting of the Plainfield society. The one for October—Psalm 27:1, "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear! the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid"—came by telegram, she being doubtful whether it would arrive in time by mail. And the second—Psalm 27:5, "For in the time of trouble He shall hide me in His pavilion; in the secret of His tabernacle shall He hide me; He shall set me upon a rock"—came for November.

The clergyman remarked the completeness of the selections, and how appropriate they were, and said that he did not quote them in praise especially, but to exalt the precious truths.

Nov. 8, just one month before decedent passed away, the Christian Endeavor Society of the church were holding their consecration meeting, and the roll was being called. Her name was read, and no response was made, and when the next name was called the following verse was given:

"But by the grace of God I am what I am; and His grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain."

It proved to be a favorite verse, marked by Mrs. Siebrecht in her Bible. The reason of her failure to send a verse was the fact that during the afternoon she became unconscious and remained so.

These circumstances were very touching, and all felt the impressiveness of the occasion. An opportunity was given to those present to take a last look on the calm features of the departed, who lay so peacefully in the casket with her precious little one in her arms.

The floral offerings were specially beautiful and appropriate.

Those acting as pall-bearers were N.R., Clarence and Alonzo Titsworth, Clarence Siebrecht, Fred Smith, William Siebrecht and A. L. Titsworth.

Interment was in Hillside Cemetery this morning.

Mizpah's Joyous Time.

Music, wit, and beauty held sway at the entertainment, dance and supper given by Mizpah Lodge, I. O. O. L. in Red Men's Hall last evening.

Preceding the dance the large audience were most pleasantly entertained by Mrs. Fred Canfield, Mrs. W. A. Weephal, Miss Maud Desborough, Miss M. Stultz, Miss L. Hebber, R. Mattox and Frank Splain, who favored with songs, solos and recitations. Dancing followed, and supper was served during the evening.

Mrs. T. A. Snyder, Mrs. Demarest, Mrs. E. Radin, Mrs. A. Mattis, Mrs. M. M. Morse, and Mrs. E. Weigman, the women who constituted the committee of arrangements, can certainly congratulate themselves upon the marked success attending the affair, which was fully evinced by the happy faces of all who were fortunate enough to be in attendance last evening.

Tickets for Tramps.

The Employment Committee of the Organized Aid wish to call attention to the fact that provision has been made to supply tramps with work, at any time of the day, in payment for which they can receive a good meal. Householders are requested to send tramps directly to the woodyard of Mr. Holmes, 208 Madison avenue, instead of to the rooms of the association. The rooms are open daily from 9 to 11, only, and tramps have been known to defer presenting the tickets until after office hours in order that they may say they could not get in and thus prevail upon kind-hearted persons to give them the food for which they are unwilling to work.

—W. C. Smith of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., inspected Boggs Post of New Brunswick last evening.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. V. The prompt relief it affords is alone worth many times the cost, 50 cents. Its continued use will effect a permanent cure. For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

NORTH PLAINFIELD CHANGES.

Important Election Innovations Under the New State Law.

A new law passed by the Legislature last Winter and approved in April, will be the means of separating the Borough and township of North Plainfield. The Borough will have its own government, collect its own taxes and the township the same, and the latter will have no jurisdiction over the Borough. The officers-elect will hold over till their term expires. The next election takes place the second Tuesday in March, 1895, and the new order will be as follows:

Township—Town Committee, Collector, Assessor, Freeholder, Overseer of the Poor, Commissioners of Highways, Commissioners of Appeal, Poundkeeper, Constable, Justice of the Peace.

Borough—Mayor (3 years), Common Council, Collector, Assessor, Overseer of the Poor, Freeholder, Surveyor of Highways, Justice of the Peace.

The present Freeholder and Overseer of the Poor in township hold over two years, being elected for three years.

FOUND A STAB IN THE BODY.

But It May Have Been Caused by the Pitchfork After Death.

Constable Geo. Rockafellow impaneled the following jury to view the body of the female infant found at Scotch Plains, on the arrival of Coroner Horning from Elizabeth yesterday at 3 p. m.: Wm. S. Bullock, foreman, W. R. Mattox, Wm. Hyler, J. O. Campbell, J. E. Mosher, J. B. Morrison, H. O. McClurg. J. A. Harned, Geo. Frazee, Wm. Sheehan, B. F. Brady, C. L. Treat.

The jury will meet at 2 p. m. next Monday, in the City Court rooms, as exclusively announced in yesterday's Press.

After viewing the body, Coroner Horning, accompanied by Constable Rockafellow, drove to Scotch Plains, but no new evidence of an interesting nature was developed itself, save the fact that the whereabouts of the suspected mother is known and will be placed under surveillance, pending the investigation.

A wound in the breast of the little one, which, however, may have been made by the pitchfork, points to a darker crime than was at first suspected.

Great Horses in a Great Play.

"The Prodigal Daughter", which concludes its Plainfield engagement with tonight's production, was enthusiastically greeted by a large audience in Music Hall last night. "The Prodigal Daughter" is the most remarkable melodrama ever seen in this country. There is a dash and spirit in the scenes and a logical and culminative interest in the story that are seldom found in melodrama. The story is developed with great skill and strength. The characters are clearly and strongly contrasted. No such scene as the horse race has ever before been attempted on the stage in this city, and it proved a revelation to admirers of realism, being an almost exact counterpart of the famous race course at Aintree, near Liverpool, on the day when Roquefort, one of the competing horses, actually won the grand national steeplechase, as shown. Ten thoroughbreds, including several famous American jumpers and some ex-English turf favorites, appear in this scene, and are ridden by jockeys many of whom have national reputations. Altogether the production of "The Prodigal Daughter" in Music Hall is one of the notable theatrical events of the season.

30 Days for $25.

Owen Frainee, the young man who ran off with money entrusted to him by Druggist Shove of Westfield, pleaded guilty in Court yesterday. Frainee was passing Shove's store, when he was called in and given $25 to take to Plainfield and deposit it in the bank. On reaching Plainfield Frainee found that the bank was closed. In walking about the city he began to spend the money, and finally appropriated it all. He was sentenced to the county jail for thirty days.

"It is a pleasure to sell Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," says Stickney & Dentler, druggists, Republic, Ohio, "Because a customer after once using it, is almost certain to call for it when again in need of such a medicine. We sell more of it than of any other cough medicine we handle, and it always gives satisfaction." For cough, colds and croup, it is without an equal. For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

MISS SLOCUM INTERESTS PLAINFIELD WOMEN.

The Club of Current Events Provides Much Food for Thought.

The Club of Current Events, in session at the Park Club Assembly rooms yesterday afternoon, listened to a most interesting and earnest lecture by Miss J. M. Slocum on "The Personal Elements in Political Economy". The lecturer had her subject well in hand and showed not only great skill in driving home each thought, but deep research as well, from her many apt quotations of the leading authorities on matters economic.

Value is a relative term" said Miss Slocum, with which the fads and fancies of fashions have more to do than we think. As an instance, fashion decreed women should wear hoopskirts. At once large factories sprang up, and labor was employed to make this new commodity. But when fashion dropped the hoopskirt its commercial value sank to nothing. From this can also be seen the fallacy of the statement that labor creates value in all cases.

Demand and Supply are synonomous terms.

Wants, efforts and satisfaction constitute the entire science of economics.

All people are consumers, but are divided into two classes—Productive and non-productive. So long has the housewife been considered a non-producer, that she has almost come to that belief herself. But note the fallacy of the statement. The bread maker of the family is not considered a wage-earner, but should she open a little store and sell her surplus to her neighbors she at once becomes a capitalist on a small scale. The difference is one of degree only—not of kind.

Throughout the lecture Adam Smith, Ruskin, Washington Gladden, Cicero, and many others were freely drawn upon to substantiate and emphasize Miss Slocum's remarks. At the close of the discourse questions on various topics referring to economics were asked by members of the club and an audible smile was noted when the lecturer in answering one of the queries referred to the husband as "The head partner in the housekeeping business".

To Organize the Parish Monday Night.

The Church of our Saviour in this city, has existed as a mission, and has been served by a missionary appointed by the Bishop. Rev. S. P. Simpson has held this position for over six years. Under his energetic administration, the congregation has grown in numbers and influence to such an extent, that it has reached the limit of a parish position. By the advice of Bishop Scarborough, the Mission applied during last September for the Canonical consent of the Bishop and Standing Committee for the formation of a parish. At their regular meeting last Monday, consent was given "for the formation of a new Parish in the City of Plainfield, to be known as St. Stephen's Church".

A parish meeting will be held next Monday evening, for the organization of the parish, when the wardens and vestrymen will be elected for the coming year. We wish the new parish Godspeed.

Active Real Estate.

Following is a list of recently recorded transfers of North Plainfield property:

John D. Runyon and wife to Charles Hand, $450.

Margaret E. McLeLaughlin to Charles W. Hummer, $425.

Anna Stites to Chris Nelson, $56.

Annie M. Bacon to Benjamin B. McAlpin, $1.

George A. Dilts, sheriff, to Alice S. Newton, $500.

The New York Philharmonic Club.

The second concert of the series will be given in the Casino Tuesday next, Dec. 18. The vocal soloists will be Miss Clara C. Henley, soprano, and Conrad Behren, basso. Tickets for the remaining two concerts may be procured at Reynolds's Pharmacy and at the door. Price $2.

No Longer Elevated.

Peter Seader has weakened, and last night he and his friends assembled with ropes and plenty of muscle, and the rockaway wagon which had been placed on top of his barn on Race street by the boys on Hallow E'en night, was tenderly lifted to the ground.

—Lawyer Nelson Runyon had a new safe placed in his office this morning.

—For Christmas gifts, if you want good ones, go anywhere. If you want better ones, go somewhere else. But if you want the best go to Rand's.

—Edsall claims to have the largest assortment of toys, books and games this side of New York; in fact, he says in every line he excels in variety, and none undersells him.

—Owing to a misunderstanding between Warren Engine Company and Driver Peter Seader, the latter has taken his horses away. Thomas McGann has placed his four horses in the engine house, and they will be used to haul the apparatus when needed.

EVENTS TONIGHT.

Casino, 8 p. m.—Recital by Miss Jackson and Mr. Conde.

Grace P. E. Church, 8 p. m.—Lecture on "The Pyramid and Its Relation to Modern Scientific Thought", by Prof. Jacob M. Clark.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—If you want toys, you will find a large assortment at Harper's, 411 Park avenue.

—Alert hose carriage was out behind the grays on Second street this morning for an airing.

—Fred'k M. Masker, plumber and fitter, has removed from Newark to 110 Liberty street, Plainfield.

—The members of the Epworth League of Grace M. E. Church will open their fair this evening.

—Christmas packages for the men have been made up by Hallock. His ad tells about them. They are great.

—An elegant assortment of Christmas, New Year's and birthday cards and booklets, at Swain's, East Front street.

—The electric lamp at East Front and Washington streets has for three nights declined to burn. It is an old offender.

—A Bound Brook farmer's runaway team was bravely caught on West Third street this noon by Henry Rogers of Washingtonville.

—The team in Unity Lodge, No. 102, exemplified the third rank last evening. Next Wednesday evening one candidate will be initiated.

—The case of Vanderveer against Cuff which was set down for this morning at 11 in Justice Newcorn's Court was adjourned till tomorrow morning at 10.

—A special communication of Jerusalem Lodge No. 26, F. and A. M., was called last evening for the purpose of conferring the Eternal Apprentice Degree on three candidates.

—Rev. P. S. Gibson, pastor of Mt. Olive Church, will have charge of the meeting at the East Third Street Mission this evening. A choir from his church will accompany him.

—The evening social given on East Front street last evening by Chester B. Dennis and Corra Ryno was a delight to all attending. It was 3 before the dancing was brought to a close.

—The district meeting of the Knights of Pythias will be held in Perseverance Lodge rooms tomorrow evening. All the Grand Lodge officers will be present. A district deputy will be elected.

—Purchases from E. M. Laing's make the men happy. He supplies the best of everything in men's linen, underwear, neckwear, hats and gloves; and his stock of trunks, sachels and baby carriage robes is complete.

—Go and see the magnetic and hypnotic wonder of the age, Mlle. Belladonna Agramonte at Reform Hall tonight. Roars of laughter. Persons will be taken from the audience and the most laughable hallucinations produced.

—A committee of men from New York visited Plainfield yesterday and interviewed Col. Julian Scott in regard to his painting "The Death of Gen. Sedgwick". If they purchase it, the picture will be placed on exhibition in a prominent place in the city.

—The children's fair to be held at 315 East Second street Friday afternoon from 4 to 7, to purchase a ton of coal for an aged woman, will provide home-made cake, candy, canned goods, aprons, and fancy articles suitable for Christmas gifts. A good attendance is desired, as it is a worthy cause.

—The cold is here, and the good wife or sweetheart wants Winter furs. Slim though the purse, the desire may be gratified, for the International Fur Store at 114 Park avenue offers a rich assortment of the finest furs at prices that ought to make New York dealers ashamed of themselves.

Gifts of Comfort and Ease.

Chas. Hall has with his accustomed good taste arranged in the show windows and cases of Reynolds's Pharmacy an elegant display of choice holiday goods in the line of cut-glass bottles, perfumes, mirrors, and toilet requisites. Reynolds's Pharmacy has a superior stock of substantial and beautiful goods for milord and milady, and Christmas gifts may there be procured that will promote the comfort, ease and happiness of the favored recipient.

Sir John Thompson Dies in Windsor Castle.

The Premier of Canada Had Been Made a Member of the Queen's Privy Council and Was Dining When Death Overtook Him—A Disease of the Heart the Cause.

London, Dec. 13.—Sir John S. D. Thompson, premier of the Dominion of Canada, died suddenly while lunching at Windsor castle with members of the royal household.

Sir John, together with Lord Ripon and Messrs. Fowler and Morley, left Paddington station for Windsor by special train at noon. He conversed quietly on the platform with his companions while waiting for the train and seemed to be in the best of spirits. Shortly after the castle had been reached Sir John was sworn in as a member of her majesty's privy council.

After the council meeting Sir John was granted an audience by the queen, at the conclusion of which he and his companions sat down to luncheon with several members of the royal household.

When attacked by his fatal illness Sir John fell to the left and was supported in the arms of the guest who sat on that side of him. Lord Ripon, who helped to support Sir John when he sank into his chair, gave him some brandy, which revived him.

Believing that the premier had recovered, Lord Ripon started for London, but before he had reached the Windsor station he was overtaken by a messenger who informed him of Sir John's death. The luncheon of which Sir John was partaking when he was stricken was served in the octagon room of the castle.

Sir John Thompson had for some time past suffered from fatty degeneration of the heart, and was also afflicted with an abdominal malady. He was fully aware of his condition, and consulted a London specialist as to his ailments.

The physician gave him to understand that he was in no immediate danger, and, being thus assured, he afterward made short visits to France and Italy. He returned to London ten days ago.

The news of the death of Sir John was broken to the queen by Sir John McNeill, her majesty's equerry. The queen was greatly shocked at the announcement, and expressed her extreme sorrow.

Montreal, Dec. 13.—Lady Thompson, who is at present in this city, seems to have had a premonition that something was wrong with her husband. She confided her fears to Mrs. Ouimet, wife of the minister of public works, who laughed at her and sought to cheer her up.

Lady Thompson is much prostrated over the announcement of her husband's death. The entire city is in mourning. The report of the sad event caused consternation everywhere, and even the late premier's bitterest political opponents seem to regret it deeply.

Sir John was born in Halifax, N. S., in 1844, his father being a native of Waterford, Ireland. Sir John's father was queen's printer in Nova Scotia and gave his son a good education. In October, 1878, he was appointed member of the executive council and attorney-general of the province.

In May, 1882, he was made premier and attorney-general, which he held until July 25 of the same year, when he resigned to become a judge of the Nova Scotia supreme court. He resigned from the bench in September, 1885, and joined the dominion government as minister of justice and attorney-general of Canada, being elected again for his old county, Antigonish.

In 1888 he was created by her majesty a knight companion of St. Michael and St. George for his services in connection with the fishery treaty negotiations at Washington.

He succeeded Sir John Abbott as premier of the dominion two years ago this month.

A Brother's Horrible Crime.

Winnipeg, Me., Dec. 13.—A dispatch from Langenburg gives particulars of horrible attempted murder and suicide there. Charles Forwad quarrelled with his brother William, and while the latter was stooping over a stove, struck him with an axe on the neck, inflicting a sickening wound. He then tried to burn his brother while alive but neighbors rescued the wounded boy. To-day the would-be murderer was found at his cabin door frozen to death.

Extended the Civil Service.

Washington, Dec. 13.—The president, after an extended conference with Secretary Carlisle and Internal Revenue Commissioner Miller, issued an order which has been in contemplation for some time, putting storekeepers, gaugers and clerks in the offices of collectors of internal revenue in the classified civil service.

Sixty-two Fatal Accidents.

Shamokin, Pa., Dec. 13.—Mine Inspector Brennan's report of the seventh anthracite district for the past year shows that sixty-two fatal accidents occurred.

Babcock Is Collector.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 13.—President Cleveland has appointed Henry M. Babcock collector of the port of New Haven.

William K. Vanderbilt Returns.

New York, Dec. 13.—William K. Vanderbilt has returned home from Europe on the steamer Teutonic.

CRIME IN SPOILS.

Carl Schurz Denounces the Present System of Political Rewards.

Chicago, Dec. 13.—The National Civil Service Reform league met in annual convention here in the rooms of the Commerce club. Later a public session was held in the Auditorium Recital hall at which essays were read by Charles J. Bonaparte, Charles B. Wiley, C. P. Dana, William Dudley Foulke and others.

The feature of the day, however, was the annual address of the president, the Hon. Carl Schurz. He said in part:

"The spoils system, that practice which turns public offices, high and low, from public trusts into objects of prey and booty for the victorious party, may without extravagance of language be called one of the greatest criminals in our history, if not the greatest.

"In the whole catalogue of our ills there is none more dangerous to the vitality of our free institutions.

"It subjects those who exercise the appointing power, from the president of the United States down, to the intrusion of hordes of office-hunters and their patrons, who rob them of the time and strength they should devote to the public interest.

"It has already killed two of our presidents, one, the first Harrison, by worry, and the other, Garfield, by murder; and more recently it has killed a mayor in Chicago and a judge in Tennessee."

THREE CONVICTS ESCAPE.

Desperate Criminals Broke Jail at Pottsville, Pa.

Pottsville, Pa., Dec. 13.—Three convicts escaped from the Schuylkill county prison, while soup was being served to the hundred inmates of that institution.

Their names are Frank Mullen, a tramp undergoing sentence of four years and nine months for assault with intent to kill Yard Master Sabold of Palo Alto in March, 1893; Michael Welsch of Shenandoah, sentenced by the last term of court to one year for housebreaking and George Boehmer, convicted last July and sentenced to fifteen months for robbing railroad cars at Mahanoy Junction.

They succeeded in effecting their escape by sawing the bars in front of the window of their cell and forcing the lock of the large door in the prison wall leading out upon an unfrequented street.

MAY REOPEN THE FEUD.

Bloodshed Expected Between the French and Eversole Factions.

Lexington, Ky., Dec. 13.—A message received here shows that the people in eastern Kentucky are apprehensive of the reopening of the noted French-Eversole feud.

The factions have never ceased to exist. The breaking up of the circuit court at Hazard, Ky., and the attempt to kill Judge Floyd Hall Monday has served to further enrage the mountaineers.

The murderers of Judge Combs are now at large, having escaped to the mountains after refusing to go to jail and attempting to kill Judge Hall.

One of the leaders on the Eversole side is Jerre South, a large property owner in Breathitt county. The people of Breathitt and Perry counties are armed in anticipation of trouble.

Olney Out on Bail.

Willimantic, Conn., Dec. 13.—Jeremiah Olney, of Hartford, school fund commissioner of the state of Connecticut, who was arrested at his home on a bench warrant issued by Judge Wheeler charging him with misappropriating the income of the state school fund and with receiving money resulting from the investment of the fund, in addition to his salary of $2,000, was brought here and placed under $5,000 bond for trial. Ex-Senator William B. Sprague of Andover was accepted as surety.

Ghastly Game for Hunters.

Wichita, Kan., Dec. 13.—Hunters in the Cherokee strip have discovered the remains of two men and a boy in a cave near Aetna, Barber county. In the pocket of one was an envelop addressed to Julius Seigler, Herman, Mo. All three had been shot and their clothes had evidently been rifled as nothing else was found on them. The bodies had been there for several months.

Insane Convicts Transferred.

Hartford, Conn., Dec. 13.—Seven convicts at the state prison have been transferred to the Connecticut hospital for the insane at Middletown. Nine reported as insane were examined by a lunacy commission which consisted of Dr. W. C. Howe and Dr. J. E. Rout of this city. Two, Ellis and McGrath, desperate characters, had been shamming and were found to be sane.

Violated the Card Law.

Washington, Dec. 13.—The first case of violating the provision of the new tariff law as to the tax on playing cards has received the action of the treasury department. The offender, who lived in Pennsylvania, sold one dozen packs of cards without their being stamped. Secretary Carlisle imposed a fine of $50.

Music Honors at Yale.

WILL EVADE ALL TARIFF

Sugar Legislation Is Killed by a Senatorial Vote.

An Attempt To Call Up the Matter Is Stopped by the Action Against It—In the House the Income Tax Appropriation Is the Subject of Considerable Debate.

Washington, Dec. 13.—The senate emphatically made known its intention not to have anything to do with tariff legislation at this session. The sugar schedule was the means of bringing out the disclosure. In the house the attempt to end the income tax by killing an appropriation to collect it was defeated. In the senate a motion to take up the house bill of last session making sugar free of duty, with the finance committees amendment to it imposing a flat duty of 40 per cent. on sugar, and abolishing the differentials, was defeated—the vote being, yeas 23, nays 27. The attempt to get up Mr. Vest's cloture resolution was also defeated—yeas 24, nays 34.

The Nicaraguan canal bill was taken up and discussed for a couple of hours; and Mr. Morgan (dem., Ala.), who is in charge of it, signified his purpose to ask the senate to fix a near time for voting upon it.

Bills were passed giving pensions of $100 a month to the widows of Gen. Banks and Crittenden. The bill to organize the territory of Indianola was discussed adversely, by Mr. Platt (rep., Conn.), and was referred to the committee on territories.

On motion of Mr. Quay (rep., Pa.), a senate bill granting an American register to the steamer "Empress," under the name of "Laurada," was passed.

By a vote of 127 to 54, taken by tellers, the house refused to strike out of the deficiency bill the item of $245,095 to enforce the collection of the income tax provided for in the tariff law passed last session.

The appropriation was antagonized by Messrs. Bartlett and Cockran (dems., N. Y.), the former of whom made a legal argument against the constitutionality of the tax, and the latter a vigorous protest against the principle of taxation involved.

Mr. McMillin (dem., Tenn.), the author of the provision, defended the appropriation and the law, and used William Waldorf Astor by name as an illustration of the expediency and justice of the tax. He said the law was on the statute book and would remain there—a statement which evoked applause from the democratic side of the chamber. The appropriation was advocated by Messrs. Henderson (rep., Ia.) and Cannon (rep., Ill).

The deficiency bill also carried an item of $250,000 for the payment of special pension agents and this afforded an opportunity to Gen. Henderson (rep., Ia), Messrs. Daniel (rep., N. Y.), Morse (rep., N. Y.), Sickles (dem., N. Y.), and Bingham (rep., Pa.), to criticise the administration and policy of the pension bureau.

The defence of the income tax provision by Mr. McMillan (dem., Tenn.), was the strongest made in behalf of any measure in some time. Among other things he said:

"The gentleman from New York (Mr. Bartlett) complains of this tax as an unjust tax. Why unjust? He says it falls upon the poor man, because his rent will be increased. The poor man is paying now. He will not be in any worse condition if the taxation is put on some other things than clothes and other necessaries of life.

"Man should pay to the support of the government that protects him in proportion to the blessing he receives through the protection of his property. If he has got a big estate, then he should pay a big tax. If he has got a little estate he should pay a little tax, and the man with a thousand dollar income ought not to pay the same tax to the support of the government of the United States that is paid by he man who has ten millions of income.

"To illustrate the point here I shall depart from my usual course. In the whole of these discussions, Mr. Chairman, I have never been in the habit of using on the floor of the house as an illustration the names of individuals; but I will call your attention to Mr. William Waldorf Astor.

"This gentleman ran for congress once against the present governor of New York (Mr. Flower), and was defeated, and permitted that defeat to do for him what no man ought to permit to be done in this country, that is, it soured and embittered him against the government of the United States and our institutions generally.

"He moved abroad, and not content with what he could say against America himself and our American institutions, he purchased one of the ablest journals in the great government of Great Britain. He lives there now and this newspaper which he owns and controls is doing its work against our institutions.

"And yet, Mr. Chairman, the income of this man, derived from property in New York, is more than five millions of dollars a year and he does not pay the government of the United States a dollar and has not paid ten dollars in ten years, although he has this colossal fortune, which is protected by our army and defended by our navy.

"Where is the man that will contend that there is any injustice in requiring him to bear proper portion of the burden of taxation?"

"I will answer the gentleman," said Mr. Bartlett (dem., N. Y.), "that there is no better tax payer in the state of New York than Mr. William Waldorf, Astor. I will answer him further that there is no family in the state or county of New York that contributes more largely to the taxation purposes, state, county and municipal, than does the Astor family."

PAIN BANISHED SLEEP.

A RHEUMATIC TELLS A WONDERFUL STORY.

Less Than Half a Bottle of Munyon's New Remedy Restored Him to Health.

James Buckley, 215 Washington street, Newark, N. J., says: "I have been suffering from rheumatism for a number of years. The pains were exceedingly severe and I could not sleep nights. The remedies I obtained did me little or no good, nor did the doctors whom I consulted. This had gone on, each recurring attack being more painful and prolonged than the previous one. I could not get relief until I commenced taking Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. Less than one-half a bottle drove all the rheumatism out of my system and I am as well and strong as I ever was in my life. I consider the remedy a wonderful one and take pleasure in recommending it."

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure is guaranteed to cure rheumatism in any part of the body. Acute or muscular rheumatism cured in from one to five days. It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides, back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. It is guaranteed to promptly cure lameness, stiff and swollen joints, stiff back and all pains in the hips and loins. Chronic rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago or pain in the back are speedily cured.

Munyon's Homoeopathic Home Remedy Co. of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25c. a bottle.

A VIEW OF CONGRESS.

CORPULENT TOM REED IS THE HERO OF THE HOUR.

Conspicuous Figures who Will be Missed After the 4th of March. Breckenridge Shunned on Every Side. The Father of the Senate is 84.

During the first few days of the opening of Congress the Democratic Senators concealed their bitterness in the warmth and friendliness of the reunion, but probably they all had constantly before their eyes the knowledge that after the 4th of March next their power in both Houses of Congress will have been broken, and that the Chief Executive in the White House will finish his term handicapped by the existence of a Republican majority in both Houses of the national Legislature.

In looking over the Democratic side of the chamber it is interesting to note that the Senators from the three States that were lost to the Democracy in the November election were all implicated more or less in the sugar scandal investigation. Gen. Ransom's son was convicted of buying stock, although the transaction was undoubtedly a perfectly proper one. Senator McPherson of New Jersey was convicted on his own testimony of having inadvertently purchased sugar stock through the too strict attention to duty of his cook, and Senator Camden of West Virginia was on the point of being convicted, more directly perhaps than any of the others, when the broker through whom it was alleged he purchased his stock fled from the country and the Senate officials were unable to find him, although they announced through the papers and by every means known to give publicity that they were on his tracks.

The most conspicuous Democrat in the Senate is Senator Hill of New York. He was the central figure of the long tariff fight of last summer, and his loyalty to the Democratic party, which induced him to become the leader of the New York Democracy in its hopeless fight, has made him more than ever popular with his party colleagues in the Senate, and they were anxious to tell him so.

On the Republican side of the chamber the most interesting figures were those of the venerable Senator Morrill of Vermont and John Sherman of Ohio. The former, who has passed his 84th birthday, is still physically sound and mentally as bright and strong as many men twenty years his junior. He was heartily congratulated by his colleagues, without regard to party, on his good health and youthfulness. Senator Sherman has grown rapidly white-haired and white-bearded of late, but otherwise he looks just the same as he has at any time during the past quarter of a century. Senator Hoar of Massachusetts, more than ever like a cherub, was also the object of much attention, as were Cullom of Illinois, Chandler of New Hampshire, Higgins of Delaware, Washburn of Minnesota, and Wolcott of Colorado, all of whom are struggling for re-election with more or less uncertain results.

Opening day was Mr. Reed's day in the House of Representatives. As soon as he entered the hall before the session began the great crowds in the galleries, the members on the floor, the clerks, doorkeepers, pages, and everybody else set up a mighty cheer, and in a few miuutes the man from Maine was surrounded by an eager crowd, anxious to shake his hand and applaud him as the most prominent member of the triumphant Republican party. There was also a big cheer for William L. Wilson when he modestly took his accustomed seat, but the applause came largely from the members of his own party, whose greeting was mixed with sympathy for their repudiated leader. When Speaker Crisp marched up to his chair he also enjoyed a popular ovation, but only in the case of Mr. Reed did the shouts come from those who felt that they were honoring a new hero. Mr. Reed bore his honors well. He chatted with all comers, and smiled that big baby smile which serves so effectively to conceal his thoughts.

As the crowd in the galleries look down upon the confused mass of figures on the floor, they see the ancient Mr. Holman of Indiana, the father of the House, busy writing at his desk, apparently unmindful of the fact that his long service in Congress is about to end. They see Dockery of Missouri being congratulated as the one conspicuous brand rescued from the burning, and Breckinridge being snubbed on every hand. They see Bryan of Nebraska attempting to point out to his Populist friends how it was that his State and he were lost together. They saw Bland of Missouri, the daddy of the dollar, chewing his cud as usual and littering the floor with bits of paper, as though writhing in agony. They see Springer with the ever-present red rose in his buttonhole, happy and frisky as a lamb, explaining it all, and the defeated New York Democrats, telling their friends that they hadn't a word to say. Dan Lockwood, who went down with Hill, is the butt of nearly all the jokes aimed at the New York delegation. The gallery audience may also look upon other defeated warriors like Heard of Missouri, Kilgore of Texas, Bynum of Indiana, Tom Johnson of Ohio, McAleer of Pennsylvania, Outhwaite of Ohio, Lafe Pence of Colorado, Jerry Simpson of Kansas, the only Snodgrass of Tennessee, Tracey, the original Cuckoo, and Straus of New York; John De Witt Warner, their impetuous and talkative colleague, and a score of more or less famous Democrats who are now bringing to a close their long and conspicuous Congressional career.

ROGER LEWIS.

He Was Just in Time.

A husband who had been out shooting, but who had not been successful, rather than return home empty handed stopped into a shop and purchased a hare.

"There, my ducky," he said to his wife on returning home, "you see I am not so awkward with the gun, after all." "Let me see." "Isn't he a fine fellow?"

"My dear," said the wife, as she carried the animal to her nostrils, and put it down with a grimace, "you were quite right in killing him to-day; to-morrow it would have been too late."—Dallas Times-Herald.

IT WAS NOT SURPRISING.

Everybody Understood Why Uncle Jasper Did Not Eat Turkey.

It was after the Christmas dinner was over that Uncle Jasper made his customary movement of pushing the nuts from him and stretching his legs under the table, which was always the preliminary to a story.

"It was last night 25 years ago," he began, "that a circumstance happened to me that I have never forgotten, and," he added, looking around the table as if to settle all doubts upon the matter, "I never will."

"Oh, tell it, tell it!" everybody cried.

"Well, your aunt and I were courting then, and her mother had invited me over to spend Christmas with them. I had arrived late on Christmas eve, and the mince pies were just being taken from the oven, all hot and smoking. Nothing would do your aunt but that I should try them at once, and feeling a little peckish I consumed a couple before I had time to express my admiration for them. Under heavy pressure from the entire family I placed myself outside of four more and afterward wrapped my adipose tissue around an extra large sized one on my own account.

"You see," said Uncle Jasper, looking around apologetically, "I had always possessed a weakness for pastry, and when that pastry enclosed mince meat that weakness became a craze.

"Well, after eating my fill I retired for the night to my room, but being in a ruminating frame of mind I did not go to bed at once, but sat and gazed at a picture on the wall representing a barn yard full of poultry, the predominating feature of the scene being a large male turkey with his tail spread out, looking very dignified and very proud. He was a royal bird, and his outlines gave me immense admiration. In fact, I became infatuated with him, and try as I would I could not keep my eyes off him. How long I gazed at his magnificent proportions I know not, but suddenly he ruffled his feathers and still further extended his tail.

"At the same moment the whole picture became animated with life. The other turkeys in his rear began to strut and gobble. The fowls were clucking vigorously, as if greatly agitated, and the rooster crowed three times from the fence with the most unearthly crow that had ever assailed my ears. It was blood curdling, and I thought of all the superstitious stories I had ever heard connected with the untimely crowings of that prophetic bird, and my flesh began to fairly creep.

"Suddenly the gobbler, with stately tread, stepped out of the picture, followed by the entire barnyard population, and slowly came toward me. I would have retreated, but something seemed to chain me to my chair, and I could not move hand or foot.

"The turkey and all his following with solemn eye and grave deportment came nearer and nearer, until the whole brood halted about a yard from me, where they stood surveying me with a severe and threatening air. In an extremity of fear I strove to call out for help, but my tongue clove to the roof of my mouth and the only sound that issued from my lips were guttural mutterings that could not have been heard five yards away.

"After gazing at me in this way for a few moments, the turkey opened his beak, and what was my astonishment to hear him speak with a clear accent, and in the most rational language!

"'Sir,' said he in a contemptuous tone, 'you cannot be ignorant of the purport of this visit from myself and companions.'

"'Indeed I am,' I managed at last to gasp. 'To what am I to attribute such an honor?'

"'You are lying,' was the cold answer. 'You know well.'

"I protested my innocence of his accusation, but he did not appear to be convinced. However, he undertook this extraordinary explanation:

"'In solemn conclave assembled we decided some time ago to arrange for your invitation here to-day. Can you not guess the reason?'

"'I have not the slightest idea,' I answered, trembling, for the cold gleam in his eyes sent a cold shiver down my back.

"'Then I will tell you,' was the rejoinder. 'We brought you here for our Christmas dinner.'

"'What do you mean?' I gasped.

"'To eat you!' they all screeched together in the most blood curdling voice I had ever heard.

"Again I essayed, in agony of fear, to rise, but a fearful weight upon my chest pressed me down, and the more I struggled the greater it became, until I could feel myself slowly sinking to the ground beneath it. I felt myself to be swooning and I should certainly have lost my senses but for the stately turkey's next words, uttered in a voice so strange and cold that it froze the marrow in my bones.

"'I will take his eyes,' said he. 'The rest of him dispose of as ye will.'

"With a deafening flutter of the wings the entire brood flew toward me, the turkey, as he had intimated, making for my eyes. With a scream of agony I made a supreme effort and shook the load from my chest, but not before I had received innumerable buffetings from the wings of that bloodthirsty turkey. The next moment the welcome voice of your aunt's brother rang in my ears.

"'What's the matter. What's the matter?'

"'The turkey! The turkey!' I yelled.

"'Not a bit of it,' said he. 'It's the mince pie.'

"Whether it was or not, I did not eat any turkey that Christmas."

And aunt bore him out in the assertion.

The Initials Fooled Him.

Initials may be made to stand for a good many things which they were never intended to indicate. Everything depends upon the ingenuity of the reader says Youth's Companion.

An old negro servant who had noticed "Washington, D. C.," stamped upon envelopes received by his mistress, said one day:

"I jess like to know, Mis' Hannah, w'y dey allus put dem letters, D.C. after de name of Wash'n'ton on dem envelopes?"

"What do you suppose they stand for?" inquired the mistress, who always enjoyed the old man's answers.

"W'y," said Sambo, after a moment's reflection, "I'se been tinkin' dey mos' likely stood for Dadd ob his Country, but I wa'n't 'xactly sure and sartin but w'at dey might mean some udder ting, fer Wash'n'ton he was a great man and 'pears liks dere's mons'ous deal to be said 'bout him."

THE DAILY PRESS.

A. L. FORCE, Publisher and Proprietor.
WALTER IRVING CLARKE, Managing Editor.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., DEC. 13, 1894

CITY EDITION, 4 O'CLOCK.

THE SPOKESMAN OF THE PEOPLE

The Somerville Messenger comes this week in a handsome tinted cover, and overflows with holiday cheer. The Messenger is a newspaper possessing the happy combination of conservatism and enterprise. Its Santa Claus number covers the county news field as usual, and gives choice Christmas literature besides.

O rare New Jersey! Last night was as beautifully moonlighted, as balmily breezed, as though 'twere the month of June—and Christmas not two weeks away. Down east the snowdrifts are deep, and the people huddle around the fires, but in Plainfield Nature's smile is perennial, and her breath is always soft and pure and healing.

From all sides come words of censure and disgust at the wretched and blasphemous story told before a large gathering of representative citizens Monday night by the individual who has constituted himself the Parkhurst of Plainfield. "A fine Parkhurst he!"—said a reverend clergyman yesterday; and he and all other Arcanumites who were insulted by the shameful words of the would-be social reformer have spread through the town their righteous rebuke of his scandalous tongue. The Daily Press has been urged to expose in its columns the fulness of the hypocrisy of the self-constituted moral censor, but it prefers to maintain its policy of being a newspaper and not a shrew, and is content to let Plainfield's purifier work out his own self-purification or condemnation as he chooses.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Herbert E. Clark has passed the crisis and is improving.

Mrs. James H. Kenyon of Kensington, who has been very ill, is convalescing.

Miss Caroline Reinhart of Netherwood will give a "private luncheon" Thursday, December 20.

William West who has been visiting his cousins, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Garretson of East Fifth street, will sail for England Saturday.

Mrs. H. B. Zimmerman of Martinsville returned home today after a pleasant visit with Mr. and Mrs. Firman Long of North Plainfield.

William Turner, who for two years has been a faithful attache of Reynolds's Pharmacy, contemplates engaging in business in the West.

Past Master Benj. R. Western of Stella Lodge, F. and A. M., of Brooklyn, a resident of Washington Park, was a guest of J. E. Turrill of Anchor Lodge Tuesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest R. Ackerman returned from Europe yesterday by the steamship Teutonic. During their absence their home has been greatly improved in exterior and interior decorations.

Their Bluff Did n't Work.

A very interesting game was bowled at the Lyceum alleys last evening between the C. Y. M. L. and the Orange Valleys, who plowed 15 miles through the deep mud in barges only to meet defeat. A protest on foul in the fourth frame was not allowed by umpire Moran. The C. Y. M. L. desire to extend thanks to the Plainfield Bowling Club for their attendance and the hearty manner in which they rooted for the home team.

Mrs. Mullay's Escape.

An aged woman, named Mrs. Mullay of this city, was a passenger on the 10:27 New York train, this morning. The train was compelled to stop a short distance west of the Elizabeth station, to cross over from the outside or south track to the main line, and during the absence of the brakeman to turn the switch, Mrs. Mullay attempted to get off and fell, badly bruising her knees on the stone ballast. Conductor Dan Horton promptly stopped the train, and he and his baggage master assisted Mrs. Mullay to her feet and put her aboard the train again. It was a very narrow escape for the old lady.

Mr, Ira P. Wetmore, a prominent real estate agent of San Angelo, Texas, has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in his family for several years as occasion required, and always with perfect success. He says: "I find it a perfect cure for our baby when troubled with colic or dysentery. I now feel that my outfit is not complete without a bottle of this Remedy at home or on a trip away from home. For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

NINETY-FIVE

Bold Burglars.

Burglars entered the office of P. J. Staats' Bound Brook Steam Mills, opposite the depot, early this morning and blew open the safe. The shock of the explosion stopped the office clock at 2,30 a. m. There was no money in the safe, but the men walked off with a check for $78 90, payment of which was at once stopped.

Several overcoats, blankets and harnesses, hanging in the office, were unmolested. The condition of the safe indicates the work of experts, undoubtedly from New York. No clue has as yet been found.

Old People.

Old people who require medicine to regulate the bowels and kidneys will find the true remedy in Electric Bitters. This medicine does not stimulate and contains no whiskey nor other intoxicant, but acts as a tonic and alterative. It acts mildly on the stomach and bowels, adding strength and giving tone the organs, thereby aiding nature in the performance of the functions. Electric Bitters is an excellent appetizer and aids digestion. Old people find it just exactly what they need. Price fifty cents per bottle at L. W. Randolph s Drug store.

—The Park Club defeated the Newark Whist Club last night 36 to 23. The Newark boys are royal good fellows, but were a little surprised at the outcome of the game. The score: Rogers and Howell 10, against Obrig and Williams 8; Drayton and Reed 14, against Smith and Reynolds 9; McCutchen and Townsend 12, against McKenzie and Lewis 6.

Commencing Monday, Manager Mills of the U. S. Express Company will keep his office open evenings until 10, to accommodate those sending Christmas presents.

The William Phillips Tilden Guild, of All Souls' Church, was organized in the Sunday-school room of the church, last evening, "to increase the spiritual life of its members, to promote the social life of the church; and to assist the pastor in its work." The Guild has already thirty names on the roll, and the following officers were chosen:

Warden—Rev. Hobart Clark.
Clerk—Mr. Arthur P. Kerr.
Treasurer—Miss Mary Buckle
Members of Council—Miss Caroline Barber, Miss Ellen Osgood, Mr. Edgar H. Mumford, Mr. Henry C. Wells.

Anyone who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cents bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. REMARKABLE CURES

Of Recent Date.

A Statement from Ex-Mayor John Corson, Esq., of Clinton, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

I acknowledge with the utmost pleasure the wonderful cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in my case.

I had been a sufferer from piles, which gave me constant pain and distress, during twenty long years, attended with frequent loss of blood and with great and painful protrusion of the pile tumors and rectum whenever my bowels moved.

I tried constantly to get relief from my sufferings, but to no purpose until Mr. Bryan, a friend of mine, who had been cured by Dr. Lighthill of the same trouble, recommended him to me, and he effected a complete and radical cure in my case also, and earned my lifelong gratitude.

JOHN CORSON.

THE CASE OF MR PETER G. EYCK, OF BISSELL, HUNTERDON CO., N. J.

Dr. Lighthill Effects a Complete Cure Where Ten Physicians Had Failed.

TO THE SICK, SUFFERING AND AFFLICTED:

For many years past I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. Every movement of the bowels was attended with loss of blood and with intense pain which lasted for hours and sometimes all day. My condition was aggravated by a prolapse of the rectum, which greatly increased my suffering and sometimes gave me most agonizing pains.

So great was my distress and so bad my condition that I sold my farm, not being able to work it any longer. At one time the protruding pile tumors became so highly inflamed and swollen that they could not be replaced, and I had to go to bed, applying hot poultices for three months before I could get relief.

I had been under the treatment of ten different physicians, some of New York City, Easton, Washington and elsewhere, without any benefit whatever, and had given up my case as hopeless when, luckily for me, I heard of Dr. Lighthill's skill and success in such cases, and went to him for treatment, with the happy result that he effected a radical and permanent cure in less than four weeks's time; and I am glad to say that the entire treatment gave me neither pain nor distress.

I consider my cure perfectly wonderful, and so do all my friends and neighbors. I am confident that there is no case of piles which Dr. Lighthill cannot cure.

PETER G. EYCK,
Bissell, Hunterdon Co., N. J.

METROPOLITAN NOTES.

Interesting Facts and Opinions Chronicled by the Daily Press of New York.

The examination of witnesses before the Lexow Senatorial Investigating Committee continues to be highly entertaining. Here is a gem:

Question by Mr. Goff to Mr. Andrews, Street Commissioner, who had asked to go upon the stand to vindicate himself of the charges of other witnesses: How many promissory notes of yours did the brewers of New York hold while you were Excise Commissioner? A.—I don't know of any.

Mr. Goff then worked the old familiar bluff of pretending to have the documents he was inquiring about in his possession, and worked as usual with entire success. "Will you swear?" he roared, fumbling over some papers with the aid of young Mr. Jerome.

The witness—I recollect that Jacob Ruppert loaned me some money on a note.

Q. (returning the papers)—I thought so. How much? A.—$3,000.

Q.—Where did you get bills to deposit if you were not in business? A.—I can't say.

Q.—Did you get them from contractors who have contracts with the Street Cleaning Department? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Where, I insist? A.—I have told you I can't tell.

Q.—Would it tend to disgrace, or degrade, or convict you of a crime? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Then you must tell. A (after a long pause).—Well, I borrowed from Senator George Plunkitt.

Q.—But Senator Plunkitt has contracts with your department? A.—He has had for many years a contract to furnish scows.

Q.—And how many stables do you rent for your department horses? A.—Nine.

Mr. Goff (reading from a paper)—And Senator George Plunkitt owns five of them.

It was shown that for some of the barns rented from Senator Plunkitt the city pays as high as $5,500 a year.

Senator Lexow (to the witness)—Do you think it was a delicate and proper thing for you to do to incur such an indebtedness to Senator Plunkitt, who has such relations to your department? A.—Perhaps it was not.

Q. by Mr. Goff.—Have you ever paid poor old Topyteynji the money you cheated him out of? A.—I never cheated him out of any money.

Q.—But he has begun an action against you? A.—His daughter has.

Q.—He was an old soldier of the war and a friend of yours at that time? A.—Yes, and I supported him for two years while I was getting him his pension.

Q.—And when he asked you for the money you put in a counter claim for your services? A.—I paid him money as he required it.

Q.—By the way, that decoration on your breast is the Order of the Loyal Legion, is it not? A.—Yes, sir.

Mr. Goff—Well, I guess that will do for to-day then.

Mrs. Grannis of Twenty-second street, who is going to reform the low bodices of fashionable women, is still opposed to Lady Henry Somerset, who is going to reform the living pictures. The whole Grannis crusade recalls the extraordinary amount of energy which was wasted for upward of half a century on the question of corsets for women. The crusade was carried on with a degree of vigor not even approached by the present attack on low evening gowns, and yet to-day girls of twelve or fourteen years wear corsets, and women do not even discuss the question of their propriety. Lady Henry, who is at present directing everything of importance, as far as women are concerned, in Boston, has been made the laughing stock of London by Jerome K. Jerome. The humorist discovered that while Lady Henry was denouncing every form of social evil in London she was drawing rentals from some of her East End houses which were inhabited by feminine persons who were no better than they should be. On top of this Mr. Jerome has just discovered that Lady Henry has a lot of hop kilns on her farm, and that she receives a large income from their operation. As every one knows, hop kilns are used for the manufacture of alcoholic liquors, and Mr. Jerome is now pointing out that Lady Henry derives a revenue from the sale of alcoholic beverages, while rigorously denouncing the traffic in connection with the Women's Christian Temperance Union.—N. Y. Sun.

A Story of the Late Jumbo.

The intelligence of the elephant has been the subject of many anecdotes, both by travellers who have met him in his native land and also by people who have seen him in servitude. We all remember how Jumbo endeared himself to the people of this country by his gentle and friendly disposition. Many times I have enjoyed a ride on his back in the days of my youth, when he was at the London Zoological Gardens, and I remember one incident which gave evidence of his keen sense of humor.

Jumbo was carrying his load of children, tramping along his regular path with stately tread, swinging his great trunk leisurely from side to side, when he approached a countryman who was standing at the side of the path, gazing with eyes and mouth wide open at some animal in a cage close by. His right arm encircled a huge bag of buns, which he had just bought for the purpose of feeding the animals. As Jumbo passed this man, who was too much absorbed in the object of his gaze to hear him approach, he gently lifted his trunk over the man's shoulder and took the bag of buns, which he immediately devoured, bag and all, and enjoyed the joke as much as he did the buns. Everybody laughed and Jumbo's eyes twinkled with joy.—Congregationalist.

Young Hopeful—Did you say Thomas or Tom?

His Sister—He said Thomas.

Young Hopeful (seriously)—Then I guess I'd better go and see what he wants.

Dick—Positive. She said she would rather have me save my money than buy her a Christmas present.—Harlem Life.

DRAMA AND OPERA.

MISS REHAN IS JUST NOW PLAYING SHAKESPEAREAN ROLES.

Later She Will do the Provinces. "Adonis" Dixey is Playing "Malvolio" in Twelfth Night. Mr. Frohman Gratifies Innumerable Aspirants in a Bunch.

Ada Rehan is going upon the road. Ada is not handsome but she is a good actress, and has been obscured from American public gaze for a year or two, during which time she has played in London, and left us to be consoled by an effigy of herself in cold metal, which has been traversing the States as an advertisement for enterprising dry goods houses. The Montana statue of silver has retired now that the model is here. "Twelfth Night" was staged at Daly's Metropolitan Theatre, Feb. 22, 1893, and was extremely successful. Since then London and its bigwigs set the seal of their approval upon the Daly production and now it is back for a temporary run.

"Twelfth Night" never had a more lovely or poetic setting. The exquisite scenery was never gaudy, but the coloring was a feast to the eye, and every detail was the perfection of good taste. The sea coast of Illyria, the Duke's palace, Olivia's house, and Olivia's garden by the lake, gave pleasure to every lover of art, and the musical features were as delightful as ever. It is no use saying that Shakespeare needs no such sumptuous setting; that the Bard of Avon speaks for himself. People read their Shakespeares to-day and stay away from the theatres that interprets the works of the master, unless the play be presented with a lavish beauty like that which characterizes this "Twelfth Night." Miss Rehan was enthusiastically welcomed when she made her appearance on the stage as Viola. Her art has not changed; her methods are the same as of yore; her voice is as musical, her presence as magnetic. The Chicagoan who dubbed her "the chrysanthemum of dramatic art" was not wrong. James Lewis was the Sir Toby Belch: Miss Carlisle, Olivia; Miss Percy Haswell, Maria; Herbert Gresham, Aguecheek; Mr. Carlisle, Orsino, and Henry E. Dixey, Malvolio.

Mr. Charles Frohman hit upon a novel plan of satisfying the importunities of a number of friends when he produced "The Masqueraders." Nearly all the theatrical managers have innumerable applications from acquaintances and friends who wish to put aspiring young women on the stage. In New York the opportunity to act in a first-class theatre is almost entirely a question of influence with the manager. There are no conservatories or schools from which young women are regularly graduated to the stage, and the difficulty is to secure the ear of a manager and force him to set aside some tried and experienced actress in favor of a newcomer. Dramatic aspirants who have been recommended by prominent personages, from Senators of the United States to Police Commissioners in Mulberry Street, have been on Mr. Frohman's list for two years. In "The Masqueraders" are a number of scenes which call for the appearance of women who are supposed to be of high social position. Instead of hiring "supers" for these parts Mr. Frohman bunched all the dramatic aspirants and sent them on the stage to serve as a background for the play. Many of the girls are from prominent families socially in Louisville, Chicago, Washington, Cincinnati and other cities, and they have all been accustomed to well to do surroundings and know how to wear good clothes. An astonishing amount of money was expended on their costumes, and the result is altogether unusual and thoroughly successful. Besides, they are all on the stage at last.

The movement against indecent posters and photographs advertising nude actresses is extending from city to city, and the managers of such shows find that their abominable but costly pictures are often prohibited by the authorities. Every self-respecting person connected with theatricals will rejoice in the success of this crusade.

Much attention is commanded, naturally, by the new plays of the week "The Masqueraders" at the Empire, "To Nemesis" at the Star, and "The Cotton King" at the Academy of Music, but the older pieces are doing well too. These continuances are "Too Much Johnson" at the Standard, "The Manxman" at the American, "Prince Ananias" at the Broadway, "Rob Roy" at the Herald Square "The Flams" at the Bijou, "The New Woman" at Palmer's, "Twelfth Night" at Daly's, "A Woman's Silence" at the Lyceum, "Jacinta" at the Fifth Avenue, "A Milk White Flag" at Hoyt's, "Little Christopher" at the Garden, and "The Brownies" at the Fourteenth Street Theatre.

This Was Sworn Testimony.

What makes the story good is that it is true. A lawsuit involving a barge had been brought. The plaintiff aimed to prove that the barge was so constructed that when it was launched the middle sank nearly five feet deeper than the ends.

They depended a good deal on a colored man, who can be known as Charlie because that was his name. Charlie was known to have said on a certain day that the barge had sunk a full five feet. Indeed, he admitted as much to the lawyer for the plaintiff. At the trial this was the way the questions and answers were put:

"Charlie, how did the barge set on the water when it was launched?"

"Set like a duck, Jedge; jest like a duck."

"But didn't you say on the 17th of last June that the barge had sunk fully five feet?"

"I mout hev, Jedge; I mout hev."

"Well, how does it happen, Charlie, that on the 17th of June last the barge sunk fully five feet and now you say the barge floated like a duck?"

"Well, you see, Jedge, on the 17th of June 'er I was jes' a-talkin', but now I'se a-swearin', Jedge; now I's a-swearin'."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

TO LOOK NICE.

ALL WOMEN DESIRE IT.

Some Points About How to Accomplish the Desired End.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

It is the most natural wish in life with women — to feel well and look nice.

It is born with them.

It makes a world of difference to the wee little girl whether or no there is a bit of pretty lace or bright ribbon about her dress or on her hat.

Yes! All women like to look nice. All watch for the least signs of fading.

You have seen beautiful ladies, and been amazed to know that they have lived fifty or sixty years of life.

Have you ever stopped to ask why the few look so lovely while the many around you are so haggard?

Look into it, and you will soon find them blessed with a perfect and healthy organism.

Above all, you will find that no female complaints have seared their lives; no dreadful backache, no irregular periods, no bearing down, or any kind of uterus, ovarian, or womb trouble.

You are not like them now, but you may reach their high level if you will.

You suffer, but there is a remedy.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the grandest remedy ever discovered for women. It restores the womb and all irregularities to their natural healthy condition, and makes possible a lovely old age. It cures every form of female complaint, from leucorrhœa to tumors in the womb.

MORE WAR AND FAMINE

Peru Is in the Throes of Another Revolution.

Advices from That Country by Steamships Tell of Fierce Fighting and Great Hunger in the Large Cities—Defeats of Government Troops—Sentiment Favors the Rebels.

New York, Dec. 13.—Peru is again in the throes of a revolution, which threatens to completely impovish the country and cause an overthrow of the present government. Whole regiments of troops are deserting President Caceres to join the Montaniros, and a famine is near in several of the larger cities.

The news came by steamer Allianca from Colon, which brought word that the Pacific Steam Navigation company's steamer Puno was boarded at Ilo and Pisco in Peru by order of the Peruvian government and a search made for arms, there were supposed to be on board, consigned to the Montaniros or rebel party.

Fighting had occurred at Pisco, and President Caceres' forces had been defeated and driven into the city which was barricaded with cotton bales.

The city of Cirro Azul was in the hands of the Montaniros. An incident in the war occurred at this point when a steamer with rebel prisoners in charge of government troops came into the port.

A lighter loaded with concealed rebels came alongside and they swarmed up the sides of the steamer, overcame the guards and liberated the prisoners.

At Lima, the Oroya railroad was in the hands of the insurgents under General Pierolas and the only railroad running was that between Lima and Callao.

The government fitted up a train with gatling guns, and put two thousand soldiers upon it, with the intention of making an attack on the Montaniros. But when the train neared the headquarters of the latter, 1,500 of the 2,000 soldiers deserted and the train returned without a blow having been struck.

The condition of the government troops is said to be deplorable, while the Montaniros are well armed, clothed and fed. Discontent is rife on the government side as the soldiers have had no pay for several months.

There is great suffering and poverty at both Lima and Callao. Food is scarce and of poor quality. Many of the foreign merchants have closed their business places and moved to other cities.

At Callao there was a mutiny among the marines on one of the government hulks but it was suppressed by mooring the hulk between two war vessels and training the guns on her.

General Pierolas is at present near Lima, the capital, with a numerous army. According to the news now received the popular feeling is against President Caceres and his government and with Pieroles and his rebel Montaniros.

State Grange Patrons Meet.

Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 13.—At the session of the state grange patrons of husbandry, reports were received from various state officials and referred to the proper committees. It was found necessary to remove to the opera house, the hall where the last sessions were held being too small. Worthy Master Rhone announced his standing committees. Superintendent of public instruction Schaeffer and Alexander J. Woddeburn, master of the Virginia state grange, made addresses.

Kurds Are Human Wolves.

London, Dec. 13.—An Odessa correspondent says: "Several Russian journals urge that the only satisfactory treatment of Armenia will be to detach it from Turkish rule and make it autonomous under the united protection of the signatory powers of the Berlin treaty. They say that Russia would make short work of the Kurds, who are a horde of human wolves and ought to be exterminated or reduced to absolute subjection."

Football in Bare Legs.

London, Dec. 13.—Ten thousand people assembled at the Queen's club, Kensington, in order to witness the annual football game, Rugby rules, between teams representing the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. The result was a draw. The men wore light jerseys and thin knickerbockers. Their knees were bare.

GREAT INSURANCE SWINDLE.

Recent Sensational Developments in the Catherine Ging Murder.

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 13.—Evidence is now well in hand to the effect that Harry Hayward was the local member of an insurance swindling gang whose operations extended over the country.

The police are looking for at least three other men who are wanted in connection with the murder of Catharine Ging. A detective working on the case has discovered that the method of this gang was to secure life insurance on persons who could be induced to take out large policies on the representation that money could be borrowed on them.

It would be plainly demonstrated to the insured that a profitable business could be carried on in this way.

The plan to murder Catherine was developed by four members of the gang, of whom Hayward was one.

The insurance on Miss Ging's life is now said to have been $25,000 instead of $10,000.

PREACHER AND THIEF.

A Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde on Trial for Stealing Cattle.

Springfield, Ill., Dec. 13.—John McCauley, who has been on trial on a charge of stealing sixteen head of cattle from Farmer Scroggin, near Harrisburg, on the witness stand gave his life history. According to his story he has stolen hundreds of head of horses in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Texas and Mexico.

During the winter season, when not stealing horses, he says he puts in his time preaching and holding revival services, and was the instrument of winning many souls to Christ. He claims that he never stole a horse except from some man who owed him. Counsel interposed insanity as a defense.

JAPANESE TROOPS LANDED.

The Final March to Pekin Is Now Only a Question of Time.

London, Dec. 13.—A dispatch from Hiroshima says a detachment of the Japanese second army occupied Foo-Chow on Dec. 5 without meeting any opposition. The Chinese garrison at Foo-Chow, 5,000 strong, retreated to New Chwang.

A dispatch from Tien-Tsin says that 25,000 Japanese troops have arrived at Shan-Hai-Kwan.

The Chinese soldiers at Wei-Hai-Wei declare that they will leave that place immediately upon the appearance of the Japanese.

PRINCE TECK HAS WED

Married in Superb Style to Lady Grosvenor.

The Greatest Social Event of the Season in England Is Celebrated at Chester—Queen Victoria's Royal Gift to the Bride—Magnificent Scenes at the Ceremony.

Chester, Eng., Dec. 13.—All England has its eyes turned toward Chester. The great social event of the year—the marriage of Prince Adolphus of Teck to Lady Margaret Grosvenor—took place in the private chapel of Eton Hall, one of the finest of all the stately homes in England.

The ceremony was conducted by the Rev. G. A. Robins, vicar of Eccleston, Chester; the Rev. Canon Morris, chaplain of the Duke of Westminster, and the Hon. and Rev. E. Carr-Glyn, whose wife, Lady Mary Carr-Glyn, is a first cousin of the bride.

The bride entered the chapel on the arm of her father, the Duke of Westminster. She was attended by six bridesmaids, all chosen from her own family. They were her half sisters Lady Mary Grosvenor, aged eleven, and Lady Helen Grosvenor, aged six, and her four nieces, Lady Constance Grosvenor, daughter of the Earl and Countess Grosvenor; Lady Millicent Grosvenor, daughter of Lord Henry Grosvenor; Lady Beatrice Butler, daughter of the Marquis and Marchioness of Ormonde, and the Hon. Lilah Cavendish, daughter of Lord and Lady Chesham.

Lady Margaret wore a splendid white satin gown and Brussels lace. The bridemaids were dressed in white thick-corded, glace ondine silk, which had a very rich appearance.

Their dresses had pointed vests of white plaited chiffon, lost beneath girdles of pale sky-blue velvet. The vests were bordered down either side with bands of thick cream-colored Italian lace.

Among the presents which were many, was a diamond brooch with a congratulatory letter from Queen Victoria. It is said that the match was one of the queen's making and that she is very much pleased at having married off one of her poor relations to the daughter of the wealthiest peer in England.

Prince Adolphus was born in Kensington Palace, London, in 1868. His elder sister, who was also born there, is Princess Victoria Mary, who was betrothed to the late Duke of Clarence, son of the Prince of Wales. After the death of the duke she married his brother, the Duke of York. Adolphus has two brothers, the Princes Joseph and Alexander, both his juniors.

The Duke of Westminster, it is said, has promised to settle £5,000 per year on the young couple, besides dowering the bride with £100,000 in hard cash. So that Mr. and Mrs. Teck jr., may be able to worry along awhile in comfort.

The Duke of Westminster, besides his bank account, has many titles to contend with. He is the first of his line to hold the ducal title, which was created in 1874. He is also Marquis of Westminster, Earl Grosvenor, Viscount Belgrave, Baron Grosvenor, Baronet of England and Knight of the Garter. His every day name is Hugh Lupus Grosvenor, and he is the son of the second Marquis of Westminster. His mother was a daughter of the first Duke of Sutherland.

He traces his descent direct from Gilbert le Grosvenor, one of the mail-clad brigands who came over to England with William the Conqueror. The bride is good-looking, is an athlete in petticoats and has been a protege of her majesty since her early girlhood.

Will Confer at Ithaca.

Philadelphia, Dec. 13.—Pennsylvania's rowing interests were fully considered at a meeting of past and present university oarsmen, held at the university club. Cornell's reply to Pennsylvania's proposition to send a crew to England to race in the Henley regatta caused a long and earnest discussion, which resulted in a resolution to have a conference at Ithaca sometime this week.

France Declares for War.

London, Dec. 13.—The correspondent of the Times at Berlin telegraphs that M. Le Myre de Vilers, the French special envoy, has declared war against Madagascar, and has started for home.

Marseilles, Dec. 13.—The steamship Trasonaddy is to leave this port with 380 marines and eighty tons of ammunition for Madagascar.

Wrecked by a Tornado.

Forsythe, Ga., Dec. 13.—A terrific tornado reached Forsythe about 3 a. m. Many persons were injured. The Methodist church valued at $18,000, was completely destroyed. The people became panic stricken. Every store in town was unroofed and the contents were deluged with water. Losses will amount to $50,000.

Killed by a Burglar.

Cleveland, O., Dec. 13.—William H. Price, a member of the well-known firm of printing press manufacturers, Chandler & Price, was almost instantly killed by a burglar at his home, 124 Hawthorn avenue, at 2:30 o'clock this morning.

A QUEEN'S PROGENY.

VICTORIA HAS OVER FIFTY DESCENDANTS, ALL DOING WELL.

The New Czarina is the Latest to Wear a Crown, But the Head Gear is Next to the Queen's in Importance. Thrifty Practices of England's Ruler.

With the marriage of Princess Alix of Hesse and Nicholas II., Czar of all the Russians, one more is added to the number of Queen Victoria's crowned descendants. In this case it may safely be said that Her Majesty's granddaughter has captured the greatest of all the prizes in the monarchical matrimonial market. Some of the crowns possessed by the Queen's descendants are not of much importance, but none will belittle that of Russia.

It is probable that the Queen deserves as much credit as anybody for placing her granddaughter in this exhalted station. She is never satisfied until she has put the marriagable members of her family in a position to display the same qualities as herself. Her declining years are now consoled by the knowledge that the two great empires of Russia and Germany have found sovereigns in her grandchildren. This is surely enough to make the widow of Windsor take her nightly allowance of grog in a thankful spirit and to feel that life has been worth living.

But it is the number rather than the rank of the Queen's descendants which is most calculated to arouse our admiration and astonishment. And it is the number probably which causes the Queen herself more satisfation than anything else, in spite of her natural desire to make good matches.

The Queen is the great and shinning example of the domestic woman. Other women may strive hard to distinguish themselves in other ways, but they will not gain as much fame as she. Queen Victoria is the best known woman in the world. That fact is not entirely due to her domestic virtues, but few of the countless millions who know of her have not heard of those virtues also.

Fortune was kind to the Queen, and she showed herself grateful. Being placed in the most favorable circumstances for rearing a large family, she provided that family. With ordinary people it is those who are least fortunately placed who have the largest families. She has done everything a good mother could be expected to do for her children. She brought them up to respect herself, to go to church regularly and to follow her own example in every possible way. If she could not secure crowns for them she provided them with easy, remunerative situatians in the British public service. She has never shown any selfish fear of unpleasant consequences when it has been necessary to ask the nation to contribute to the support of her children or their descendants.

The British royal family costs the nation, according to Whitaker's Almanac, £579,582. or more than $2,887,000, in annuities. This sum, of course, does not include the salaries paid to royal persons as holders of public offices or the income of what is considered private property, which, in the case of the Queen and the Prince of Wales, is very large. Royalty is almost as expensive as Tammany Hall.

Not only has she provided for her progeny during her lifetime, but she has saved up a vast sum of money, which will enrich them after her death. Although a firm believer in the blessings of monarchy, she is wise enough to know that it is a good thing for royal persons to have money investments in various parts of the world. So plentiful is Her Majesty's supply of wisdom that all her children have inherited some of it, and even the frivolous Prince of Wales has exercised as much wisdom as is possible in his unwise pursuits.

Queen Victoria has fifty-six living descendants. That constitutes her great claim to our admiration. Seventeen of them are great-grandchildren. The number of these is almost momentarily increasing. At the age of seventy-five, with all her mental faculties in good working order and a fair share of physical vigor, she is still able to take a leading part in managing the affairs of this vast family.

In providing such an abundance of possible successors to the throne Queen Victoria has followed the example of her grandparent, George III. But in many ways she has been far more fortunate than he was. The King had fifteen children, and she has only had nine. But many of his children died without issue and several in infancy. On the other hand, every one of the Queen's nine children has reached maturity and only one has had no children. With the exception of the Duke of Albany, moreover, all have been strong and sound. Such a family is rare in the vital statistics of any country.

The Queen's father, the Duke of Kent, was the fourth son and fifth child of George III. Two of his brothers successively occupied the throne as George IV. and William IV. He himself died before any of his three elder brothers.

His daughter, the Princess Victoria, was born on May 24, 1819, and succeeded to the throne on June 20, 1837. She married her cousin, Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, on Feb. 10, 1840. The Prince died on Dec. 14, 1861. This was the great sorrow of the Queen's life and her grief at her husband's death has persisted in spite of years.

A Christian Warrior.

Gen. O. O. Howard has retired from the United States Army, but not from the army of the Lord. He has made as good a soldier for the God of battle as he has for Uncle Sam. There is hardly a nobler example of Christian heroism in America to-day than Gen. Howard. Leaving every Sunday his post at Governor's Island as Commander of the Eastern Division of the Army of the Republic, he would cross over to New York, make his way up to a dingy little building on dirty Elizabeth street, climb a flight of stairs and teach a Sunday school class of a dozen gamins from the gutter. Throughout his entire brilliant military career he has been a good Christian, and is aptly called "the Havelock of America." His genial presence and gracious influence will be sadly missed in this region.

One of the Disadvantages.

Maud—They ought not allow marriages between cousins.

Marie—Why not?

Maude—Because if you marry your cousin your own children are scarcely related to you. They are only your second cousins.—American Hebrew

LAND ON YOUR FEET.

You take a cat up by by the tail
And whirl him round and round,
And hurl him out into the air,
Out into space profound;
He through the yielding atmosphere
Will many whirls complete,
But when he strikes upon the ground
He'll land upon his feet.

Fate takes a man, just like a cat,
And, with more force than grace,
It whirls him wriggling round and round
And hurls him into space.
And those who fall upon the back
Or land upon the head,
Fate lets them lie there where they fall—
They're just as good as dead.

But some there be that, like the cat,
Whirl round and round and round,
And go gyrating off through space,
Until they strike the ground;
But when at last the ground and they
Do really come to meet,
You'll always find them right side up—
They land upon their feet.

And such a man walks off erect,
Triumphant and elate,
And with a courage in his heart
He shakes his fist at Fate.
Then Fate, with a benignant smile
Upon its face outspread,
Puts forth its soft, caressing hand
And pats him on the head.

And he's Fate's darling from that day,
His triumph is complete;
Fate loves the man who whirls and whirls
But lands upon his feet.
That man, whate'er his ups and downs,
Is never wholly spurned,
Whose perpendicularity
Is never overturned. N. Y. World.

LOVE HIM, LOVE HIS DOG.

A Tramp Refuses the Shelter His Canine Friend Can't Share.

During the hard snap, an ill-clad, half starved looking fellow, accompanied by a meek confiding looking cur, stepped into a police station, says the Pittsburg Commercial Gazette. As he closed the door behind him he took off his dilapidated cap and saluted the officer in charge. The latter in raspy tones asked him what he wanted.

"Scab an' me wants a place to sleep," the tramp replied diffidently.

"All right; get downstairs, quick."

The face of the wayfarer brightened. "My nams is Dick Dunn," he said, "and I'm dead broke, and it's mighty good in you in giving us a place to sleep."

As he spoke he stooped down and picked up the bob-tailed dog. At the same moment the sergeant caught sight of the cur.

"What are you going to do with that dog?" he asked.

"Well, Scab needs a night's shelter just as much as I do."

"We can't house dogs, said the sergeant, decidedly. "You can stay, but you'll have to throw the cur out."

"Why, say, cap," he said. "Scab's been my friend fur five years, and he walked all the way with me. You wouldn't have me give him the go-by now would you?"

"I'm sorry, responded the sergeant, "but we can't have any dogs in the station."

Dunn looked down at the dog and gently patted its head.

"It's a cold night, Scab," he said, "a mighty cold night, but where I go you go, too; and if the police won't have you in the station they won't have me either. We'll walk the streets all night before we part company."

The dog seemed to comprehend and gave a low bark, and without another word the man and the cur went out. Efforts to get shelter for himself and dog at other stations failed, and they spent the night in the streets.

TO PRACTICE VENTRILOQUISM.

A Few Simple Rules Given Beginners by an Expert.

Mr. C. A. Hartley says: Ventriloquism, I believe, may be acquired after a time by thorough practice. There are many uses to which it may be put. I have often placed a subject so completely under my control that you would think him no less subservient were he under a mesmeric spell. This is done by making the victim believe he is communing with the departed.

"Ventiloquism is to the ear as perspective is to the eye." So a writer expresses it, and aptly. There is no such thing as throwing the voice. What appears to be the throwing of the voice is nothing more or less than a modulation of the voice to such a tone as is consistent with that sound which issues from a given point.

A few general hints are given below as to how ventriloquism may be acquired. If the student will devote himself to the instruction as given, he will, in time, be able to master at least one or perhaps several of the voices described.

The distant voice—Fix the jaws rigid and hold the tongue at the roof of the mouth, as if making an effort to roll it into a ball. The sound must be given by straining it through the larnyx, or, as it were, contracting the extrinsic muscles of the larnyx. These muscles are sensitive, and when first irritated the learner will be compelled to cough frequently. This passes away after continued practice.

The voice from the cellar—Speak in a falsetto tone, modulating it by holding the jaws firmly together. As you stand in profile before an audience, that side of the mouth not in view may be partially opened to emit the sound. This may be rendered doubly effective by using an imaginary or an improvised trap door.

The child in the closet—Close the mouth entirely. The sound should issue from the nose. Articulation is acquired by practice, But few words can be used with this voice, and no word beginning with p, b or m. A hat may be used and the effect will be in no way impaired.

The singing mosquitto—The distant voice, varied by simply humming. It produces a most humorous effect on the stage when the mosquitto is supposedly killed by a smart slap on the cheek.

The dog in the distance.—The same voice varied by barking in the hands while the latter are held together closed. This is very easily accomplished. The effect is pleasing.

The opening of a bottle, the hissing of a sky rocket, the shrieking of a steamboat whistle, the picking of a banjo, the playing of a flute or a violin, the mewing of a cat, the bleating of a lamb, the neighing of a horse, the gobble gobble of a turkey, the cackle of a hen, the sawing of wood, are a class of polyphonic accomplishments not difficult to attain, excepting, perhaps the imitation of musical instruments. Studious application is necessary.

Palmer Cox's Queer People

Racing on a Bicycle.

The thousand and one pranks, comic adventures and mischievous escapades that Palmer Cox, in his flights of imagination, takes his Queer People through are wonderful in their variety, and most charming in their likeness to the exuberant fancies of childhood; and yet, in every thrilling story of adventure and exciting incident, the sweet sunshine of kindness is always present, and, while captivated with the fun, unconsciously the heart of youth is inspired with pure and good inpulses. Of all the Juvenile Books yet issued, there is more rollicking, jolly fun in one of these eight books than in any dozen others we ever saw.

Still, it was a glorious death, in the direct service of the emperor, and I reflected that there could not be less than five lines and perhaps seven in the Moniteur about me. Palaret had eight lines and I am sure that he had not so fine a career.

When I made my way out into the hall, with all the nonchalance in my face and manner that I could assume, the very first thing that I saw was Bouvet's dead body with his knees drawn up and a broken sword in his hand. I could see by the black smudge that he had been shot at close quarters. I should have wished to salute as I went by, for he was a gallant man, but I feared lest I should be seen, and so I passed on.

The front of the hall was full of Prussian infantry, who were knocking loopholes in the wall, as though they expected that there might yet be another attack. Their officer, a little rat of a man, was running about giving directions. They were all too busy to take much notice of me, but another officer who was standing by the door with a long pipe in his mouth, strode across and clapped me on the shoulder, pointing to the dead bodies of our poor hussars and saying something that was meant for a jest, for his big beard opened and showed every fang in his head. I laughed heartily, also, and said the only Russian words that I know. I learned them from little Sophy at Wilna, and they meant: "If the night is fine we shall meet under the oak tree, and if it rains we shall meet in the byre." It was all the same to this German, however, and I have no doubt that he gave me credit for saying something very witty indeed, for he roared laughing and slapped me on my shoulder again. I nodded to him and marched out of the hall door as coolly as if I were the commandant of the garrison. There were a hundred horses tethered about outside, most of them belonging to the Poles and hussars. Good little Violette was waiting with the others, and she whinnied when she saw me coming towards her. But I would not mount her. No, I was much too cunning for that. On the contrary, I chose the most shaggy little Cossack horse that I could see, and I sprang upon it with as much assurance as though it had belonged to my father before me. It had a great bag of plunder slung over its neck, and this I laid upon Violette's back and led her along beside me. Never have you seen such a picture of the Cossack returning from the foray. It was superb.

Well, the town was full of Prussians by this time. They lined the sidewalks and pointed me out to each other, saying, as I could judge by their gestures: "There goes one of those devils of Cossacks. They are the boys for foraging and plunder." One of two officers spoke to me, with an air of authority, but I shook my head and smiled, and said: "If the night is fine we shall meet under the oak tree, but if it rains we shall meet in the byre." At which they shrugged their shoulders and gave the matter up. In this way I worked along until I was beyond the northern outskirt of the town. I could see in the roadway two lancer vedettes, with their black and white pennons, and I knew that when I was once past these I should be a free man once more. I made my pony trot, therefore, Violette rubbing her nose against my knee all the time, and looking up at me to ask how she had deserved that this doormat of a creature should be preferred to her. I was not more than a hundred yards from the Uhlans, when suddenly you can imagine my feelings when I saw a real Cossack coming galloping along the roadway towards me.

Ah, my friend, you who read this, if you have any heart, you will feel for a man like me, who had gone through so many dangers and trials only at this very last moment to be confronted with [illegible] which appeared to put an end to everything. I will confess that for a moment I lost heart and was inclined to throw myself down in my despair, and to cry out that I had been betrayed. But no, I was not beaten even now. I opened two buttons of my tunic so that I might get easily at the emperor's message, for it was my fixed determination, when all hope was gone, to swallow the letter and then die sword in hand. Then I felt that my little crooked sword was loose in its sheath and I trotted on to where the vedettes were waiting. They seemed inclined to stop me but I pointed to the other Cossack, who was still a couple of hundred yards off, and they, understanding that I merely wished to meet him, let me pass with a salute.

I dug my spurs into my pony then, for if I were only far enough from the lancers I thought I might manage the Cossack without much difficulty. He was an officer, a large bearded man with a gold chevron in his cap just the same as mine. As I advanced he unconsciously aided me by pulling up his horse, so that I had a fine start of the vedettes. On I came for him and I could see wonder turning to suspicion in his brown eyes as he looked at me and my pony equipment. I do not know what it was that was wrong, but he saw something which was as it should not be. He shouted out a question, and then, when I gave no answer, he pulled out his sword. I was glad in my heart to see him do so, for I had always rather fight than cut down an unsuspecting enemy. Now I made at him full tilt and, parrying his cut, I got my point in just under the fourth button of his tunic. Down he went, and the weight of him nearly took me off my horse before I could disengage. I never glanced at him to see if he were living or dead, for I sprang off my pony and on to Violette, with a shake of my bridle and a kiss of my hand to the two Uhlans behind me. They galloped after me shouting, but Violette had had her rest and was just as fresh as when she started.

I took the first side road to the west, and the first to the south, which would take me away from the enemy's country. On we went, and on, every stride taking me further from my foes and nearer to my friends. At last I reached the end of a long stretch of road, and looking back from it could see no signs of pursuers. I understood that my troubles were at last over.
